Mr. President, from one end of the country to the other, wherever evidence has been developed as to a violation of the criminal laws of our country, cases based on that evidence have been skillfully, efficiently, and diligently prosecuted. If any Senator or anyone else in the United States has evidence of subversion against the Government, if he will take the evidence to the FBI, that great organization will investigate the evidence, will present it to the prosecuting attorneys, the prosecutors will present the evidence in court, and if the accused person is guilty he will be found guilty and sent to jail.

Mr. President, I have sent to the Justice Department for a complete list of prosecutions during the past 3 or 4 years of persons who have tried to infiltrate the Government of the United States.

Of course the Soviet is trying to infiltrate the Government. That is a part of their fifth-column activities. That is the way they work. No one is more cognizant of that fact than is the Senator from Connecticut. Mr. President, it was Harry Truman who sensed this thing in 1947. It was under his direction, and not under the direction of Members of either House, who drew up the program to ferret out the Communists. That program has cost probably ten or twelve million dollars. The President waited 5 months during the Eightieth Congress for funds with which to start the program. Mr. President, no Member of this body has been more aware of the character of the struggle in which we are engaged in the world today than has the Senator from Connecticut. No one on this side of the aisle or on the other side of the aisle has stood up more often to point out the threat that Stalin and his associates hold for this great democracy than has the Senator from Connecticut. However, I have not been satisfied with recitations of the threat. The Senator from Connecticut has specified a program to meet it. Those who are now shouting the loudest about communism would leave the floor of the Senate in 1947 because they were not interested in hearing the subject discussed.

I know, Mr. President, that one way not to conduct ourselves is to destroy rights which are given to the individual citizen under our Bill of Rights. When Harry Truman was faced with this program, what did he do? He established so-called loyalty boards. Of whom were they composed? They were composed of American citizens. I see before me the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], who in a meeting downstairs only a few months ago testified fully as to the integrity, ability, and patriotism of the chairman of the Loyalty Board of the Department of State, Gen. Conrad Snow. Our report contains the names of the other American citizens who heard the charges which were leveled against employees of the State Department. In the American way they gave both sides a chance to be heard. They could have acted in another way. When an anonymous tip came to them, or an anonymous informant said to them that such and such a person was not what he should be, they could have let the accusation suffice and cut off the head of the accused. If they had done that we would have created the very thing which we in America hold precious and God-given, and we would have created our own totalitarian-type of proceeding. That is what we refused to do, and we ought to refuse to do it, because when we adopt the practice of accepting accusations without proof, when we do away with hearings, when we do away with giving people a chance to protect their names, then the Kremlin will have won one of its greatest victories.

Mr. President, I shall probably speak again at greater length in the future about the record of the Department of Justice and of the present administration, specifically with regard to those who have been prosecuted and punished. I shall also speak at greater length concerning the responsibility of this body in the matter now being discussed.

Mr. TAFT obtained the floor.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from Michigan, without losing the floor, for a brief statement to reply to the Senator from Connecticut.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator from Michigan may proceed.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question, but he declined to yield, and I shall refer to the matter in my own time.

I desire to refer to the record of an address I made before the Michigan Commercial Secretaries meeting here in Washington, April 26, 1948, in relation to the prosecution of the 11 Communists. I also should like to put into the RECORD a matter that is now in the Appendix, under date of May 5, 1948, relating to what I said about the prosecution of the 11 Communists, being an excerpt from my remarks on that occasion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Another thing in which you are greatly interested, I am sure, is communism in America.

Why are you concerned with it? It is not because you expect that Communists will take over the Government and we will adopt communism as our form of government. We do feel, however, that Communist members or fellow travelers, working in our policymaking departments, affect our Government policies and by sabotage may weaken our Government and affect our national lives.

If we do get into a war with the Soviet Union, then we might expect real and serious trouble through Communists in key positions in American industry and government.

The Nazi fifth column was composed mostly of aliens and people of one nationality. This is not true of the Communists in this country. Many of them are citizens; they are of all nationalities, and often American-born. That is why we have more to fear from them than we did from the bund.

Communism is not a political party. Attorney General Francis Biddle on May 28, 1942, made a finding in the Harry Bridges case that the Communist Party of the United States of America, from the time of its inception in 1919 to the present time, is "an organization which believes in, advises, advocates, and advances the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States."

We can assume that the Attorney General had information in the files of the Department of Justice from which he could make such a finding. He was a lawyer and had been a Federal judge. Therefore, it is to be presumed that he was drawing a conclusion from facts.

If Mr. Biddle's findings were true, it would appear we have a Federal law since 1940, prohibits communism in America.

Section 10, title 18, of the Criminal Code provides it shall be unlawful for any person—

"(1) To knowingly or willfully advocate, abet, advise, or teach the duty, necessity, desirability, or propriety of overthrowing or destroying any government in the United States by force or violence, or by the assassination of any officer of any such government. * * *

(3) To organize or help to organize any society, group, or assembly of persons who teach, advocate, or encourage the overthrow or destruction of any government in the United States by force or violence; or to be or become a member of, or affiliate with, any such society, group, or assembly of persons, knowing the purposes thereof."

Let us assume that the facts Attorney General Biddle had are now in the Attorney General's files. I suggest a test case against the National Secretariat, which consists of 2 members, the 12 members of the National Executive Board, and the 50 members of the National Committee of the Communist Party of the United States.

If such a case were successful, it would have the effect of (a) making the Communist Party in America illegal; (b) it would destroy many of the Communist-front organizations which plague us; (c) those who claim to have innocently joined such an organization would actually see the red flag; (d) it would seriously affect the raising of money in this country by the Communist Party; (e) it would have the effect of forewarning all in America that if they knowingly join, they too, were violating the United States law and could be criminally prosecuted.

Here we have had a law since 1940, we have had evidence in the files of the Attorney General's office since 1942. Why has no action been taken by the Attorney General? Isn't it time for action rather than just for the collection of evidence?

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut is very familiar with the fact that legislators cannot prosecute. But I remember well that I was at another time asked the identical question which was propounded this morning, namely, whether I know of any Communists in the State Department. When we were conducting the hearings on William Remington, whom I previously identified as being under indictment for perjury in having denied to a grand jury that he was or had been a Communist, I was publicly challenged by Mr. Tom Clark, then the Attorney General of the United States:

Name one Communist in the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, I could not name one. I said that if I had the files of the FBI I could in my opinion name one, but, of course, no one can get the FBI files. Mr. Clark defied the committee, or any of us, to name one, but at the very moment when he asked that question he had all the evidence, or practically all of it, on Judith Coplin in his own Department, Judith Coplon, who was then taking secret reports of the FBI on espionage, and giving them to Gubitchev, a Russian agent. Yet he asked the committee the very same question, "Can you name one?" as if the people of the United States would not be familiar with that kind of a tactic.

The Senator from Connecticut has said he has not any doubt in his mind that Communist Russia is trying to penetrate the United States Government for information. I do not believe there is anyone who does not think they are trying to penetrate it. What I want to know is, and what the committee was delegated to find out, was, how far they had penetrated it in the past.

VISIT OF JAPANESE DELEGATION TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me so that I may make a brief announcement of a visit to the Senate of a Japanese delegation now in the United States?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may, without losing the floor, yield to the Senator from New Jersey for the purpose of making an announcement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, it gives me great pleasure to call the attention of the Senate to a most unusual and important opportunity which we in Washington will have the latter part of this week.

The largest and most representative group of Japanese leaders of government, industry, finance, and labor to leave that country since the war will be arriving here on Thursday, July 27; and it has been arranged that we will have the privilege of receiving them in this Chamber on Friday, July 28.

The party of over 50 persons includes 6 members of the Japanese Diet, officially representing the 4 principal parties, headed by the personal representative of the prime minister. There are also seven governors of prefectures, the heads of prefectural assemblies, city councils, and some of the largest industrial and financial organizations in the country, as well as representatives of important labor unions.

I feel particularly impressed and deeply moved by the fact that among the members of this delegation are the mayors of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, as well as the governors of the Hiroshima and Nagasaki prefectures, and the respective presidents of the city councils of these two cities.

It is especially significant that these representatives of the two cities which were the victims of the atomic bombs in the last war are by this trip evidencing their good will and friendliness toward the people of the United States.

These guests of ours are the democratic leaders of millions of Japanese, whose reaction to current developments in Korea, whose understanding of our aims and objectives in the world, and especially in the Far East, and whose continued loyalty to the fundamental freedoms for which our men are fighting alongside other United Nations forces, constitute a vital security factor in our whole position on the other side of the Pacific.

The members of a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee have just been considering a major expansion program for our information services in an effort to reach more effectively and influence the minds of millions all over the world. Members on both sides of the aisle have voiced the need for a moral mobilization, a Marshall plan of ideas, a voice of America which is really strong enough to win the battle for the minds and hearts of men. We are spending many thousands of dollars a year for that purpose in Japan alone. But here in this Chamber this week we are going to have a chance to do first hand what can never be done so effectively over 5,000 miles of ocean. These men can take back to the wide cross section of Japan they represent the conviction and impression of what we are striving to maintain and preserve in the world.

This delegation left Japan 6 weeks ago with the support and approval of General MacArthur and SCAP to attend a special industrial conference at the Moral Re-Armament World Assembly in Caux, Switzerland. They took part with 1,600 delegates from 47 nations.

The Japanese raised the money to pay for their trip through the organizations they represent, supplemented by voluntary contributions from this country.

Since leaving Caux 3 weeks ago this group has been seen and honored by government leaders in the principal capitals of western Europe, and thus began to take their part again in the democratic family of nations. They have been welcomed by the President of Switzerland, by Chancelor Adenauer, and High Commissioner McCloy in Germany, and at official receptions by members of the German Cabinet and by the Upper and Lower Houses of the Bonn Parliament. Some of the party flew into Berlin at the invitation of the mayor, and were also received by the mayors of Hamburg, Bremen, Essen, and Cologne. Catholic members of the delegation had a special audience with the Pope in Rome.

In Paris they were officially greeted by the Foreign Office at the Quai d'Orsay and by members of the French Cabinet. After flying across the Channel, they were met by the Lord Mayor of London at Mansion House, received in both Houses of Parliament, and welcomed at Oxford by the head of the university.

Yesterday—Sunday—they arrived in New York by special plane, and I have been glad to learn that Mayor O'Dwyer, Ambassador Austin at the United Nations, and other officials are arranging to give them a full-hearted welcome to this country.

The group will fly to Washington on Thursday, the 27th, and will be here until Tuesday, August 1. The Vice President has arranged to receive the group in the Senate at 12:15 on Friday, July 28. They will go from here to a similar reception in the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, the visit of this group of distinguished Japanese leaders to the United States at this critical time is so significant that I feel we should especially honor them here on the floor of the Senate. It is my purpose, therefore, at the opening of the session on Friday, July 28, to ask unanimous consent that members of the group who belong to the Japanese Diet be invited to the floor while a word of welcome is given to them by Members of the Senate, and that immediately thereafter the Senate take a recess of 15 minutes in order that the entire delegation may be brought to the floor and be introduced to the Vice President and the Members of the Senate who may be present.

I hope that as many Senators as possible will arrange to be present at that time, realizing the opportunity to meet these distinguished visitors, as well as to express to them the warmth of our friendship and our encouragement in the search which has brought them so far to observe our democratic processes at work.

Perhaps there is no more effective way for us to support our troops in South Korea than to cement the friendship of these Far Eastern leaders by our personal welcome to them here in this Chamber on Friday, remembering that the present struggle is ideological as well as military.

The United States needs friends today as never before in our history, especially in the Far East. When Mr. Osaki was here he recalled to us that America's God-given destiny was to unite the world. As we extend our friendship and faith to these Japanese visitors, we can enlist them with us in that supreme task.

Mr. President, at this point, at the close of my remarks, I ask unanimous consent that there be inserted in the RECORD the names and identification of all these welcome visitors.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I thank the Senator from Ohio for his courtesy in yielding me time to make that statement.

DEATH OF WILLIAM LYON MACKENZIE KING, FORMER PRIME MINISTER OF CANADA

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. TAFT. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that I may yield to the Senator from New York for the purpose of making a brief statement, without losing the floor thereby.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GILLETTE in the chair). Is there objection to the Senator from Ohio yielding to the Senator from New York without losing the floor? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, in the death of William Lyon Mackenzie King, former prime minister of Canada, the world has lost a great leader, and this country a stanch friend.

I shall always recall with deepest satisfaction the many demonstrations of friendship and cooperation shown me by Prime Minister King during the years I was governor of New York and during the period I was director general of UNRRA. Prime Minister King's constant and intimate teamwork with President Roosevelt during the trying years of World War II strengthened and encouraged us all. He was a militant champion of democracy and freedom and of the need of nations and peoples to live and work together.

The New York Times and the Herald Tribune this morning have printed very fine editorials in appreciation of this great man. I ask unanimous consent to insert these editorials in the body of the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of July 24, 1950]

A STATESMAN PASSES

In the death of William Lyon Mackenzie King on Saturday the United States loses a stanch friend who believed firmly in American-Canadian unity on all levels. Mr. King had been prime minister of Canada for a total of 21 years and 5 months—a record in that office among members of the British Commonwealth of Nations. He had seen Canada emerge from dominion status to full nationhood, in equal partnership with Great Britain and other commonwealth nations. This achievement was perhaps outstanding in the long political career he began in 1908. Another accomplishment was his strengthening of Canada's internal unity by equal respect for all population groups. In a nation of 13,500,000, half of British descent and 27 percent of French derivation, this achievement was not easy.

Mr. King's acquaintance with the United States had begun early. After taking his master's degree at the University of Toronto, he had spent one year at the University of Chicago, another at Harvard, and some time with the Rockefeller Foundation in New York. From his earliest tutoring by Sir Wilfred Laurier, the eminent French-Canadian premier, he kept up his already lively interest in American developments. On terms of close friendship with Franklin D. Roosevelt throughout the latter's presidency, he led his country admirably through the difficult war years. When war strain intensified feeling between English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians, he could always find a compromise acceptable to both groups. In 1941 through the American-Canadian Joint Permanent Defense Board, he set his country on a policy of military collaboration with the United States—a policy still working for the security of the two nations.

Mr. King's passing thus means a loss to this country as well as to Canada. The policies he fostered and his achievements in office will make his name long remembered and respected.

[From the New York Herald Tribune of July 24, 1950]

W. L. MACKENZIE KING

During the more than 20 years that W. L. Mackenzie King was Prime Minister of Canada he achieved international renown as a champion of democratic ideals and a builder of world amity as well as of national autonomy. A veteran of international conferences, he was a dominant figure at the most important such meeting of our times—the San Francisco Conference which organized the United Nations. Statesmen of every nation sympathetic to Mr. King's ideals—such as President Franklin D. Roosevelt—found in him a powerful ally at a time when the free world needed every ounce of strength it could muster. He was the best of good neighbors, and it was largely through his efforts and understanding that the relation of the United States and Canada remains the world's exemplar of friendship between nations.

In view of the traditional differences between the English- and French-speaking sections of Canada, the repeated indorsements given to Mr. King's leadership by his own people are ample proof of his sincere devotion to his country's welfare. His infrequent political setbacks were always temporary, and the leadership that succeeded him adheres to his principles today, even though most of his battles—for national autonomy, for popular unity, for social justice—were won in his lifetime. It is unfortunate that death deprived him of his long-cherished ambition to complete a set of memoirs about the public service to which he devoted his years. Mr. King never married, and he shunned the social world. His work was his life; he could die with the satisfaction that it was a good work, and he had done it well.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Ohio if he will yield so that prior to beginning his address, which I understand is on a different subject than those previously discussed, I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. TAFT. I ask unanimous consent that I may yield for that purpose without losing the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from Ohio yielding to the Senator from Massachusetts so he may suggest the absence of a quorum? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hickenlooper	Martin
Anderson	Hill	Maybank
Benton	Hoey	Mundt
Brewster	Holland	Murray
Bricker	Humphrey	O'Conor
Bridges	Hunt	O'Mahoney
Butler	Ives	Pepper
Byrd	Jenner	Robertson
Capehart	Johnson, Colo.	Russell
Chapman	Johnson, Tex.	Saltonstall
Chavez	Johnston, S. C.	Schoeppel
Connally	Kefauver	Smith, Maine
Cordon	Kem	Smith, N. J.
Darby	Kerr	Sparkman
Donnell	Kilgore	Stennis
Douglas	Knowland	Taft
Ecton	Langer	Thomas, Okla.
Ferguson	Leahy	Thomas, Utah
Flanders	Lehman	Thye
Frear	Lodge	Tobey
George	McCarran	Tydings
Gillette	McCarthy	Watkins
Graham	McClellan	Wherry
Green	McFarland	Wiley
Gurney	McKellar	Williams
Hayden	McMahon	Young
Hendrickson	Malone

Mr. McFARLAND. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WITHERS] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] is absent because of a death in his family.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] is temporarily absent by leave of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

THE ECONOMIC SITUATION PRODUCED BY THE KOREAN CRISIS

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, during the past few days I have listened with interest to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] discuss the report of the Tydings subcommittee. At a later time I shall hope to make a few remarks on that subject myself. I regret that I have not been able to hear the entire debate on that matter, because I have been attending steadily the meetings of the conference committee on the social-security bill. Certainly I am interested in the remarks of those Senators.

Mr. President, at this time I wish to discuss the general question before the Senate, namely, that with relation to the additional controls and the new economic situation produced by the Korean war.

The Communist aggression in Korea, with its indication of the increased possibility of a third world war, and the President's request for $10,000,000,000 for additional armament—both added to a situation already somewhat inflationary—have raised problems of the most serious concern to the American economic system. Already they have resulted in rapidly increasing prices in some fields, and a general fear of greater increases. This has produced a good deal of hoarding and hysteria which, at least for the moment, make this trend more severe.

The President has suggested an elaborate plan of controls granting him complete, arbitrary power over all agriculture, industry, and transportation with certain notable exceptions; and he has suggested that "at an appropriate time" some part of the additional expense should be covered by increased taxes. Dismissing at this moment the blame for the situation which has arisen in the world and the mess in which we find ourselves, it seems clear that at this time we have no alternative except to take every possible measure against the further expansion of Communist influence in the world to the point at which it may threaten the freedom of the people of the United States.

There is a good deal of misunderstanding, however, as to just what it is, from an economic standpoint, that we face at the present time. There are two distinct problems. The first is the Korean war, which accounts perhaps for from two and one-half to four billion dollars of the additional appropriations requested by the President. This alone is not a tremendous factor, nor does it require any great economic effort, when we consider that we now have a national production of $270,000,000,000 a year and a national annual income of $222,000,000,000. The increase directly attributable to the Korean war cannot justify many controls, except possibly the control of steel and scarce materials required for the manufacture of munitions.

Second, however, the Korean war has impressed upon the people the necessity for increased military forces to deal perhaps in other parts of the world, with the type of war started by the Communists in Korea, and a better preparation for a possible all-out attack by the Russians throughout the world. This accounts for the balance of the President's request for expenditures.

All of this indicates, Mr. President, that we face a new status in this country, something which we have never seen here before. It is not all-out war, because the Russians may never make the attack which so many fear, but neither is it a state of peace in which we can develop our civilian progress and an increased standard of living to the extent we would like to do. Even the United States is not productive enough to pursue both policies to their ultimate end. If we are to spend as much as is now proposed on guns, we cannot spend so much on butter. The change to this new status is one which we cannot make without sacrificing some of the progress and some of the luxuries which have been our ideal. So far as we can see, this status may exist for 10 years, and we may as well face the problem and adjust ourselves to it. Some say the Russians will attack at once. Some put the date at 1952 or 1953. Last week I saw one estimate that the attack would come in 1956. Perhaps it may not be until 1960. I am not at all confident, Mr. President, that the Russians contemplate an all-out military attack at any time, or that there is any certainly of a third world war. The point that I am trying to make, however, is that now we have to plan for a type of economy entirely different from the one for which we have planned heretofore, and so far as we can be certain now, the new one may last for 10 years.

According to present estimates, the military expenses are to be increased by $10,000,000,000 a year. With further thought, the total bill may perhaps be an increase of $15,000,000,000 a year. Even assuming that there is a substantial reduction in Government domestic expenditures, that means a budget of $50,000,000,000 to $55,000,000,000 instead of $40,000,000,000. From an economic standpoint, however, this is still a very different position from all-out war. In the Second World War we expended about $100,000,000,000 a year for Government activities, or about one-half of the total civilian production. In a new war, production would be greater, and one-half of the national production, if that is perhaps the limit of what we would set aside for war, might be $150,000,000,000 a year. In one case we would be taking one-half the national production; in what we contemplate and face today, we shall be taking only one-fifth.

One big difference between these two conditions is that if we take one-half of the national product for war, it is almost impossible to cover it by taxes. That means, therefore, a substantial amount of borrowing, and inevitably it means price control and wage control and rationing, and—even then—probably later it would mean inflation, such as followed the Second World War. During the world war many people thought that we should pay our way as we went along, but I could never see how this could be done by any form of taxation which has yet been devised, because taxation must be uniform and taxation of such tremendous weight on a uniform basis is bound to impose intolerable hardships on some.

It seemed to me that the only possible theoretical way to pay for all-out war by taxation would be by rationing income and taxing away everything over the assigned amount. Mr. President, you can imagine what tremendous administrative and political difficulties that would involve, if, in fact, it did not infringe the Constitution of the United States.

But this is not true of a Federal expenditure of fifty to fifty-five billion dollars. This can be paid for out of taxes. Those taxes would be very heavy. They would cut somewhat all civilian standards of living. They would interfere with the development of civilian production and improved methods. But it can be done, and it is the only way to prevent inflation by reaching its principal cause. It has been repeatedly proved by experience that it is impossible to borrow vast sums of money and then hope by the imposition of controls to prevent the inevitable inflationary effects. Sooner or later the dike must break. If we want to stop inflation, we have to stop it at the source. If we can pay as we go and restrain the increase of private credit, then I see no reason for any overall price, wage, or allocation controls. I see no reason to look forward for 10 years to a dictatorial control by Government of every phase of agriculture, industry, and commerce.

Again, Mr. President, what I desire to emphasize is that what we are facing today is something that we have not faced before. It is a special state of semiwar. It is a condition which calls for a great sacrifice on the part of the people. But it is, not as in the case of all-out war, a condition which can be financed on a pay-as-you-go basis, a condition to which we can adjust our economy and still maintain as large a part as possible of the freedom and the liberty and the progress which are essential to a free economy.

The program which I suggest, therefore, at this time is as follows:

First. Impose controls on the increase of private credit. During the past year, bank loans have increased $3,000,000,000. Consumer credit has increased $2,500,000,000. The inflationary effect of housing credit is hard to calculate in figures, but it has been substantial. Without doubt these increases in credit plus the Government deficit of more than $3,000,000,000 in the past year are responsible for the increased prices and the inflationary trend which developed even before the Korean war. The President has already moved to check the Government stimulation of housing credit, although he seems to have done it rather to save materials for the war than as part of any general move to check credit inflation.

I favor also the granting of power to control consumer credit, which has become such an important factor in modern life. Government has always controlled credit through the banks. Every responsible government controls and prevents the development of excessive credit, which builds up purchasing power without corresponding production, and therefore tends toward inflation. It seems to me proper, today, to extend it to consumer credit, in order that the whole field may be covered. I do not quite see the need for checking private real-estate credit, which is covered specifically in the bill, because I believe it can be controlled through the general control of bank lending. I see no reason to turn over the whole control of credit to the President, as proposed in the new bill. In my opinion, it should be retained in the Federal Reserve Board, which already has full power over bank credit.

Second. The Government should reduce domestic expenditures. Just as civilians generally will have to make some sacrifice in their plans, so must also the Government and the communities, as far as their own domestic expenditures are concerned.

Third. Taxes must be levied to cover all contemplated expenditures, and they should be levied at once. A week ago the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] proposed a general increase of 10 percent in all income taxes. That would produce only about $3,000,000,000. Merely to give an idea of the volume of what we are faced with here, an increase of 20 percent on all corporation and personal incomes would only produce about $6,000,000,000 a year. An increase of 25 percent would only produce $7,500,000,000 a year. Of course, the increased expenditures will not begin immediately, so that it requires a more complete calculation to determine just how much of an increase is necessary to balance expenditures during the next 8 months. By that time Congress would be in a position to enact a more permanent tax system.

Fourth. With such a program, I believe it is unnecessary to grant any such arbitrary and dictatorial powers over industry as is proposed in the bill recently introduced. The President's message is comparatively mild. The bill itself goes far beyond the message. It includes some controls which did not even exist in the Second World War. It is perhaps significant that it omits only those controls which might be unpopular; namely, detailed price control and consumer rationing. Also, it puts off the levying of taxes, apparently, until an "appropriate time." But if the other controls are granted in this present bill, it seems to me these final controls must inevitably follow after the election. It also omits immediate taxation which might be considered unpopular. I do not think the people realize how extreme the controls proposed in the bill are, and I point out a few of those which are now requested:

First. The right to require anyone to accept and perform any contract apparently on terms to be fixed by the Government. At least I see no machinery set up by which it can be determined how the price is to be fixed.

Second. The right to "allocate materials and facilities." The "allocation of materials" I think were the words used in the Second War Powers Act, in the World War, to justify a general rationing system. Consumer rationing is expressly excepted in this bill, but apparently we could ration right down to the grocer, and the grocer would have to invent his own system of rationing among the consumers. It seems to me this language would enable the President to shut down any industry in the United States by refusing to allocate materials to it, to require any industry to shift from one kind of manufacture to another, apparently without compensation of any kind; to require any farmer to plant such crops as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct—because, when it comes to the allocation of facilities, the allocation of facilities undoubtedly includes the farmer's machinery, if it does not include his land, just as much as it includes the facilities of any industrial plant—and to control every detail of transportation in the United States. I certainly should not object to some power to allocate scarce materials, particularly steel. It seems wholly unnecessary to extend this power to the entire economy of the United States.

It has been suggested that under this proposal, the entire Brannan plan could be put into effect, because, under the allocation of power, the farmer could be told exactly what he could plant and what he could not plant. On page 8 the President is given power to make provision for purchases of metals, minerals, and other raw materials, which might be any farm product, for Government use, or for resale, so that the Government could buy and sell to an unlimited extent, take a loss, or buy high and sell cheap, and, of course, stand the difference, which would amount to a subsidy on agricultural products and on food.

Furthermore, the bill contains power to establish any kind of corporation to buy and sell, and whatever powers are necessary to carry out the Brannan plan or any other plan for the control of agriculture or industry. It seems to me that it is almost unlimited.

Third. The power to requisition any property, plant, or other facility in the United States, any plant anywhere, or any property the President chooses to requisition.

Fourth. The right to guarantee any loan or to make any loan to any corporation. That seems to me to be an unlimited power of lending. We have seen the magnificent results of the RFC lending in three or four very notable cases, and it certainly seems questionable whether we should loan money to any corporation which the President would like to assist to produce some product desired by the Army.

Fifth. The right to set up Government corporations to go into any business the Government wants to go into, up to a total of $2,000,000,000.

Mr. President, I cannot quite see why, so far as additional equipment now required is concerned, whatever it may be, the American industrial plant is not perfectly competent to make the things that are needed. It seems to me that if the Government wants to go into the business of making things, it should specify those things. We recently passed a bill providing that the Government could raise hemp in Central America. If there is any special thing that only the Government can do, I have no great objection to authorizing it to do it, but the general power to go into any business it wants to go into seems to me to be wholly unjustified.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. I do not have a copy of the bill before me, but we held a hearing this morning, and I should like to ask the distinguished Senator this question: What is the meaning of the word "facilities"?

Mr. TAFT. I discussed the use of the word "facilities." So far as I can see, it means almost anything. I suggested, before the Senator came in, that it probably includes farm machinery. It includes machinery and possibly the industrial plant itself. Whether it includes land may be doubtful. Certainly I think it includes machinery and plant.

Mr. TOBEY. By no stretch of the imagination could it control labor?

Mr. TAFT. No. I do not think it would include labor, except possibly coal labor, where a large amount of machinery is involved. There might be some indirect control by control of facilities.

Sixth. The control of real-estate credit. The chief difficulty with that is that it is rather difficult to pick out real-estate credit from other credit. I think we can satisfactorily control real-estate credit by the general control of the banks. The Federal Reserve Board has not taken any steps, so far as I know, to try to restrict the inflation which started before the Korean war, and certainly there has been no effort to restrict the over-all amount of bank loans. Bank loans have increased approximately $3,000,000,000 within the past 12 months. That is, perhaps, not extraordinary, considering the increase in general business activity, but, nevertheless, if we do not want to go on with inflation it seems to me that bank loans should be held at about where they are, in total. Real-estate credit, I think, is included.

Seventh. The control of margins on commodity exchanges.

Last year we examined that and did not feel that the exact amount of margins on commodity exchanges had anything to do with the price increases which occurred 2 or 3 years ago. I think Congress rejected the request for a further control over margins for fear a higher margin would entirely destroy the hedging market.

Eighth. The power to go into anybody's business and subpena any information, confidential or otherwise. I do not think I have ever seen such broad power to go into anyone's business and require him to bring all the evidence which the President might demand.

It is significant that some of these powers were sought in peacetime in the Spence bill, and there is at least a suspicion that the present crisis is being used to secure powers long desired, but unrelated to present necessities.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. In other words, to secure by indirection that which could not receive the Senate's approval by direction.

Mr. TAFT. I think the Senator states much better than I do the suggestion, at least, which has occurred to me.

All these powers as well as price control, wage control, and rationing might well be part of a general grant in case of all-out war.

I have emphasized the fact that all-out war means taking such a large proportion, 50 percent, of all production that it cannot possibly be financed by taxation, and therefore, we have to treat it on a different basis.

I would not object to working on a draft of a statute which could be promptly enacted in case such a war occurred. Even then it seems to me that powers given are much too arbitrary and without the proper safeguards of appeal which are necessary to assure justice, even in time of war.

But there are two principles which I want to assert as strenuously as I can:

First. Arbitrary powers should not be granted unless they are necessary for the particular crisis which we face.

Second. Arbitrary government control is not a cure for inflation. We fool ourselves if we think that these controls prevent inflation. They attempt to prevent the results without striking at the cause. The way to prevent inflation is to go on a pay-as-you-go basis. We face a new status of a semigarrison state, forced on us by the Russian threat. However, we got there, now we have to pay for it. Let us not fool ourselves by thinking we can borrow the money and go on enjoying ourselves to the full on a domestic spree. We have to give up some of our purchasing power heretofore available for domestic purposes in the form of taxation so it can be spent for war purposes. We cannot have something for nothing. In the end, we would pay for it much more violently in money and increased prices. Whatever the situation is brought about by Russian aggression and administrative policy it ought to be faced now and ought not to be hidden and concealed until after November 7.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The Senator said he believed that there should be some increased taxation. How much increased taxation does he feel we could bear through our ordinary methods of taxation, without confiscation, to take care of additional expenditures?

Mr. TAFT. I cannot say as to the limit; I do not know. An increase from forty billion to fifty-five billion dollars has been proposed as the total Federal expenditure which could be borne by taxation, interfering with the progress of our domestic system, but not choking it to death so to speak.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Some of it should come out of our present domestic expenditures, should it not?

Mr. TAFT. I tried to emphasize three things as being those which bring about inflation and force up prices. One is the undue increase of private and Government housing credit; second, unnecessary Government expenditures for domestic purposes; third, the failure to levy taxes to cover all Government expenditures.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Ohio whether an increase in taxes would mean not only an increase in income taxes but also an increase in corporation taxes?

Mr. TAFT. Yes. The Senator from Virginia, I believe, suggested a 10-percent increase in all taxes, which would include corporation, individual, and every other kind. I was merely giving the figures of the amount that kind of system would produce. It may be a makeshift arrangement, but it is possible to act on quick notice.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, and he announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On July 21, 1950:

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL PROPERTY AND ADMINISTRATIVE SERVICES ACT—REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, I report an original bill, to amend the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 2140) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received, and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

The bill (S. 3959) to amend the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and ordered to be placed on the calendar.

FEES FOR SPECIAL SERVICES—REPORT OF A COMMITTEE (REPT. NO. 2120)

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, pursuant to the provisions of the Legislative Reorganization Act, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, I submit a report entitled "Fees for Special Services."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received and printed.

REFERENCE OF H. R. 1603 TO COURT OF CLAIMS—REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Judiciary, I report an original resolution, referring H. R. 1603 to the Court of Claims, and I submit a report (No. 2138) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received, and the resolution will be placed on the calendar.

The resolution (S. Res. 317) was ordered to be placed on the calendar, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 1603) entitled "For the relief of Walter P. Gardner, sole surviving trustee of the property of the Central Railroad Co. of New Jersey" now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, is hereby referred to the Court of Claims; and the court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of sections 1492 and 2509 of title 28 of the United States Code and report to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, giving such findings of fact and conclusions thereon as shall be sufficient to inform the Congress of the nature and character of the demand as a claim, legal or equitable, against the United States and the amount, if any, legally or equitably due from the United States to the claimant.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McMAHON:

S. 3957. A bill to amend title 46, United States Code, section 251; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WILEY:

S. 3958. A bill for the relief of Henning C. L. Meyer; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(Mr. McCLELLAN, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, reported an original bill (S. 3959) to amend the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, and for other purposes, which was ordered to be placed on the calendar, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado (by request):

S. 3960. A bill to amend subsection (b) of section 10 of the act of June 26, 1884, as amended (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 599 (b)); and

S. 3961. A bill to amend the act of April 29, 1941, to authorize the waiving of the requirement of performance and payment bonds in connection with certain Coast Guard contracts; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

S. 3962. A bill to extend to personnel of the Armed Forces participating in the Korean campaign all benefits which were applicable to persons who performed military service during World War I or World War II, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF HEARINGS ON INVESTIGATION OF DISLOYALTY IN STATE DEPARTMENT

Mr. WHERRY (for himself and Mr. FERGUSON) submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 98), which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed, for the use of the Senate, 1,500 additional copies of the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations, pursuant to Senate Resolution 231 (81st Cong., 2d. sess.), a resolution to investigate whether there are employees in the State Department disloyal to the United States.

Such hearings shall include all the testimony and matters connected therewith, both in open and executive sessions.

INVESTIGATION OF OPERATIONS OF PROGRAM FOR PROCUREMENT OF SUPPLIES, ETC., IN DEFENSE DEPARTMENT

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I submit for appropriate reference a resolution to investigate the operations of the program for the procurement of supplies, in the Defense Department, and I ask unanimous consent that a statement prepared by me in connection with the resolution be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be received and appropriately referred, and, without, objection, the statement presented by the Senator from Michigan will be printed in the RECORD.

The resolution (S. Res. 318) was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee of seven Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation of the operation of the program for the procurement and construction of supplies, materials, munitions, vehicles, aircraft, vessels, plants, camps, and other articles and facilities in connection with the national defense, including (1) the types and terms of contracts awarded on behalf of the United States; (2) the methods by which such contracts are awarded and contractors selected; (3) the utilization of the facilities of small business concerns, through subcontracts or otherwise; (4) the geographic distribution of contracts and location of plants and facilities; (5) the effect of such program with respect to labor and the migration of labor; (6) the performance of contracts and the accountings required of contractors; (7) benefits accruing to contractors with respect to amortization for the purposes of taxation or otherwise; (8) practices of management or labor, and prices, fees, and charges, which interfere with such program or unduly increase its costs; and (9) such other matters as the committee deems appropriate. The committee shall report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its study and investigation, together with its recommendations.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Eighty-first and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistance, to require by subpena, or otherwise, the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to make such investigations, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to incur such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

The statement presented by Mr. FERGUSON is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR FERGUSON

I have submitted to the Senate a resolution calling for the creation of a special committee to monitor the immediate defense effort in the same way that the Truman Committee functioned in the late war. The occasion for such a committee is already here because we are involved in an international police effort approximating war and we are stepping up our home and the Atlantic nation's preparedness efforts far in excess of normal peacetime operations.

Accordingly, the Senate should have at its immediate disposal an instrument in the form of a special committee which can inquire into the progress we are making, monitor the programs being launched, inquire into such bottlenecks as develop, expedite procurement operations, examine contracts, and guard against waste in the use of Government funds in the same efficient manner as was done by the Truman committee.

It is not my intention to have this committee interfere in any manner with the work of other committees. The Armed Services Committee will still have the vital job of keeping its finger on the work and problems of the Armed Services. The Appropriations Committee and the Expenditures Committee will have all they can handle to keep track of the Nation's expenditures for military and civilian purposes. Other committees will still have the job of supervising legislative matters of priorities, allocations, Government contracts, credit policies, and other important phases of the civilian economy and its relation to the preparedness efforts.

But by the very nature of things all these efforts of our regular standing committees must be compartmentalized because jurisdiction over the country's affairs is divided among 15 or more committees. There is urgent need today, just as there was when the Truman committee was formed, for a special committee with full investigatory powers to cut across jurisdictional lines for the purpose of considering problems from many angles and to do the important job of coordination which proved so valuable in the operations of the Truman committee.

The resolution I have proposed calls upon the President of the Senate to appoint a special committee of seven Senators and the presumption is that they will be selected from the several different regular committees which will be immediately concerned with our enlarged preparedness efforts. As in the Truman committee, I hope this new committee will be representative of both our major political parties so as to make the committee national in character in keeping with the high ideals and motives which compel us to engage upon a preparedness program at this time.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE ACT—CHANGE IN CONFEREES

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the name of the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] be substituted for that of the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] as a member of the conference committee conferring on the FDIC bill (S. 2822) to amend the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 264).

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and the substitution will be made.

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION—PRINTING OF SENATE BILL WITH HOUSE AMENDMENTS

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill dealing with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Senate bill 2822, be printed with the House amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND THE RULE—AMENDMENT TO GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS BILL

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted the following notice in writing:

In accordance with rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that it is my intention to move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 7786), making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes, the following amendment, namely: On page 478, between lines 18 and 19, insert the following:

"SEC. . No funds or contract authorizations made available by this act shall be used for the construction of any structure, work, or other project unless (1) such construction is certified by the Secretary of Defense to be essential to national security, or (2) the construction of such structure, work, or other project has been commenced prior to the enactment of this act, and substantial detriment to the interests of the United States will result if the proposed further construction is not carried out."

Mr. WILLIAMS also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7786, making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

THE PRESIDENT'S MILITARY PROGRAM—$3,000,000,000 ECA PROGRAM FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, taxes need not be raised to meet the cost of the President's military program. The President has requested $10,000,000,000 for the program. In the face of oncoming war and our preparation for it, the ECA, formerly called the Marshall plan, a peacetime endeavor, could be stopped. The ECA's $3,000,000,000 could now be used for the President's expanded military program.

Mr. President, other strictly peacetime projects costing the heavily-burdened American taxpayers billions of dollars, should also be stopped during the time the taxpayers are being called upon to pay for the big military program.

ECA FUNDS DIVERTED INSTEAD OF HIGHER TAXES

The $3,000,000,000 which we could save from ECA would be a big start. We can save more money elsewhere in the budget expenditures without having to increase taxes. It is well known and the statement appeared in press dispatches during the past few days that the actual estimate of the Armed Services for fighting the Korean war is about $5,000,000,000.

PEACETIME DEFICIT

Apparently the remainder is for preparations elsewhere, except that the President does need probably from three and a half to five billion dollars to cover up his peacetime deficit, which has not been mentioned since the Korean war began, or, rather, since the President said we were pursuing a police action in Korea.

ONE BILLION TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY MILLION DOLLARS MILITARY ASSISTANCE TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Another $1,250,000,000 could be found in the appropriation for military assistance to foreign countries. That money could be better spent on our own military preparations.

ECA COUNTRIES' LOYALTY QUESTIONABLE

I doubt if most of the countries receiving our assistance would come to our aid. As a matter of fact, in the present emergency, one after another of the countries has said, "Sorry, we cannot send our men. Some of the things you gave us, maybe, but not our manpower."

Further support of the position which the junior Senator from Nevada takes in this matter may be found in the title of the original ECA statute, Public Law 472, Eightieth Congress, chapter 169, second session.

ECA NOT CONSISTENT WITH STABILITY OF UNITED STATES

After reciting the things we are to do for the ECA or Marshall plan countries, it states:

And consistent with the maintenance of the strength and stability of the United States.

I submit that the continuation of aid under the Marshall plan, or ECA, of from three to five billion dollars a year, while we are preparing for war, is not consistent with the maintenance of the strength and stabilitly of the United States.

Further, section 101 says:

This title may be cited as the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948.

PRESENT RECOVERY STATUS OF ECA NATIONS—NOTE OF RECOVERY

Economic cooperation for what? To expand peacetime facilities. All the argument and controversy about expanding the peacetime industrial facilities in the face of war preparation may be disregarded.

I should like at this time to submit for the RECORD a table showing the recovery of the ECA nations. All ECA nations show a 100-percent or greater recovery, on the basis of the 1937 percent industrial index, with the exception of Belgium, which shows a 95-percent recovery, Germany bizone, 95 percent, and Greece, 97 percent. The recovery of the remaining countries goes up as high as 148 percent, as in the case of Sweden. The United Kingdom's percentage is 124. The percentage of recovery from 1946, the year following the year, to 1947, and from 1947 and 1948, prior to the passage of the Marshall plan, was at about the same rate of recovery as from 1948 to 1949, and during 1949 and the first 3 months of 1950 under the Marshall plan. In other words, there is no clear acceleration of the trend of recovery after the Marshall plan was adopted.

However, regardless of what the effect of the Marshall plan may have been—and I intend to say more about that during the course of my address—Marshall plan countries are on an average approximately 120 percent recovered over the 1937 industrial index.

I ask unanimous consent to insert the table in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HIGHER TAXES FIRST THOUGHT OF THE PRESIDENT

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, in an editorial in this morning's Wall Street Journal appears a very interesting comment on how to raise the money required to fight a war. I quote the editorial in part:

It is characteristic of the way we have been induced to think that the first reaction to the "pay as we go" suggestion is higher taxes. And perhaps they will have to come; but higher taxes are not the way to start. The start should be cutting expenditures.

If Congress began now to consider a tax bill—and it has every wish to postpone it—the country would be half through the current fiscal year before the new taxes could be collected. But by cutting down expenditures the same result of balancing Treasury receipts and expenditures begins immediately.

The serious implications of Korea have been apparent for some days. Yet so far as we know there has been no indication from Congress that anything has happened to change the Government financial outlook. Instead, Congress seems to take the attitude that it is perfectly sound to add more appendages to an overgrown Government establishment.

Mr. President, it seems our first reaction in Congress unfortunately is to add to expenditures and to raise taxes. To many, is is a very simple way to carry on the Government business.

THE ECA $3,000,000,000—HOW USELESS

Mr. President, I now desire to show for the RECORD exactly where the approximately $3,000,00,000 is located. The direction of this expenditure could easily be changed so that the money would go for national defense, instead of our having to raise taxes while creating more peacetime business in the Marshall plan countries.

Mr. President, the following table shows the conditions of the ECA appropriations up to date:

Spent Apr. 3, 1948, to June 30, 1948	$738,500,000
Spent July 1, 1948 to June 30, 1949 (1949 fiscal year)	5,170,800,000
Spent July 1, 1949 to June 30, 1950 (1950 fiscal year)	3,592,090,000
Total spent to June 30, 1950	9,501,390,000
Spent July 1 to July 23, 1950	$24,410,000
	9,525,800,000
Carry-over from 1950 fiscal	277,000,000
New appropriation for 1951	2,700,000,000
Available for 1951 fiscal	2,977,000,000
Less amount spent since July 1	24,410,000
Leaving available now	2,952,590,000

AMOUNT AVAILABLE

So, we can see that there is approximately $3,000,000,000 available for national defense as of today.

Mr. LANGER. Available for what?

Mr. MALONE. Available for anything Congress desires to do with it. The taxes are levied and the appropriation is made, and the money is lying there.

In further answer to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota, a simple amendment to the act by the Senate and the House, signed by the President, would direct where the money should go, where it should have gone long before.

Mr. President, I have here a table showing the total procurement authorizations for ECA by countries, and I ask unanimous consent that the table be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Total by country, as of July 19, 1950:	Purchase approvals, total
Austria	$445,561,000
Belgium-Luxemburg	490,902,000
Denmark	208,774,000
France	2,005,107,000
Germany (Federal Republic)	893,837,000
Greece	362,825,000
Iceland	15,415,000
Ireland	134,603,000
Italy	1,071,020,000
Indonesia	101,472,000
Netherlands	771,578,000
Norway	195,581,000
Portugal	32,129,000
Sweden	96,711,000
Trieste	29,509,000
Turkey	103,023,000
United Kingdom	2,567,753,000
Total, Europe	9,525,800,000

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a table showing the appropriations for military assistance to foreign countries.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Military assistance pact

Fiscal 1950	$1,000,000,000
Plus Turkey, Greece, Korea, etc	359,000,000
Fiscal 1951 (including Turkey, Greece, Korea, etc.)	1,222,500,000

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, on June 20 the New York Times outlined that the second-year military assistance to nations resisting communism was approved by a joint vote of 12 to 0 in the Committee on Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committee. I ask unanimous consent to have a portion of the article inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

As approved by the committees the military aid bill would authorize $1,000,000,000 for the North Atlantic area of Europe. In addition, there would be a release of up to $250,000,000 more of excess military equipment. Besides, an estimated $214,000,000 of funds appropriated for the first year of arms aid could be carried over to the second-year program.

AMERICANS HAVING DIFFICULTY MAKING ENDS MEET

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, the American taxpayers are heavily burdened. Washington does not seem to understand that the great majority of Americans are having difficulty making ends meet. The American people should not be expected to carry on their backs these foreign nations while carrying the war load.

The ECA should be ended now. As a matter of fact, the ECA Act itself provides that assistance be "dependent upon continuity of cooperation among countries participating in the program." They are not cooperating.

ECA money has been misused and wasted. We have been informed of its financing night clubs and all kinds of useless things.

ECA BUILDS FOREIGN COMPETITION WITH AMERICAN LABOR AND INVESTMENTS—ARMS RUSSIA

ECA has been used to build up foreign industries, which are enabled to compete on an unfair basis with American industries. ECA has been used as a blackjack, its regulations twisted to fit almost any purpose at the whim of its key officials.

ECA has been used to arm Russia. The junior Senator from Nevada inserted in the RECORD a long list of potential war materials which we ourselves sent to Russia. He also inserted in the RECORD a list of 96 trade treaties between the iron-curtain countries, including Russia, and the ECA countries receiving our aid. With ECA help, Russia has been receiving crude and semifinished steel, locomotives, flat trucks, mobile Diesel electric generators, ball bearings, tool steel, heavy construction equipment, and other war materials.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a dispatch dated July 24, from the Washington Post showing public reaction to financing the ECA while the European countries are trading with Russia:

There being no objection, the dispatch was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHY?

The Russian-made tanks, guns, planes, and bullets being used to maim and kill our boys in Korea were paid for out of the pockets of Americans. Each and every one of us paid our share via taxes.

The Marshall-plan nations have 96 trade treaties with Red Russia and her cohorts. As per agreement under these trade treaties, the Communist nations received ball-bearings, precision tools, barbed wire, machine tools, rubber tires for trucks, engines for trucks and planes, rolled and plate steel, aluminum, lead, iron, copper, brass, locomotives, aircraft, ships, etc.

Mr. MALONE. The junior Senator from Nevada inserted in the RECORD on January 24, 1950, several tables showing materials being sent to iron-curtain countries. Previously on March 5, 1948, this senator inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 94, part 2, page 2196, a table showing potential war materials being sent to Russia by Marshall-plan countries, and also in the CNGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 94, part 2, on page 2205 a list of potential war items which the United States had sent direct to Russia following World War II.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point the Senate joint resolution which would stop American aid and assistance to Nations which were assisting Russia, the iron-curtain countries, or any Communist countries:

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution to prohibit financial aid to any foreign country engaging in trade with Russia, her satellite countries, or any other area dominated or controlled by Russia

Whereas one of the alleged basic purposes of the Marshall plan is the restoration or maintenance in European countries of principles of individual liberty, free institutions, and genuine independence through a joint program based upon self-help and mutual cooperation; and

Whereas Russia and other Communist dominated and controlled countries and areas have refused to participate in such joint program; and

Whereas Communist actions have endangered world peace; and

Whereas certain participating nations under the Marshall plan by trading with Russia and other Communist dominated and controlled countries and areas and through nonaggression pacts and treaties are violating the basic principles of the Marshall plan and are aiding and fostering communism in other areas of the world through furnishing the necessary equipment, machinery, and supplies to consolidate Communist gains in eastern Europe and in Asia; and

Whereas such nations are furnishing Russia and the Communist areas necessary equipment, machinery, and supplies for world war III; and

Whereas it is the sense of the Congress and the basic policy of the Marshall plan and its enabling legislation that assistance to any participating country which fails in any way to meet its obligation to sustain and strengthen the principles of individual liberty, free institutions, and genuine independence, through cooperating with such Communist nations and areas, should be terminated: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That on and after the date of the enactment of this joint resolution no financial aid shall be given by the United States or any agency or officer thereof (whether by loan, grant, lend-lease, or in any other manner) to any foreign country which engages in trade or commerce on or after such date with Russia, her satellite countries, or any other Communist dominated or controlled area in any other country.

SEC. 2. It is the sense of the Congress that no moneys shall hereafter be appropriated and no loans shall hereafter be made and no equipment or supplies of any kind shall be furnished to any nation engaging in such trade or commerce or permitting its nationals to do so.

ENGLAND SHIPPING WAR MATERIAL TO COMMUNIST CHINA

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, in addition to the help the ECA nations have been to Russia and to the iron-curtain countries in arming for the third world war—this police action about which the President talks—we have the spectacle of England still shipping all kinds of raw materials into Communist China, which are finding their way up into Korea, not only with no diminution, but, in fact, with an increase in their trade. We also have the spectacle of an order from our own President stopping any opposition to such shipping by Chiang Kai-shek's Nationalist troops through the order for the Seventh Fleet to stop Nationalist China from opposing the Reds. That was the first order sent out.

JOB OF DIPLOMATS—KEEP US OUT OF WAR

I should say that the Senate should take some notice of what is going on. The State Department seems to have temporarily given way to the armed services. There is an editorial in the Daily Mirror of New York, under date of June 26, which I should like to read, in part:

It is the job of our diplomats to keep us out of war. War begins where diplomacy fails.

Our diplomacy has so miserably failed us in the Far East by its acquiescence to the Communist conquest of China—amounting almost to approval—that it has brought upon our people and the world this crisis.

Will the diplomats want us to go to war now to pay for their mistakes?

We don't think they will get away with that. The people are well aware of our failures of statesmanship and are not disposed to erase them with American blood.

But we are on the spot nonetheless.

WE WILL WIN THE WAR OR POLICE ACTION AS THE PRESIDENT CHOOSES TO CALL IT

Mr. President, so far as I know, there is not disposition on the part of anyone in the United States Senate to refuse to follow through and to win the Korean war, or the police action we find ourselves in at the instigation of the President of the United States, and to do everything possible not only to win it, but to win anything that is necessary. But, Mr. President, I submit again it is not necessary to continue peacetime assistance for industrial growth in foreign nations during wartime. You cannot do both together, they are inconsistent. Peacetime industrial growth in 16 foreign nations shows approximately 120 percent recovery on a 1936–37 index, while we are preparing for this war.

SHIFT IN BRITAIN'S POLICY SUPPORT

Mr. President, the New York Times of today, July 24, carries a very interesting dispatch, dated London, July 23:

A prompt shift in the policy of the Atlantic community—from economic recovery to military defense—was being forecast here today as a result of the alarm sounded by the aggression in Korea.

While expressing confidence that the Korean conflict would not lead to another war, John Strachey, British War Secretary, said tonight that such acts of aggression inevitably compelled the western nations to consider whether they should not devote more of their productive resources to their own defenses.

Mr. Strachey, it will be remembered, is the man appointed to head the national defense of his country, but to whom could not be entrusted the atom bomb secret. In other words, war secrets could not be entrusted to this man, but nevertheless he was made the head of the national defense organization of Great Britain.

Further quoting from the New York Times dispatch:

Any resources that might be diverted, he added, could "only come out of the resources which for 5 years we have devoted to reconstruction tasks."

That, Mr. President, is what I am speaking of. I am suggesting that we take the $3,000,000,000 appropriated by the Congress of the United States for use in peacetime industry in Europe, and devote it to our own national defense organization.

Reading further from the dispatch, I quote an authority in London:

"Public expenditure of a type calculated to improve our well-being or to attract dollars will have to give way to expenditure on aircraft, tanks, and guns," Mr. Crump predicted. "Taxation will rise rather than fall. Inflation will become more and not less severe. Commodity shortages will reappear and a return to rationing and control is now a distinct possibility."

In the same newspaper George Schwartz said that "first of all the government can and must divert some of its own expenditures" and call upon private enterprise to do the same so that money may be used for defense.

THE WAR IN KOREA

Mr. President, for the purpose of the RECORD, to show how much money we have expended in the past 5 years on the national defense organization, I read from a Washington Times-Herald editorial of June 20, as follows:

Since the opening of that conflict, American forces have been driven steadily back. American tanks have been no match for Soviet tanks operated by North Korean Communists. We are assured that improved tanks are in production, but none is yet in action. We learn, too, that the Air Force and Navy air wings are down to 4,600 first-line ships, with 7,900 in storage. The performance of the services has not been good on the showing to date.

TOTAL OF $89,000,000,000 FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE

Yet, in the 5 years since the end of World War II, according to the reports of the secretary of the Treasury, Congress has voted a total of more than $89,000,000,000 for national defense. The appropriation for each of these years exceeded by many times all previous defense budgets in a peacetime year. The defense expenditures for these years were:

1946	$42,961,000,000
1947	11,809,000,000
1948	10,217,000,000
1949	11,519,000,000
1950	12,618,000,000

JOINT RESOLUTION—END HELP TO COUNTRIES HELPING RUSSIA

Mr. President, it is necessary at this time again to revert to the effect of our peacetime help to the nations in the European area. On January 24 the junior Senator from Nevada introduced a joint resolution which called for the end of aid directly by this country to any European country or any other country, that was in any way giving assistance or aiding the Communist areas, including Russia and the eastern European countries. The reason for the introduction of the joint resolution was obvious. It was because of the 96 trade treaties the junior Senator from Nevada has called attention to several times on the Senate floor, the first time being in September of last year, when there were 88 such trade treaties in existence.

NINETY-SIX TRADE TREATIES WITH RUSSIA AND IRON CURTAIN COUNTRIES

All of those 88 trade treaties have been renewed or are in good standing now, and eight more such treaties have been added, making 96 in all.

Mr. President, it is not necessary to name the treaties again or to go into the question of the material shipped under them, but there was a very serious question as to whether it was advisable for the United States of America to furnish this money and industrial equipment to build up the industries of the 16 Marshall plan countries, only in turn to have a large part of the processed and manufactured goods to reach Russia, and the iron curtain countries, on the first bounce.

MANUFACTURING-IN-TRANSIT RATE

The Marshall aid simply moved to be a manufacturing-in-transit deal. The manufactured and processed material is still going into Russia and the iron curtain countries while my joint resolution is buried in a democratically controlled committee. I should say that no aid, military or otherwise, should go to any nation which is furnishing military equipment, or supplies, or equipment that can be used in a third world war against the United States of America.

ARMED SERVICES UNITED

Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that we have done everything possible on the Senate floor and in the House to unite our fighting forces. Is it not time that we unite our allied forces and determine what nations in this world are our friends, what nations are going to be neutral, and what nations are going to be aligned against us? We now know that nearly one-half of the world and its population is against us.

OUR ALLIES

I desire to call the Senate's attention to an excerpt from "Capital Stuff," written by John O'Donnell, which appeared in the New York Daily News and other newspapers on July 20, 1950. I read as follows:

Take our good friends to the north. Canada has not yet called up any troops to fight in the Far East or to replace United States defense outfits in Alaska. It has sent three destroyers to help MacArthur, however. Canada's Minister for External Affairs, Lester B. Pearson, makes the cool observation that the prospect of Americans now fighting alone in Korea must remind Canadians and Englishmen of 1915 and 1940.

In other words, this is strictly a United States Army, United States Treasury, United States Congress, and United States GI show.

Mr. President, I call attention to a further dispatch to the New York Sunday News, dated July 23, under the headline: "Make Others Pay, Die, Too, in War, Aussie Tells Yanks."

MAKE OTHERS PAY, DIE, TOO, IN WAR, AUSSIE TELLS YANKS

SYDNEY, July 22.—A wartime Australian Cabinet member said today the Americans should make it clear that "they are not going to do all the paying and all the dying to save the rest of the world from communism."

Arthur A. Calwell, a member of the Labor Party and former Minister of Immigration and Information, said the American people were entitled to feel "mad and bitter" at the failure of nations "living on their charity" to send ground forces to Korea.

"UNANIMOUS FAILURE"

"If I were an American," said Calwell, "I would feel mad and bitter at the too unanimous failure of all other member states of the United Nations, most of whom are living on the charity of the American taxpayer, to send ground forces to help the United States Army in Korea.

"I think I'd be demanding that the State Department line up the countries receiving Marshall aid and all others hoping to receive it and tell them while their resolutions of support make interesting reading, Americans are not going to do all the paying and all the dying to save the rest of the world from Communist domination."

ENGLAND WANTS TO BE NEUTRAL

Mr. President, I should like to refer briefly to an insertion made in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for March 4 and March 5, 1948, at a time when we were debating at some length, on the floor of the Senate, the question of whether there should be a Marshall plan, without going into detail, let me say that I quoted Mr. Bevin and Mr. Wilson, at that time, when they made it very clear that they wanted to trade with Russia, and wanted to remain neutral. They said they wanted to be "the bridgehead"—I use their exact language—between the Soviet Communist Government and the capitalist government of America.

I quote further from my speech, as it appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as of that date:

I think perhaps they are in a fair way of doing just that. Their interests are with Russia; they are primarily manufacturers of goods, as we are in this country, while Russia can furnish the necessary raw materials.

BRITAIN-RUSSIAN TRADE TREATY

At that point I inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a trade treaty which had been made prior to that date between Britain and Russia. I shall not take time to read that particular treaty into the RECORD at this point; it can be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for that date.

However, the first item appearing in that trade treaty is 1,100 locomotives, which the United Kingdom was to furnish the U. S. S. R.

Mr. President, the second item is 2,400 trucks, or what are called trucks in that treaty; we call them railroad cars.

Also included in the treaty are items for excavators, locomotives, Diesel-electric generators, turbines—all kinds of equipment necessary to prepare for world war III. That is what Britain was agreeing to supply Russia with, at the moment we first adopted the Marshall plan.

UNITED STATES MILITARY AID TO RUSSIA

Mr. President, if any further evidence is needed, I would refer further to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for March 4 and March 5, 1948; and I invite special attention to a table which appears at that point in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, showing the military aid provided to Russia by us prior to December 31, 1946. I shall not read all of that table; it is available to anyone who will read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. However, the fact is that we were shipping materials to Russia, to permit her to arm for world war III. The materials supplied to Soviet Russia after V-J day, and up to December 31, 1946, included machine tools valued at $40,000,000; steam locomotives Russian gage, valued at $30,000,000—and all these figures are given in round numbers; generator sets; cranes, derricks, hoists, etc.; electric rotating equipment; marine engines; pumps; crushing equipment; valves and fittings; gas-producing equipment; secondary metal-forming machinery; Diesel-electric locomotives; industrial trucks and tractors; fan and blower equipment; power-transmission equipment; power-conversion equipment; rolling mills and equipment; mine and quarry machinery; insulated wire and cable; and so forth, and so on.

Mr. President, we are not entirely guiltless in this matter. At that time those nations were saying that of course they would not furnish Russia or her satellites with materials which could be used against us in a war.

AID FROM OUR ALLIES

In that connection, let me read an article appearing in the New York Daily News of July 22, 1950:

BOLIVIA OFFERS UN 30 OFFICERS

Bolivia offered 30 officers of its regular army to the UN last night to reinforce General MacArthur in Korea—and thus was the first UN member to make a definite promise of ground troops in response to Secretary General Trygve Lie's plea for help. Shortly before the Bolivian message reached Lake Success, Canada offered a long-range air transport squadron with ground crews.

Earlier, Lie said there were no offers of ground support among replies from 9 of the 52 member nations. He listed them as France, Sweden, Denmark, Norway, Greece, Argentine, Brazil, Peru, and the Philippines.

Mr. President, as of July 22, the United Nations had not heard from the other countries.

I say that is further evidence that we should review the peacetime industrial help and peacetime industrial growth of the 16 nations in Europe which already have reached a development of approximately 120 percent of their development, on the basis of the industrial index for 1937.

OUR SEVENTH FLEET STOPPED NATIONALIST CHINA OPPOSING ENGLAND-COMMUNIST TRADE

Mr. President, let me read now an editorial appearing in the New York Daily News for July 22, 1950:

NICE GESTURE FOR CLEMMY

Speaking in the House of Commons Thursday, British Prime Minister Clement Attlee voiced a few kind words for the United States.

President Truman, said Mr. Attlee, was showing high purpose and resolve in the Korean affair, and the Labor (Socialist) Government is considering what it can do to match the Truman magnificance.

Attlee, however, failed in this speech to get down to brass tacks and say what if anything his government intends doing.

Ground troops to help our men in Korea are out. Britain's far eastern fleet is cooperating with our seventh; but those ships were in that neighborhood when the shooting started, so their help is costing England nothing but the expense of ammunition and what planes may be lost in carrier strikes over the Korean peninsula.

Here's a suggestion for Clement, if he is as anxious as he says he is to help us out:

Why not release all claims to Marshall-plan aid for Britain in the next year?

About $687,000,000 worth of such help is earmarked for the British. That isn't hay. If it were to be lifted off the United States taxpayer's back, the relief would be more than welcome. Sir Stafford Cripps, Chancellor of the Exchequer (like our Secretary of the Treasury), has been bragging of late about how healthy he has made Britain's gold and dollar reserves.

Here's a chance to make a gracious and solidly helpful gesture in Uncle Sam's direction. Do we hear an answer from the Right Honorable Mr. Attlee?

Mr. President, we now have ordered our seventh fleet to do something which the British fleet in the Far East could not do, namely, stop the Nationalist Chinese troops from interfering with the commerce between Britain and Communist China—commerce made up of fabricated goods and supplies which now are finding their way into Northern Korea, to be shot at our American boys in that area. I suspect that some of the material can be found still bearing the British trade-marks when our boys catch it in their bare hands in Korea.

So our fleet is stopping, for the first time, the interference which the British fleet up to now has been unable to stop, although for months it has been trying to stop it.

TWO TOP REASONS FOR STOPPING ECA AID TO EUROPE

Mr. President, there are two reasons why we should cancel further ECA help to such countries. First of all, we should cancel any further ECA help to any nation in the world which is helping Communist nations, as the 16 Marshall plan nations are helping the Communist countries at this time, and have been helping them since prior to the passage of the Marshall plan. They still are helping the Communist nations, Mr. President, including China. Those 16 Marshall-plan countries have sent and are continuing to send to the Communist countries ball bearings, heavy industrial equipment, road equipment and machinery, tool steel, electrical supplies, locomotives—exactly the material needed for war.

PEOPLE HARD PRESSED TO MEET TAXES

There is the added reason that we ourselves are now in a war, and we need the money. Instead of talking casually about raising taxes on our people, many of whom are unable to stand increased taxes, we should stop and realize that we now have available, as I have always said, an unexpended balance of $3,000,000,000 for ECA, in the case of the 16 Marshall-plan countries which, as I have already said, have developed their peacetime productive capacity to about 20 percent in excess of what it was in 1937, according to the index for that period.

STOP EXTRAVAGANCE—WE ARE FIGHTING A TOUGH ENEMY

So let us stop this foolish extravagance, add that $3,000,000,000 to the necessary expenditures for our military program.

Mr. President, I should like now to touch on an article in this morning's Wall Street Journal by Ray Cromley, in which he makes a prediction, to which it might be well to listen. This is not the first time I have heard about it. The junior Senator from Nevada has heard many discussions of the length of the war with China, the iron-curtain countries, and Russia together. Of course, our own organization in the State Department saw to that. Every move made, the whole pattern, from the Department of Commerce on through to the State Department, pointed toward Russian control of China and Korea. Some of their advisers went so far as to write a letter advising it—"Lose Asia. Lose Korea." A good dose of communism would be good for Asia.

THE TRUMAN WAR

Now, Mr. President, the battle is on, each Democrat has his particular war—Woodrow Wilson, 1917, Roosevelt, 1941, and now Truman in 1950.

Mr. Cromley says about it this morning:

Get yourself set. You've only seen the beginning of President Truman's new military-defense program.

"We're making plans," says one aide—

That is, one aide to the President—

"for a new Truman policy to police the world and keep the peace and hold the Russians in. And we're going to have to get the men, the guns, and the goods to do the job."

Further along in the article he says:

If Congress votes the powers to carry out this new world-police policy, officials here predict:

It would mean belt tightening for you—and more controls for you and your business for many years to come. No one knows how long. It would mean taxes maybe 25 percent or more greater than now, indefinitely. It would mean shortages—and maybe some price controls and rationing—for years. And it would mean the ever-present danger of war for a long time.

This new peace-enforcing policy was decided on by Mr. Truman and his assistants because they are convinced that Russia is going to try again what she is trying in Korea.

One official says. "It's almost certain there'll be another Korea. Maybe the attack will come in Iran or Indochina or Greece or Germany—or we don't know where. But bet your money they'll try again. And when we slap them back there they'll try still again. So we're going to have to keep this job up for a whale of a long time."

Another official calls it the beginning of a "100 years' war." He doesn't mean world war III is about to begin—but he does mean this policing job will last many years.

Mr. President, our State Department gave Manchuria to the Russians, gave Berlin to the Russians, without means of ingress or egress. Their advisers recommended that we lose China and Korea.

We could have, by using any sense in our foreign policy, delayed any showdown with Russia for many years, perhaps a generation or more.

THE EUROPEAN DEFENSE SITUATION

Mr. President, in September 1949 the junior Senator from Nevada stated that according to the experts, including one of the greatest generals in France, it would cost from $50,000,000,000 to $100,000,000,000 and would take from 12 to 15 years to arm Europe for a decent defense against Russia, if she started to roll across Europe. At that time the junior Senator from Nevada said the best estimates indicated that it could mean a 20-year war.

Mr. President, the former French Premier, Paul Reynaud, says now that the "situation today in Europe is worse than in 1939."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a Washington Post dispatch dated July 21, 1950, a statement by Paul Reynaud.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REYNAUD SAYS EUROPEAN PERIL IS WORSE NOW THAN IN 1939

LONDON, July 20.—Former French Premier Paul Reynaud said today "the situation in Europe today is worse than in 1939."

Reynaud, who arrived here by air for a meeting of the united Europe movement, warned that "an aggressor" could drive westward across Europe to the English Channel without hindrance.

He said only fear of the atomic bomb acted as a deterrent against such aggression.

"We shall have to be very careful," he said.

TELL THE FOLKS THE TRUTH

Mr. MALONE. Now, Mr. President, the junior Senator from Nevada is not backing away from a 20-year war. If that is necessary, let us have it. But let us tell the American people the truth. The American people still are not being told the truth. It may also be remembered that on the floor of the Senate, in speaking during the debate on March 4 and 5, 1948, when the $17,000,000,000 program was advocated by the great Mr. Bevin, of England, after the great General Marshall had put a little paragraph of four or five lines in his Harvard speech, hardly knowing what they mean. Mr. Bevin, in England, took it on the first bounce, and within 30 days told us what it was going to cost us. That was very fast work, indicating that it was a prepared statement.

OBJECTIVES OF ECA CONFUSED

Mr. President, we went into this thing with our eyes wide open. We said it was to stop communism, to rehabilitate industry, and to feed hungry people. We said all that in one paragraph and to try to make some sense out of it was to be accused of helping Stalin. The mere fact that it helped to arm Stalin for world war III was not important to the State Department. The junior Senator from Nevada said at that time, "Let us break it down." That it is impossible to talk about feeding hungry people, stopping communism, and rehabilitating industry in one paragraph, in one breath. To do that merely sets us up for an unwilling victim of a great propagandist machine—one of the greatest propaganda machines that was ever built in any country—the State Department.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Nevada has had some experience in rehabilitating industry, so he took occasion to go into Europe, particularly to the ECA countries, and look into this industrial rehabilitation that was said to be needed. He went to the Ruhr, with its coal mines and its steel mills; to Frankfurt, with its chemical plants; to Birmingham, England, with its steel and coal mines. He examined also the industries of other countries.

When the junior Senator from Nevada returned from that trip he suggested, "Let us break it down. Let us determine the area. Let us name the nations which we must currently protect for our own ultimate safety." Only the President of the United States could do that, because he is charged by the Constitution with the duty of fixing foreign policy. Congress cannot fix foreign policy. Let him name the nations, after consultation with his National Defense Secretary and his Secretary of State, who should be entirely familiar with the weapons of offense and defense available to this country; let him name the nations of the world—in Europe, in Asia, in Africa, in addition to those in the Western Hemisphere whose integrity today is important to our ultimate safety.

THE MONROE DOCTRINE

Then, Mr. President, after that determination is made, let us spread the Monroe Doctrine which has been in effect for 126 years and which kept us out of a major war for 75 years. The Monroe Doctrine declared in effect that an attempt by any nation to extend its system of government into the Western Hemisphere would constitute an overt act against the United States of America. It would have been easy to extend that doctrine to cover nations whose areas and whose integrity are important to our ultimate safety.

Let us build a national defense organization, spearheaded by an Air Corps, so that every nation in the world will know that we can enforce the Monroe Doctrine and enforce the policy we adopt.

BUILD DEFENSE ORGANIZATION—SPEARHEADED BY AN AIR CORPS

Mr. President, while the junior Senator from Nevada is on that subject, at that moment there were two reports available to the President of the United States and to the Congress. What were they? The President appointed one aviation committee, and Congress appointed another. They both rendered their reports, and they were both good reports. They agreed that an expenditure of $16,800,000,000 over a period of 5 years should be made. To do what? To provide a striking force of 35,000 planes. More than half that time has expired, and what do we find? We find the President, up to 90 days ago, objecting to a 70-group Air Force. We find him cutting down on appropriations which Congress had made, with no idea of where we are going, what we are going to defend, and no specific information ever leaked out, so far as I know, to the American people as to what we would fight about and what was necessary for our own ultimate safety in the entire world.

TIME TO TELL THE TRUTH

So, Mr. President, we are now getting ready for a 100-years war, according to our planners. We are getting ready to protect the entire world by police action. Was it not the time to tell the American people the truth when we debated the Marshall plan in March 1948?

FEED HUNGRY PEOPLE—LOAN TO PRIVATE INDUSTRY

Let me go on with the other two objectives which the junior Senator from Nevada mentioned at that time. First, let us name the nations and know what we are doing, and let us build a national defense organization to enforce our policies.

The second thing was to feed the hungry people within the area important to us—emergency-hungry people, to the extent that we can without injuring our economy, not all the hungry people in the world, because in China, India, and many other areas the people have been hungry for 5,000 years. They have lived up to the food supply and died off to it for a long time.

The third thing, Mr. President, is rehabilitating industry. Let us take a billion dollars, the junior Senator from Nevada said at that time, March 4–5, 1948, and put it into the World Bank and see how far it will go in loaning money to specific private industries within the same area, under RFC rules. Do not loan an Englishman, a Greek, or a Frenchman money on less stringent terms than it would be loaned to a GI in this country.

Loan it on security. The RFC was created to take less security than a private bank loan, but let us take the security we can get. Had we followed that policy, we would not have loaned a billion dollars in 5 years, in my humble opinion.

PRIVATE INDUSTRY DID NOT WANT GIFTS

I saw the industries. The proprietors of most of them took the attitude of a steel man in Birmingham, England. I went through his steel plant as one of the plants inspected. He was very proud of his improvements. He had invested $12,000,000—£3,000,000—in new improvements. I said, "Where did you get the money—from the Bank of England?" He said, "Oh, no. I got it from local banks."

JUST KEEP OUT OF MY HAIR

I said, "Do you not want Marshall plan money?"

He said, "I just want them to keep out of my hair."

That was the general impression all over England and all over the rest of the world where nations wanted to maintain private industry.

To go on with this dispatch, Mr. President, it contains some very good thoughts which the American people would do well to ponder. I read further:

> This sort of thinking may be right or it may be wrong. The important thing is that it dominates men in policy-shaping posts here—the political and military planners. They don't expect total war with Russia now. But they expect fringe warfare to go on sporadically for a long time—maybe all our lives.
> Remember the moods of the capital are often mercurial. Things could happen to alter this mood.

That is something which many people have hoped for for a long time. It is the Washington atmosphere. Nowhere else could such warped thinking dominate a government. I read further:

> Another expert calls the program "enforcing a Pax Trumana." He says, "Its the same sort of world police job Rome had centuries ago—and Britain had in the 1800's."
> That Pax Trumana—not the Korean war—is back of the President's starter request for $10,000,000,000 and war powers, his aides say. The military estimated Korean war needs at less than $5,000,000,000, it's understood.

SIPHON OF WAGES THROUGH TAXES

Mr. President, another item in the Wall Street Journal of July 24, an Associated Press dispatch this morning, speaks of draining off excess buying, through taxes. Well, Mr. President, I remember when that idea popped up under the spenders of this administration. The idea was that when we raised a man's wages, we should raise his taxes and drain them off into the Treasury again so that we could again raise wages—the excess being the amount we raised his wages, so that he would not be a threat to the purchasing power of the community. That is a great idea, Mr. President. I should like to have time to follow through and see where we land with that kind of an idea.

COLONIAL PROJECTS—AFRICAN SLAVES

Mr. President, in a dispatch in the New York Journal of Commerce this morning there is an outline headed "Colonial Project Pushed by British in Many Areas." It goes on to give an outline of projects which the British are backing in Africa, long-range projects, to build up the income of the Empire.

That subject was discussed by the junior Senator from Nevada on this floor approximately 3 weeks ago with reference to furnishing the money which is being expended in Africa and in the Far East, to do what, Mr. President? To divide the Negro residents of Africa into slave divisions for the empire-minded nations—England, France, Belgium, and the Netherlands.

In San Francisco we said that these small slave nations would receive help from the United Nations. In four and a half short years we changed around, and we are now backing Negro slavery in Africa and Chinese and Malayan slavery in the Far East.

DO NOT NEED A RAISE IN TAXES BUT NEED ECONOMY AND CAREFUL WARTIME SPENDING

Mr. President, in closing, I want to reaffirm the opinion of the junior Senator from Nevada that we do not need a tax increase at this time. What we need to do is to review the budget and examine the things we have been doing, forgetting, for the time being, the argument that the ECA or the Marshall plan never did help our economy, never did figure in our ultimate safety, but it did establish industries in those European areas to compete with our own industries through the free-trade policy established by the administration.

But let us forget that part of it for now. We are interested in winning the war. One hundred and twenty percent is the average rate of recovery of those nations, if we wish to call it recovery, over the 1937 industrial index.

We have $3,000,000,000 already appropriated to be expended during the next 12 months. To do what? To raise industrial peacetime capacity of those countries even higher. In the face of war, let us take the $3,000,000,000 and at least subtract that amount of money from the $10,000,000,000 requested.

We shall find much more to make up the entire estimated $10,000,000,000 needed.

FIVE BILLION DOLLARS, NOT TEN BILLION DOLLARS, NEEDED FOR KOREAN WAR

As is well known, and as is mentioned in dispatches this morning, $10,000,000,000 is not needed for the Korean war. The armed services estimate that probably less than $5,000,000,000 will be needed.

It is easy to find the $5,000,000,000 without adding to the taxes of an already overburdened population of the United States of America. As has been well shown through two world wars, once a tax is put on the books it is never repealed. It is just another burden to the taxpayer and we find additional peacetime uses for the money, once the emergency is ended.

Mr. President, tomorrow the junior Senator from Nevada will show additional money already appropriated and which can be made available for the national defense needs of this Nation, without raising taxes on an already overburdened taxpayer, and everybody is taxed directly or indirectly, close to the breaking point.

TEMPORARY WITHDRAWAL OF REPORT ON LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

Mr. MUNDT obtained the floor.

Mr. FLANDERS. I should like unanimous consent that the Senator may yield to me without losing his right to the floor. Will the Senator ask for unanimous consent that he may yield to me without his losing the floor?

Mr. MUNDT. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Vermont provided it does not jeopardize my right to the floor. I do not know what the Senator from Vermont has in mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from South

Dakota yielding to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. McFARLAND. For what purpose is the unanimous consent requested?

Mr. FLANDERS. It is to take up a resolution now lying on the table, which reads:

Whereas Report No. 2108, entitled "State Department Employee Loyalty Investigation" as printed and distributed on July 21, differs from the report submitted to the Senate on July 20 in certain important respects, particularly being called on the cover sheet a Report of the Committee; and

Whereas it does not appear that the Foreign Relations Committees has adopted the report; and

Whereas a false impression of the status of this report will be spread abroad by the cover which has been substituted since it was received by this body: Therefore be it

Resolved, That said Report No. 2108 be at once withdrawn from distribution until the cover be replaced to agree with that covering the report as submitted.

Mr. McFARLAND. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield so that I may address an inquiry to the minority leader?

Mr. MUNDT. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Tennessee, provided I do not lose my right to the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. On Friday afternoon, when we were making no progress at all with the pending business before the Senate, namely the appropriation bill, I made the suggestion that we devote at least 2 hours a day to the consideration of the unfinished business. Objection was made. Later on it was suggested that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] was being called out of town, or some other good reason was stated, and that he would not have the opportunity to make the address that he wanted to make to the Senate. As I recall, I suggested to the Senator from Michigan that we meet at 11 o'clock today, to give him the opportunity to make his address, and I suggested further that after he had concluded his address we could proceed to the consideration of the bill before the Senate, which had not been more than referred to for 2 or 3 days. The result was that we made an agreement. I find no record of it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I am rather astonished that the RECORD should show no reference to it. The agreement was made in the open. It was made on the floor. There is no record of it. Now I find that the whole day is to be taken up with speeches instead of consideration of the appropriation bill.

If the Senator from South Dakota will indulge me a little further, I should like to say that appropriations for our Government, especially at this time, are very important. They are all in one bill, under a scheme that was suggested by Representative CANNON and agreed to by the House and the Senate. We must pass the appropriation bill. The Committee on Appropriations has done its duty. It has had the bill before the Senate for weeks. The bill has been before the Senate as the unfinished business for about 2 weeks. We have gotten practically nowhere. I want to know what has happened to our agreement of Friday.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, there is no one in the Senate for whom the Senator from Nebraska has greater admiration or love than for the distinguished senior Senator from Tennessee, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

I am sure if the distinguished Senator will examine the RECORD he will find that we did not enter into an agreement. We found that there were so many speeches still to be made that it would take at least all day Friday to complete those speeches.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] had to wait until Monday because of that.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then I proposed the agreement. I have carried out my end of it. It was proposed and accepted that at 12 o'clock today the Senate should take up consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, much as I think of my good friend from Nebraska, and much as I have enjoyed hearing the words he used in connection with me, I do not enjoy making an agreement with him and having that agreement passed by. The Senator has passed it by. The Senator made that agreement. It has been carried out to the letter so far as I am concerned. The Senator from Michigan has made his speech. I think we should go on with the pending business.

Mr. President, is the acting majority leader controlling the appropriation bill? If he is, I shall be glad to sit down. I shall be glad to turn it over to him.

Mr. McFARLAND. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. The minority leader is constantly calling on the Senator from Arizona to make a statement. I want the appropriation bill to be passed. It ought to be passed. We ought not to sit here day after day and week after week without doing anything about it. We have the bill before the Senate. We are doing nothing about it. We have passed hardly a smidgen of it. We have passed a few items. We have had hundreds of amendments offered to it. I want to know whether or not we shall do anything about it. If we are not going to pass the bill, it ought to be sent back to the committee. Certainly the committee ought not to be placed in the position, after spending hour after hour, day after day, week after week, and month after month considering the bill, of having the Senate do nothing about it.

I want to disavow any neglect of duty on my part. I have been here every day. Although I have been ill, I have been here on my feet every day. I have done the best I could. I have done all I could to not waste time in trying to get the bill through. We have been making no headway at all. We could do as much in a half hour of uninterrupted work as we have done on the bill in the past 2 weeks.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield?

Mr. MUNDT. With the same understanding.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to make an observation. I am in full accord with the intention and purpose of the distinguished senior Senator from Tennessee, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee. I was sincere when I made my remark about the affection I have for the distinguished Senator. If the Senator will examine the RECORD, he will see that no agreement was entered into relative to a limitation of time, or when the Senate was to return to the consideration of the appropriation bill. We said that one more speech was to be made on Friday, and it was carried over until Monday. I said that I would do my very best to work out a unanimous-consent agreement along the line suggested by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is another remarkable thing about it.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to finish my comments, if the Senator does not mind.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator may make any observation he wishes, but if it prevents the appropriation bill from being passed——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, once again I will say that I have always made it a practice to respect my elders, and I shall not depart from it in this instance, especially with respect to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee. To be perfectly frank, there was no agreement entered into relative to a limitation of time. The junior Senator from Nebraska has tried diligently to get a limitation of time, and the acting majority leader knows that to be the fact. I wish to remind the distinguished Senator from Tennessee that the report on the disloyalty investigation was injected into the consideration of the appropriation bill by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. Naturally, it is the privilege of any committee to do that. That is all right.

The report was made by the chairman of the subcommittee. Other Senators engaged the chairman in colloquy, a number talked about the report, and on Friday other Senators desired to discuss it. The business at hand at that particular time was the report, and it is still the business at hand, because many charges were made which are going to be refuted, and Senators have a right to refute them.

Mr. President, I should like to say to the distinguished acting majority leader that I have done my level best to reach an agreement for limitation of debate on chapter VII of the appropriation bill, which is the pending chapter. I believe that after the Senator from South Dakota shall have concluded, if we proceed with that chapter, we can finish it, but if it is impossible to finish it today, I am satisfied we will be able to get a limitation on debate on that chapter, at least, of 10 minutes to each Senator who may desire to speak.

There are two more speeches to be delivered on the so-called report. I believe they should be carried over and an attempt made to work out an unanimous-consent agreement for tomorrow on the next chapter of the appropriation bill. I shall be glad to work with the acting majority leader on that basis.

So after the distinguished Senator from South Dakota shall have concluded, if the acting majority leader would care to proceed with the chapter of the bill dealing with Interior Department appropriations, and propose a unanimous consent that even though it is not finished tonight, there should be a limitation of 10 minutes to each Senator on each amendment, in that chapter from now until it is concluded, I believe such a unanimous-consent agreement can be made.

I may just as well tell the acting majority leader now that after that chapter has been concluded tomorrow, the junior Senator from Wisconsin would like to make a few remarks, and possibly the senior Senator from Missouri would likewise like to make some remarks, on the report, which is now really the pending question.

I do not care to go into the discussion of another unanimous-consent request, but after those speeches are concluded, no matter what chapter of the appropriation bill is taken up, I believe we can get a limitation of debate for that chapter, and I believe we can get a limitation for chapter V, perhaps with the exception of the amendment affecting the cancer and heart items, which I believe Senators on the other side desire to discuss more fully. It is immaterial to me when the Federal Security chapter is considered, except, of course, I should like to see the entire bill disposed of. We can proceed soon, I am sure, with the chapter on the Interior Department appropriations. I want the acting majority leader and the distinguished Senator from Tennessee to know that I am doing my level best to arrive at a decision on the appropriation bill.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield?

Mr. MUNDT. With the same understanding, I yield.

Mr. McFARLAND. I am most anxious that we proceed with the consideration on the appropriation bill. It is very important. The distinguished Senator from Tennessee has sat here very patiently, and it is rather out of the ordinary for 2 or 3 days to be spent on other matters in the middle of the consideration of an appropriation bill.

In order to try to make a little progress, Mr. President, I wish to propound a unanimous-consent request, but first, I should like to ask whether other Senators desire to make speeches on the subject the Senator from South Dakota is about to discuss. Is the junior Senator from Wisconsin going to speak this evening?

Mr. WHERRY. No; I have already said that, after the address of the Senator from South Dakota, if the Senator desires to present a unanimous-consent request that the Senate proceed with the pending question, which is chapter VII of the appropriation bill, and that debate on amendments shall be limited to not to exceed 10 minutes for each Senator, I shall not object. I state to the acting majority leader that if it is late this evening when that chapter is concluded, tomorrow there will be at least two speeches to be made on the report, and until they are out of the way it will be impossible to get a unanimous-consent agreement on the next chapter, but when they are out of the way I believe that can be done.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, in order at least to propound a unanimous-consent request, I ask unanimous consent that upon the conclusion of the address of the Senator from South Dakota the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business, House bill 7786, and that debate on each amendment shall be limited to 20 minutes, the time to be controlled, respectively, by the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] and the opponent of the committee amendment or the proponent of any other amendment, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I will agree with that, with one exception. I think the limitation should run to the individual Senators rather than to the amendments. I do not anticipate any long debate on the Interior Department appropriation bill amendments at all, and if the Senator will modify the request to limit the time to 10 minutes to each Senator, I shall be glad to agree to the request.

Mr. McFARLAND. The only difficulty is that Senators could rise and talk for 10 minutes each, and use all the time. I do not see how for the remainder of the day there could be any harm in at least agreeing to as much as I have proposed, in order that we may proceed for the short time that will be left.

Mr. WHERRY. I am satisfied that if the distinguished Senator will accept my suggestion we can proceed with the appropriation bill, and it will not take any longer, except that if more than one Senator desires to speak on any particular amendment, he would have the opportunity. I doubt if that will happen.

Mr. McFARLAND. The time is passing, and I accept the suggestion, and add this much to the request, that all remarks shall be germane to the amendment under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I do not care to disrupt any possible agreement between the majority and minority leaders, but I understood that I had a tentative agreement that the agreement would also contain a provision that at 12 o'clock tomorrow, if we do not finish the particular chapter now pending, the junior Senator from Wisconsin might have 40 minutes to discuss the matter he had planned to discuss.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I should like to get this agreement concluded for today, and then we will try to reach one for tomorrow.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am not sure if I understood. Is the request to extend over until tomorrow?

Mr. McFARLAND. It is only for today. It depends on the senior Senator from Tennessee. Probably we could proceed to 6 o'clock or some such hour, if there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, in order to solve this situation, if the Senator would like to modify his unanimous-consent request further, in the event that chapter VII is not concluded——

Mr. McFARLAND. I understand it can be concluded in 10 minutes.

Mr. WHERRY. Then why does not the Senator continue with chapter VII, and when the consideration of that chapter is concluded, propose another agreement for tomorrow?

Mr. McFARLAND. Surely we can agree on our proceedings for an hour today. I will propound a unanimous-consent agreement for tomorrow. I understand it will take only a few minutes to conclude chapter VII.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President——

Mr. WHERRY. Just a moment. If chapter VII shall be concluded and another chapter is taken up today, it will be satisfactory with me that the Senate remain in session until 6 o'clock, but I tell the distinguished Senator that a new unanimous-consent request will have to be proposed for the session of tomorrow, and that unanimous-consent request should include, if it is proposed, that 40 minutes be allotted to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. McFARLAND. I should like to accommodate the Senator——

Mr. WHERRY. Let me finish my suggestion. That the Senator from Missouri will want at least 30 minutes, and that is all that would be required tomorrow, until we finish with the appropriation bill tomorrow. I should be glad to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement to follow that course, and then, when we get these two chapters out of the way, we can take up another unanimous-consent request. I think that by following that course we can accomplish what is desired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I do not want to hold the Senate up indefinitely, but I should like to understand the request. Would the Senator have any objection to modifying his unanimous-consent request to contain a provision that at 12 o'clock tomorrow the junior Senator from Wisconsin may have a period of 40 minutes and the senior Senator from Missouri have a period of 30 minutes to address the Senate?

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I want one agreement made at a time, an agreement for today, as requested by the Senator from Nebraska, then I am going to propose a unanimous-consent agreement for tomorrow which will include the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I have one more unanimous-consent request to make. Will the Senator from South Dakota yield to me for that purpose?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate convenes tomorrow it convene at 11 o'clock a. m.; that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY] may speak for a period of 40 minutes, and that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] may speak for a period of 20 minutes.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, 30 minutes.

Mr. McFARLAND. That the Senator from Missouri may speak for 30 minutes; that thereafter, after a quorum call, the Senate proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bill, and that until 5 o'clock the debate on each amendment be limited to 10 minutes for each Senator, and that the debate must be germane to the amendment under consideration.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I object to any kind of limitation of any kind or character on debate.

Mr. McFARLAND. Does the Senator object if I remove the provision respecting limitation and simply leave it that the debate must be germane to the amendment under discussion?

Mr. LANGER. I object to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] being limited or the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY] being limited. The Senate is a place where we can debate at length. If a Senator wishes to talk for only 10 minutes, very well. I object to Senators being limited in debate.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota withhold his objection?

Mr. LANGER. I withhold my objection.

Mr. McCARTHY. I may say that I am sure I will be able to complete my remarks in less than 40 minutes.

Mr. LANGER. Very well; then we can proceed with the unfinished business. I object.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I assure the Senator I can complete my remarks within 30 minutes.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, what was the ruling on the previous unanimous-consent request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That has already been agreed to.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona propound his unanimous-consent request again with the provisions that the Senator from Wisconsin may address the Senate beginning at 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow, and that thereafter the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] may proceed? I assure the Senator from North Dakota that I shall not take more than 40 minutes. I am sure that will cover the objection by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I also assure the Senator from North Dakota that I shall not speak for more than 30 minutes.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I object.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I wish to thank the Senator from South Dakota for having yielded to me. I am sorry I took up so much of his time.

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, as was so well brought out a few minutes ago by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. McKELLAR], by the acting majority leader [Mr. McFARLAND], and by the minority leader [Mr. WHERRY], the Senate has now spent about 3 days discussing conditions and situations described in the so-called report of the Tydings subcommittee conducting the investigation of communism in Government. I have for some time been thinking of addressing the Senate on a subject closely connected therewith, but out of deference to the Appropriations Committee have kept my notes on the subject in my desk in the hope that we could proceed with the appropriation bill.

However, when the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] elected to make this question the matter of business before the Senate by filing his committee report in the middle of consideration of the appropriations bill, I think the Senate quite appropriately has decided to discuss the many ramifications of the report and the conditions upon which the report is based, because it is doubtful whether anything is more important to Americans today than bringing a quick and victorious conclusion to the war in Korea. Aside from that, nothing else is more important, I think, than to do something about the alarming situation which confronts us on the home front due to the abundance of Communists creeping around in this country endeavoring to sabotage the war effort and to destroy the freedoms of America, and, in fact, unless we take action on the home front to safeguard ourselves against Communist treachery we shall undoubtedly squander many American lives needlessly in Korea.

Let me say in the first place that I associate myself completely with the remarks made by the minority leader, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] when he said there were three things the Senate should be doing mighty fast in view of the situation which confronts us. The first is to have printed the entire hearings which were held and all the testimony which was given to the subcommittee headed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] on the problem of Communists in Government not a carefully sifted and censored reprint of the hearings, but the hearings in toto; on the theory that the American public is entitled to know at least on what evidence the subcommittee based its strange and bizarre report. I associate myself first of all with that point of view.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MUNDT. Yes, I yield for a question.

Mr. McCARTHY. Does the Senator agree with me that it would be very important to the Senate at this time to find out just who took upon himself the responsibility to emasculate the report of the hearings and cut out certain sections, and to include others? We found out this morning that 40 pages of remarks and questions by the Senator from Massachusetts were removed from the record without his knowledge or the knowledge, apparently, of any members of the committee. I do not even know that the majority members knew that those remarks were removed. Will the Senator agree that at this time we should find out who is responsible for this unusual maneuvering in the committee room?

Mr. MUNDT. Yes; I think we should get as much information as we possibly can. Personally I regret exceedingly that we have reports presented to the United States Senate which are anonymous in authorship. I think it is unfair, I think it is unjust, I think it is unsenatorial that we carry the concept of secrecy to that degree. But at all events I believe the country is now entitled, and the Senate is now entitled, to the full transcript of the hearings before the committee. If I correctly understood the two members of the subcommittee who engaged in a colloquy this afternoon, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McMAHON], they are now in agreement on the point that the hearings should now be printed in full.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to make the situation crystal clear?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. Each member of the committee has a complete set of the typewritten transcripts of the testimony. It might have been in the possession of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] as well as the other Senators on the subcommittee. All the testimony, I have been informed, has been in the hands of each Senator on the subcommittee. If any part of the executive testimony has not been printed, I think it would be well that it be completely printed. I am sure that any of it is available to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY] or to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT], because, of course, it is in the hands of all the members of the subcommittee. If the Senator finds any part of the testimony that is not printed—and I am not aware of it—my copy of the transcript is open to the Senator from Wisconsin, to the Senator from South Dakota, or to any other Senator.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, I take it the Senator from Connecticut is not questioning the integrity of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] when he told the Senate an hour or so ago that the printed copy was not complete. The Senator from Connecticut is not quarreling with that statement of the Senator from Massachusetts, is he?

Mr. McMAHON. I know only what was developed by the Senator from Massachusetts earlier today, that there were some pages in the typewritten transcript that do not seem to have been printed in this very thick compilation of the testimony. So far as the Senator from Connecticut is concerned my copy is available to anyone. I think it can all be put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, or reprinted as an appendix of the record of the hearings.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, we all find ourselves in agreement now, I take it then, that the public is entitled to the full transcript, whether it has been printed or not printed.

Mr. McMAHON. No matter how immaterial it may be.

Mr. MUNDT. No matter how immaterial it may be, nor how material either.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator does not say that the printed volume is the full transcript of the hearings, does he?

Mr. MUNDT. No. I think the Senator agrees with the Senator from Massachusetts that a part of it has been deleted or censored or deliberately omitted.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am not talking about the report. I am talking about the hearings. I believe the hearings are the important part of it. I suppose the committee has jurisdiction with respect to the number of reports to be printed, and what it shall do with them. The Senator from South Dakota said he was in complete agreement with other Senators about the matter.

The junior Senator from Nebraska feels, as he stated on the floor last Friday night, that the complete hearing should be printed, the executive hearings and the open hearings, without comments such as have been made by some of the clerks of the committee which, I understand, have not been authorized in all instances. I feel that all the hearings should be printed so the Members of the Senate may have copies, and that other copies may be available so that those interested may be permitted to interpret the testimony as they see fit, rather than as the hearings are interpreted by the committee. Does the Senator from South Dakota agree with me on that point?

Mr. MUNDT. That is precisely what I have been advocating. It is precisely what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] advocated; and if I correctly interpreted the remarks of the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON], that is what he also feels should be done. If I am in error as to that, I shall be glad to be corrected.

Mr. WHERRY. If that be the case, I am quite satisfied that it will take the adoption of a Senate resolution to accomplish that purpose. I think the hearings not only should be made available to all Members of the Senate, but they should also be made available to the public.

So I should like to ask the Senator whether he or any other Senator who would care to do so would join me in urging the adoption of such a resolution, so that a complete copy of all the hearings, whether held in open or in executive session, may be available for the use and convenience of all Senators.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield for a question.

Mr. FERGUSON. I wish to advise the Senator that I join in such a move, as I suggested earlier today. I referred to the statement in the New York Herald Tribune that not only should all the proceedings be made available in printed form, but also all the records of the committee should be made available in such form.

Mr. MCMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. MCMAHON. I was not aware that my remarks needed any interpretation; I thought they were very plain on their face.

I wish to say for the RECORD that 1,484 pages of testimony are reproduced in the green volume which we have before us; and that statement is not made in derogation of my belief that if there are further pages, such as the ones the Senator from Massachusetts has mentioned, they, too, should be printed.

Mr. MUNDT. Very well, Mr. President. I also agree with the Senator from Nebraska on his second point, namely, that since we have had a report which is strictly partisan in nature—with three Democrats saying the investigation was full and fair and complete and that no Communists were found in any jobs in the Government, but with the two Republican members of the subcommittee refusing to associate themselves with that type of report, and calling it a whitewash, therefore the American people are entitled to have come from the investigation something which is a little more significant, objective, meaningful, and helpful than a report which no one seems to have written, a report which everyone connected with seems to wish to disavow, and a report which satisfies positively no one in the country. I join the Senator from Nebraska in his position in that respect, Mr. President.

So, Mr. President, I submit that the Senate could do little of more importance or urgency than to adopt a resolution establishing a strictly bipartisan investigative committee, composed of a membership to be equally divided between the Republican and the Democratic Parties, a committee whose members would be acceptable and satisfactory to both the Republican and the Democratic Parties, and who would have authority to see the records and search the files, access to which was denied to the Tydings investigating committee, and with a mandate to bring back to the American people a report on the important question of Communists in our Government, and to bring in the report at the earliest possible date.

I think it is a disgrace that an investigation of this importance has to end up in a wide-open case of political bickering, with no one being satisfied with the results, and even with the great Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate itself strenuously disavowing any connection with the report and refusing to permit it to come out as though it had been accepted by the full committee and transmitted officially by it to the United States Senate.

I think the situation in that connection is well described in a clipping which I took from the New York Times of today, reading as follows:

GROUP BACKS MCCARTHY—KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS CHAPTER VOTES TO PROTEST DENUNCIATION OF SENATOR

Delegates to the fifty-third annual meeting of the Long Island Chapter of the Knights of Columbus voted yesterday afternoon to protest the denunciation by a Senate subcommittee majority of Senator JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY'S charges of communism in the State Department. The meeting was held at the Knights of Columbus Institute, 81 Hanson Place, Brooklyn.

The protest will deplore the stand of the three Democrats on the Foreign Relations Committee subcommittee headed by Senator MILLARD E. TYDINGS, Democrat, of Maryland. It will go by telegram today and call for further investigation.

The delegates, of whom there were 150, also voted confidence in Senator MCCARTHY and to urge passage of the Mundt-Ferguson Communist control bill by the Senate and the companion bill introduced in the House by Representative RICHARD M. NIXON, of California.

I mention that simply to indicate that here is a group of typical, fine Americans who protest against ending the investigation on the note on which it presently has been ended.

Mr. President, I now wish to address myself primarily to the sentiment expressed by the Senator from Maryland in his concluding remarks, when he presented this strange report to the Senate. He said, in concluding:

Mr. President, there are the facts for the Senators to ponder. I have no remedy to suggest.

Mr. President, the problem before us is extremely serious. We have a war going on abroad against communism, while we have Communists roaming around in this country, under cover, infiltrating this mighty government, engaging in espionage and sabotage. Yet, the chairman of the investigating committee, who also is the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, has said to the United States Senate:

I have no remedy to suggest.

He also said:

I return the matter to the hands and the consciences of the Members of the Senate as we think of men and events in one of the most critical hours in the history of this Republic and of the freedom of mankind on this planet.

Mr. President, it is to that text that I shall address myself, because I think that we, as the Senate of the United States, have a mandate to find a remedy and not simply to throw in the sponge supinely by saying, "I turn the matter over to the United States Senate," at a time when our American boys abroad who are fighting Communists are poorly equipped and are badly outnumbered, in a war at a time this administration has prevented any legislation from being passed so as to give these fighting men assurance that their home front is being protected against Communist treachery, espionage, and sabotage.

Mr. President, the Senate must measure up to the challenge on the home front presented by the war in Korea.

I, therefore, also wish to associate myself most emphatically with the third point made the other day by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], the minority leader, when he said that in addition to having all the reports printed and in addition to setting up a bipartisan group to make a fearless and impartial investigation into the matter of Communist infiltration into Government, the Congress should immediately enact proposed legislation known as Senate bill 2311, the so-called Mundt-Ferguson-Johnston bill, to build up controls over the entrance into the Government of persons who would engage in subversive activities.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. After all, the situation now is that it is not sufficient to discharge from the Government service any Communists who are in it, but we must consider ways and means of keeping Communists from entering this Government, as they attempt to enter it.

Mr. MUNDT. Precisely; the time has come when we must do something about Communists at the entrance gates, as well as the Communists who already are in the Government service.

All the charges and political bickering and countercharges of the last few days have dealt with the problem of whether or not we should do anything to get rid of the Communists now in our Government or to assess the responsibiilty for putting into office Communists who already have entered the Government service. However, now I am asking the Senate, and particularly the majority party and the administration, and also the members of the committee who brought in this so-called report, what they propose to do to bar the Communists at the entrance gates today and tomorrow and the next day, while we are having a war with communism in Korea.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Is it not also a fact that the report of J. Edgar Hoover, the head of the FBI, reveals that there are more than 55,000 Communists in the United States?

Mr. MUNDT. Not only is that true, but the report of J. Edgar Hoover also discloses that for every Communist in the United States, there are perhaps 10 persons who are controlled and contaminated and directed by the Communists. So, Mr. President, in the United States today there are perhaps more than 550,000 persons who are ready, knowingly or unknowingly, wittingly or unwittingly, to engage in any kind of sabotage or espionage activity, as they may be directed from Moscow, and with those directions transmitted through the Communist headquarters in New York. Up to this late hour, however, the Democratic Policy Committee of the Senate keeps pigeonholed the only bill now pending in Congress which proposes a disclosure of who those Communists are, and proposing to do something about curtailing their treacherous activities. It is to that text that I wish to address myself.

Mr. President, in his speech, the Senator from Maryland said he thinks there is nothing we can do about it. He asked the question, "What are we going to do about it?"

This afternoon I propose to discuss the answer to that question.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I am happy to yield.

Mr. MARTIN. Will it not be most difficult to get Communists out of the various industries of the country, while we are preparing munitions for war, and also will it not be most difficult to get Communists out of our transportation systems, where they can make it very difficult to transport soldiers across the continent and across the seas, unless we can rest almost assured that all the Communists are out of governmental positions in Washington?

Mr. MUNDT. Not only will it be difficult, but completely impossible, because the FBI alone cannot do that job, unless we enact legislation which requires the Communists to register themselves or make it illegal when they fail to do so. We are not talking about something that may happen in the future.

Let me read a statement from the front page of this morning's Washington Post, which I think would be interesting reading to me if I were a member of a Democratic policy committee trying to pigeonhole a bill which proposes to take some action about communism in America. I am not asking those Democratic Members, Mr. President, to vote for this proposed legislation; I am asking them to give the Senate the right to vote. I am asking them simply to take their foot out of the door jamb. I am asking them, in time of war, to give the Members of the United States Senate the right to express themselves on this important measure.

I think the time has come when the American public should be told who it is within this body who declines even now to permit the Senate to vote on a bill which has been endorsed by the American Legion, in its convention, by the Veterans of Foreign Wars, by the Knights of Columbus, by the United States Chamber of Commerce, by the National Education Association, by the Daughters of the American Revolution, and by a great many other organizations. Every Senator has a right to cppose this bill. My friend from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] delivered a speech in opposition to it recently, and that was his privilege. He has a right to offer amendments when the bill comes up on the floor. He has a right to vote against it if he chooses to do so. But aside from the Senator from North Dakota, the only Member of this body who has said anything to indicate that he opposes this measure is the majority leader, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], who succeeded in having the legislation taken off the floor as the pending business, the day I got it taken up. I am not sure, now—and I am not trying to quote the Senator—whether he is going to vote against the bill; but I submit that neither the majority leader nor the policy committee of the Democratic Party, in time of war, has any right in common justice to keep this body from considering legislation demanded by virtually every outstanding patriotic organization in America. Let them stand up like men and be counted, if they want to; that is all right. But let them not by some parliamentary trick try to keep the country from knowing who is for or who is against this anti-Communist legislation, or keep the boys at the front from having the kind of protection they require on the home front in these serious hours.

I started to read an article from the Washington Post of this morning. It appears on the front page, and the heading is, "Train wrecked deliberately, Frisco agent says." It is an Associated Press dispatch, and reads as follows:

> HOLLAND, MO., July 23.—Someone deliberately wrecked a north-bound Frisco passenger train near here early today, killing the engineer, seriously scalding the fireman, and slightly injuring 12 passengers, the carrier's special agent said tonight.
> E. H. Wilson reported that the lock of a switch had been cut—apparently by sawing—and that a signal light which would have shown red had been broken.
> He said the open switch sent the Memphis-to-St. Louis Memphian, traveling at about 50 miles an hour, into a sidetrack.

Mr. President, let me read that again—and I recommend it as serious bedtime reading for the members of the Democratic Policy Committee of the United States Senate:

> He said the open switch sent the Memphis-to-St. Louis Memphian, traveling at about 50 miles an hour, into a sidetrack.

Sabotage is going on in time of war, and unquestionably, in my opinion, such sabotage is planned and instigated by Communists in America as a part of their program to destroy the defense effort and war effort of this country. And still, for political reasons, the Democratic Policy Committee and the majority leader refuse to bring up the one piece of legislation devised to do something about it. I want you to read that again, because we are going to read more about this, Mr. President. Whether a Communist influence was directly or indirectly responsible for this particular wreck is still unknown but it is typical of what we must expect if we do nothing to curb the Communist traitors in this country.

If the Communists can be positive that the Democratic Policy Committee will continue to pigeonhole this bill so long that, before it comes up, we shall be so far along the road to recess or adjournment that both Houses cannot act before the Congress finishes its work, Senators can be sure they will have to read a good many more articles like this in the newspapers, because the present situation is an open sesame to the Communists. It is a wide-open invitation for espionage, sabotage, and destruction. I am going to have more to say about it, Mr. President, than merely this one case. But this one happened to be July 23, which was only yesterday.

The wreck occurred yesterday, and the agents reported that the lock of a switch had been cut, apparently by sawing.

Yes, a disastrous wreck occurred on the Santa Fe not long ago, involving two passenger trains going down the track in the same direction. Mysteriously, portions of the undercarriage of one of them broke down. Was that sabotage? Was that the work of some Communist agent? It might well have been. Certainly there is nothing on the statute books to make Communist agents disclose themselves. Officials of the Santa Fe do not know how many Communist repairmen they have in their yards.

Are men so gullible and naive at this late date when we are fighting communism abroad as to assume that the Communists in America will do nothing to help their associates in Korea? I hope naïveté has not reached that stage on the floor of the United States Senate. We are confronted with a colossal challenge. We cannot correct it by the happy system New Dealers use so often of simply appropriating money. They say "$10,000,000,000, and the job is done." Such an amount is not going to do the job, whether it be $10,000,000,000, $15,000,000,000, or $20,000,000,000, if we permit to crawl around in Government and out of it Communist saboteurs, unknown, untouched, unlabeled, with no law against them, no way to detect them, no way to punish them, nothing to expose them. I do not know that we have billions of dollars enough, Mr. President, to fight a war 5,000 miles away while the Communists at home drive the dagger of tyranny into the backs of those who are trying to support the heroes abroad in the war.

I may say to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, I do not know whether there is anything more important before the United States Senate than trying to find a way, now, to get some kind of promise from the majority leader or the Democratic Policy Committee, that they are going to discontinue "operations road block" insofar as doing something about communism at home is concerned. This operations roadblock is nothing new. It has been going on for a long time. I know the CIO is against the proposed legislation. I know some of our Democratic colleagues are courting the votes of the CIO. I know they hesitate to do anything that the political leaders of the CIO Political Action Committee find unfavorable or undesirable. But, Mr. President, there is something more important in these days than courting the votes of the CIO: It is the problem of defeating communism in Korea and protecting the home front against such sabotage as that referred to in the Washington Post this morning.

Of course, Mr. President, none of us can say positively and with authority that the train wreck I have referred to on the Frisco line or on the Santa Fe or any of the other individual wrecks, explosions, collisions of tugboats, fires, or other acts of violence and destruction which seem to be occurring with increasing regularity and mystery are directly the result of Communist sabotage, or even inspired and motivated by the cunning anti-American propaganda of the Communists in this country. But of this we can all be 100 percent positive and completely sure—unless steps are taken promptly to expose, identify, and curtail the activities of American Communists they will more and more frequently and brazenly be conducting acts of espionage and sabotage to weaken our war effort in Korea and any other hostilities we may be compelled to engage in in order to avert the spread of communism abroad and the collapse of freedom at home.

Mr. President, I read an interesting item in the newspaper for July 20——

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a queston?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. MUNDT. I am glad to yield.

Mr. McMAHON. Of course, the Senator realizes, does he not, that the CIO, to which he has made reference, has been engaged in a very valiant campaign during the past year to drive Communists from its membership? I am sure the Senator from South Dakota shares with me considerable satisfaction at the fine results they have achieved in shedding some of the Communist-inspired gentlemen who were seeking to get control of some of the vital unions.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MUNDT. In a second. The Senator from South Dakota has said in many public addresses that, by and large, he thinks American labor in the past few years has done a better job of ridding its ranks of Communists than have the colleges and universities of the United States, or the motion picture industry, or than has radio and a number of other enterprises and associations.

That does not belie the fact however, that the CIO still has certain Communist-led organizations. Some have been weeded out; some are still there. There are still in the CIO certain persons either controlled or contaminated by the Communists. Nor does it belie the fact that the CIO is officially on record against this proposed legislation, and those Senators who are looking for votes from the CIO hesitate to do the thing they know they should do to support legislation striking at the heart of communism in America.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, does not the Senator believe that the one thing which will help the CIO in its fight against communism in the CIO or in any other labor organization would be Senate bill 2311? Would it not aid them and help them to do the thing they want done in their organization?

Mr. MUNDT. There can be no question in the world about that. Many local labor groups have contacted the junior Senator from South Dakota, complimenting him on his efforts to get this bill passed, and saying it is the best device they know of to complete the job which has been so nobly undertaken to drive Communists out of the labor organizations in this land.

Mr. President, perhaps we can make some progress in this direction. I want my Democratic colleagues to listen to this very carefully. I read an exclusive story published on July 20 in the Washington Post stating that certain Democratic leaders are working on a compromise antisubversive bill embracing some of the features of the controversial Mundt-Ferguson bill. The article says:

> Informed sources say the plan favored by the policy makers would not embrace all of the Republican bill, but probably would be patterned after the less stringent internal security bill passed by the House.

It goes on to say that the Democratic policy committee would meet to consider the problem and that Assistant Attorney General Ford would meet with the policy committee.

Mr. President, I should like to make a comment or two about this strange unorthodox way to pass legislation which we have now reached in the United States Senate. In my 12 years in Washington, some of which were spent in the House and some of which were spent in the Senate, I have always assumed that the best way to get a piece of legislation passed was to introduce it, have it referred to a bipartisan committee always composed of a majority of the party which happens to be in control in that particular branch of the Congress, and to hold public and open hearings at which those in favor and those opposed to the proposed legislation can testify. Finally, there is a roll-call vote of the committee members, and if the bill is approved, a report is issued by the committee in which Republicans and Democrats join. If some member of the committee opposes it, he may file a minority report. That is the way I understood Congress has always operated under our democratic system. That was my understanding of representative government and the legislative process.

On my visit to Russia in 1945, I was escorted to the presidium and I saw a legislative hall twice as large as our Senate Chamber, with loudspeakers and hearing aids, and with beautiful mahogany and rich painting. I learned that all the bills were introduced by a policy committee. They did not have any open hearings. The policy committee of the Politburo would meet and discuss the kind of legislation they wanted, and then they would ram it through.

I hate to think, Mr. President, of ramming through legislation as being the next phase of the New Deal's efforts to destroy the legislative process of Congress in America. I hate to believe that "ramming it through" is the next step by which they will endeavor to establish the autocracy of the Executive in America. I dislike to read in the press that ramming legislation through is a device which will be employed.

But if it is, Mr. President, let me assure my Democratic colleagues that my interest in subversive-control legislation is so great that I shall be happy to support this so-called compromise legislation, provided it is not a compromise with principle, provided it is not a compromise with communism, provided it is not in language which has for its purpose getting the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Knights of Columbus, the American Legion, the United States Chamber of Commerce, and other organizations off the scent and off the trail, and contains only beautiful words which mean nothing—an anti-anti-Communist piece of legislation which speaks against communism, but with nothing to stop it or to curtail it. I shall support no toothless substitute or compromise.

Mr. President, this is not a Republican bill. It happens that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] and I have our names on the bill and have worked on it for the past 3 years. However, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON]—a Democrat—also has his name on it and has worked for it. It happens that there has just entered the Chamber the very distinguished junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] who has worked very thoughtfully and constructively in connection with S. 2311 and has made speeches around the country endorsing it. He is not a Republican. It happens that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] and several other Senators, including the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] support this proposed legislation and have urged its passage. It is not a Republican bill. But if that is why the majority leader continues to sit on the lid in "operation roadblock"—if that is why the Democratic Policy Committee refuses to bring up the bill, let me say that I have consulted today with the junior Senator from Michigan, and he and I are perfectly willing to withdraw our names from the bill and to let it appear only in the name of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON].

We are willing to go further than that, Mr. President. If the Democratic policy committee does not want to have Republicans introduce legislation any more, and if they are going to oppose it by "operation roadblock" if it is introduced by Republicans, we are willing to delete our names from the bill, and I am willing to give the bill to the acting majority leader today and let him introduce it as his bill de novo with the name of the Democratic policy committee on it.

I am sorry, Mr. President, that the idea of ramming legislation through by substituting secret star-chamber proceedings in the policy committee for the open hearings of a legislative committee seems to be the new order of the New Deal. As a minority member I resent it, but I cannot successfully resist it. They can introduce this bill. Let the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] introduce it, or let the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] introduce it, but let us not continue letting down the American boys fighting and dying in Korea while we play party politics at home. This is not a Republican bill, Mr. President. I am perfectly willing to dissociate myself completely from it if the Democratic policy committee will simply advocate the basic concepts and principles involved in the proposed legislation. Senator FERGUSON and I are not concerned with face saving. We are concerned with saving freedom in this era of global conflict.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I wish to take only time enough to say that I join with the Senator from South Dakota in his remarks about removing my name from the bill. As I advised him, I shall be very glad to remove my name from the bill, but I do want to advocate its passage. I want to work for the passage of the bill. I do not want to sacrifice the principles involved in the bill, but, so far as my name being on the bill is concerned, I join the Senator in withdrawing our names from the bill if that is essential to securing action.

Mr. MUNDT. I thank the Senator very much. I was sure the Senator would express that attitude. With him, as with me, this is a matter of principle—not partisan politics.

We are serious, Mr. President, about wanting to do something about the saboteurs, the traitors, and the foreign agents who are working as Communists in this country. We want the Democratic policy committee and the majority leader to know that as of today the time is here either to fish or to cut bait, as we used to say in Isaak Walton League circles out in South Dakota. If what it takes in this present Democratic Congress is to delete the names of Republican sponsors of proposed legislation, then the majority can take our names off this bill and put on it any names they choose.

They can put their own names on the bill. They need not come around, as they have come to me in secret, and ask, "What kind of compromise will you make?" I will answer that in public, Mr. President, because I believe public business should be publicly arrived at. I am against the kind of star-chamber proceedings suggested when the Democratic Policy Committee undertakes the job of one of our legislative committees, when it calls in Peyton Ford of the Attorney General's office, when it conducts its hearings in secret, and then endeavors to ram through a bill which it hopes will hold the support of the Communists, Communist sympathizers, the CIO, synthetic progressives and liberals, bleeding heart sentimentalists, as well as the chambers of commerce, the American Legion in an effort to be everything to all men.

Mr. President, all we ask is that it be an honest bill, that it does not compromise with the basic purposes, the provisions, the prohibitions, and the principles incorporated in Senate bill 2311. We ask that it compel Communists to register. We ask that the registration be public. We ask that the Communists be compelled to identify their front organizations in their literature. We ask that the Communists identify their offices and members by their right names. We ask that the bill compel the Communist Party to make a financial report, just as legitimate parties, like the Republicans and Democratic Parties are compelled to make such reports. We ask that such a bill deny Communists the right to hold an appointive Federal job, under a penalty to be imposed for violations. We ask that it impose such a penalty on the bureaucrat who knowingly hires a Communist as well as upon the Communist who seeks and gets the job. We ask that it deny Communists the right to get Federal passports to travel abroad, to sabotage our foreign affairs and destroy our war effort under official passports. Those are the basic and fundamental principles of this legislation. If they want to put a Democratic label on it, that it is agreeable to us. We will make any required and proper compromise. We will support it if it carries only the names of the members of the Democratic policy committee, or we will join with them in a common effort.

The purposes of S. 2311 are nothing new. Such legislation is not new in our country. The Senator from Michigan, others, and I have been working on it for the last 3 years. A similar piece of legislation, not quite as carefully drawn and not as completely tested, passed the House of Representatives in the Eightieth Congress on a roll call vote of 319 to 58. The Members of Congress who voted for that piece of legislation will vote for this kind of bill. Most of them have been reelected to Congress, Mr. President. This is not something conceived in the dark and written in secrecy, as this proposed compromise apparently is to be brought into being by the heads of the Democratic Policy Committee. Why do the politicians of the Policy Committee want to write legislation, I ask, instead of the Military Affairs Committee or the Committee on the Judiciary? Are they thinking, sir, of security, or are they thinking of the next election? We are told the Policy Committee intends to write the bill. That is another step down the road toward the presidium procedure that I saw so nauseatingly revealed to me at Moscow in 1945, but if we must submit to that in order to have anti-Communist legislation enacted, then submit to that we shall.

S. 2311 has been studied for 3 years by the Committee on the Judiciary, and after that study the committee passed it by a vote of 12 to 1. It had passed the subcommittee by a vote of five to nothing. S. 2311 has been endorsed by a great many organizations, some of which I have named this afternoon and some of which I shall name later. S. 2311, as a piece of legislation, has been endorsed by the American Bar Association at two national conventions. Its constitutionality, workability, practicability, and utilitarian value have been recognized. Why try to rewrite it? Why try to revise it? Why endeavor to make it more attractive to the left-wingers in America?

This address today is intended primarily to disclose to the Democratic Policy Committee that they need not indulge in any legislative legerdemain. They can put their name on the bill if they want to. They can take the name of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] and my name off the bill, and they can take Representative NIXON'S name off the companion bill in the House. They can do that if it will do the job. They can rewrite the preamble of the bill, if that will do the job. The Senator from Michigan and I will join them.

Let us stop kidding the public. Let us stand up and be counted. Let us see what goes on behind the iron curtain of the Democratic policy committee of the Senate. Mr. President, this is war. It is about time that some people in this country quit thinking of this Korean war as some kind of game, with American boys being used as the bloody pawns and chessmen in Korea. It is about time that some authority make another fireside chat to tell the American people what they are fighting for and against whom we are fighting the war. When they define our enemy as communism, as they must, it will be clear to all that the time has come to stop the sabotage, espionage, and conspiracy of the Communists in the United States. S. 2311 will aid greatly in achieving that result.

If we cannot do that, let us call the whole business off, and get the boys out of the blood bath they are experiencing because so many men have so badly planned in high places for so very long in America. The Communists are doing their best to destroy the fine type of unity we have in this country. It is time we found out who is behind such propaganda, who is supporting it, and who is promoting it. It is time we found out who is behind the peace petitions. It is time we find out who is behind the letters we are getting, many of them from fine, reputable sources, urging us to keep hands off Korea, bring back the boys, and stop the war effort.

Mr. President, all we have to do is to read the Communist press. Here is the People's World, the Communist paper published in Chicago. Here is the Daily Worker, the Communist paper published in New York. Here is the Communist paper published in Los Angeles. Each is filled with propaganda of this kind, trying to create disunity among those supporting this war in Korea.

I read the headline from the Daily Worker of July 6: "Youth Gets 100,000 To Sign for Peace Since Truman Invasion." That is the type of propaganda we are faced with. The propaganda line is to the effect that all that need be done is to vacate Korea and give it to the Communists, the way Owen Lattimore suggested in the first. I am not concerned today whether Owen Lattimore is a Communist or an Eagle Boy Scout. In his own writings he has said the American foreign policy should be to let Korea fall, and then let it look as though we had not pushed her into the hands of the Communists. The Communists are advocating that. I do not know where Owen Lattimore stands today. Neither do I care. I know the Communists are advocating that. I am not for that, and other Senators are not for that. We shall stand by the war effort until we can bring it to a victorious conclusion.

The saboteurs and Communists operating in this country are carrying out their nefarious work to destroy the unity behind our war effort by getting good Americans to sign peace petitions which they do not understand and do not realize have been placed in their hands directly or indirectly by the Communists. It is the same kind of sabotage that runs trains off tracks, that blows up harbors, that causes strange explosions on ammunition-laden ships, and it is part of the sabotage that will manifest itself all over our country, while unrealistic men say the thing to do is engage in war against communism in Korea and solicit the votes of Communists and their friends at home.

So again, in the language of a South Dakota Shakespeare, I say that the time has come for the Democratic policy committee to fish or cut bait, and to do it in the light of day and not behind the iron curtain of the policy committee, with its eyes on November instead of Korea, where they should be.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. McCARTHY. Is the Senator aware of the fact that last June 17, less than a month before he was asked by the State Department to submit recommendations to our Ambassador at Large, Mr. Jessup, the man whom the Senator mentioned, Owen Lattimore, in the Communist publication, the Compass, boasted and complimented the State Department because they had accomplished the impossible of allowing China to fall without allowing the American people and the world to know that we had shoved her? In that article, published in the Compass on the 17th of June, he went on to say that our task now is to accomplish the same mission in Korea, namely, to allow Korea to fall and not let the public know that we had pushed her. In other words, that we should do the same thing in Korea which he boasted the State Department had done in China.

Within less than 30 days thereafter Mr. Acheson asked Mr. Lattimore to submit a secret memorandum to him, which was submitted and finally made public. It was made public after Mr. Acheson had denied that such a document was in existence and only because I had threatened to make it public myself if he did not do so. Then the State Department made the document public. In that secret document we find the State Department's architect, its adviser, advising the State Department again what we should do, namely, that we should allow our allies to fall and not let the world know we pushed them.

Mr. MUNDT. The junior Senator from South Dakota is not at all an authority on the subject of Owen Lattimore. I do know something about the case of Alger Hiss, but having followed one of the traitorous State Department people all through his tortuous path in Government is enough for one Senator in one lifetime. It happens that the junior Senator from South Dakota was Acting Chairman of the House Un-American Activities Committee when we—in the Eightieth Congress—gathered and documented and disclosed the evidence leading to the conviction of Alger Hiss. I was in charge of that investigation at that time. As yet, the American public has never been given the whole, sordid story of the influence of Alger Hiss as a high official in our Department of State. Sometime I shall again address the Senate on that subject. I concentrated most of my time and my effort on the Hiss case for many, many months. So I turn Owen Lattimore, and what he stands for, over to the Senator from Wisconsin or anyone else who may want to follow his activities.

I did happen to note that he said in public, and in his own writings, that the thing he was advocating was to let Korea fall into the hands of Communists, but not let the world know we were pushing her in. And since I know something of his association with the State Department and its personnel, it looks as though the administration is still following the Lattimore line, if the actions of the Policy Committee of the Demoeratic party honestly reflect the attitude of the administration. I believe anyone must accept the logic of that statement.

Either we are against communism or we are for it. It is pretty hard to ask the Communist clique in America for votes one day and ask them for $10,000,000,000 with which to kill them the next day. We ought to decide. We cannot stand with one foot on each side of the fence forever.

Uncle Sam is a pretty tall man, and he can do that for awhile, but even he gets tired after awhile with one leg on one side of the fence and the other leg on the other. He has to put both of them on one side of the fence sooner or later. I believe that when we are at war is a time for decision.

We cannot be on both sides of the Korean question. We cannot be with the South Koreans when we fight and with the North Koreans when we seek votes in political campaigns. There is no wonder that so many organizations are bombarding the policy committee of the Democratic party asking, "What goes on? Why don't you let the Senate vote? Whom are you trying to comfort, the American heroes who are dying abroad, or the Communists boring from within at home?" It has to be one or the other; it cannot be both. The American public is entitled to an honest and a public answer. A vote on S. 2311 will provide for such a test.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. McCARTHY. In view of the fact that the Congress a year ago voted $75,000,000 to help the anti-Communist forces in the Asiatic theater; that it later voted $27,600,000 for the fortification of South Korea, Iran, and the Philippines; that it also voted last year the sum of $10,300,000 to furnish planes, guns, tanks, and ammunition for South Korea; that the action by the Congress was almost unanimous, that the President signed the bill without a word of protest; and that the State Department then stepped in, with the aid, of course, of the Commerce Department, and was successful in keeping all except the expenditure of $200 for some baling wire, to be spent in over a year's time—in view of those facts, would the Senator agree with me that the State Department, with the help of the Commerce Department, is following, right down to the last comma, the voice of Owen Lattimore, namely, that we make it appear that we are helping our allies, but at the same time pushing them into the arms of communism?

Mr. MUNDT. It would certainly seem to the junior Senator from South Dakota that that would be more than an accidental coincidence. It certainly would seem that out of $10,000,000 appropriated for military aid to Korea, it is strange that $200 of it only was used to help the loyal anti-Communists in South Korea, and that all the rest of it was used, directly or indirectly, to help the Communists of the north.

It is just as inconsistent as our policy today when we still are following the Lattimore line at home in our attitude toward communism—"Let the Communists take over, but don't make it appear we are pushing them into Russia's hands," while abroad we are engaged in a noble effort, supported by patriotic Americans all over the country, to defeat and destroy the vicious, aggressive, godless Communist invaders going south of the thirty-eighth parallel.

Mr. President, I wish to talk a little now about what is in this bill (S. 2311) and why it is necessary that the bill be promptly enacted. I think the time has come when Senators should speak out on this proposed legislation. I do not ask everyone to support the bill; but Senators oppose it if they care to, but I think we are entitled to know; I believe that when the boys are being drafted to go into the Army they are entitled to know; I believe that when the taxpayers are being asked for another $10,000,000,000 for the war in Korea they are entitled to know, what we propose to do about the people who are circulating peace petitions under the banners of communism, about the people who are trying to advocate "Hands off Korea," so that Russians can take over, about those who are sabotaging switches on the railroads, blowing up harbors, calling men out on strike, and precipitating all kinds of confusion and chaos. Should we not at least label them? What can we do about them in government, or about their trying to get in government, if we are not to have any law to repel them or to punish them?

I suggest, therefore, that the first reason why we have need of the enactment of S. 2311, the so-called Mundt-Ferguson-Johnston bill—and I shall cite only facts in the RECORD—is the fact that by the proud admission—it was not really an admission, it was really a proud assertion—an assertion of the Assistant Secretary of State in charge of security, Mr. Jack Peurifoy, wrote a committee of the United States Senate a letter within the last few months and said, in effect: "Be calm. Be of good cheer. Don't be disturbed about the McCarthy charges. We have been able to get rid of 205 Communists and disloyal agents from the State Department alone since Yalta." He is proud of the fact, and I am proud of him for the work Jack Peurifoy has done as far as it has gone. Unhappily, it is still an uncompleted task.

Then, because 205 sounded like a good many Communists and disloyal agents in one department, even since Yalta, he added another paragraph in which he said, "After all, about half were Communists and Communist agents; the other half were homosexuals and sex perverts. So don't be too much disturbed about the kind of people we have had in our State Department since before the Yalta Conference."

Let us talk about the 105 disloyal agents, by their own admission, in the State Department since before Yalta. One wonders why Yalta resulted in so many blunders and gave so many magnificent gifts to communism. There were 105 foreign agents by their own admission. That does not count any of the McCarthy charges, that does not have anything to do with the Tydings report. That is 105 who, the Assistant Secretary of State proudly said, "We have gotten rid of since before Yalta." But they were there then. They were conniving, they were moving around, they were planning the sell-out at Yalta.

Nothing has been done up to this hour to make it illegal for them to go back to work again in the State Department. Some Government official can hire them tomorrow. There is no criminal charge to be placed against them, no way to smoke them out, no way to expose them.

So, Mr. President, the first reason why we need this bill enacted is so that we may have something on the statute books making it a crime for a Government official to hire a Communist, to destroy our freedom by sabotage within the structure of Government; to make it a crime for Communists surreptitiously to sneak in and secure a Government appointive position.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Does Mr. Peurifoy know whether or not those Communists have been separated from Government, even though they have left the State Department?

Mr. MUNDT. He does not. I have asked him. He said, "I have done the best I can. I have gotten them out of the State Department." He knows and I know and the Senator knows some of them are working for the United Nations. He fears and I fear and the Senator fears that some of them have gotten back into our Government. But I believe Jack Peurifoy when he tells me they are out of the State Department, at least. He does not know and I do not know and the Senator does not know whether other Communists have taken their places, because there is not a law on the books to prevent it. But that particular group, along with another one-hundred-and-some sex perverts and homosexuals, are now out of the State Department.

Mr. WHERRY. The distinguished Under Secretary, Mr. Peurifoy, testified before a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations that 91 homosexuals, or it might have been 100, had been discharged since January 1, 1947. When the junior Senator from Nebraska asked him if he knew what had become of those homosexuals, he said he did not know.

It might be of interest, if the Senator did not know it, although I believe he does, that the junior Senator from Nebraska wrote a Civil Service Commissioner and asked him to get the names of the 91 who had resigned according to the statement made by Mr. Peurifoy, and check them and see whether or not any of them were now working for the Government. Only in June of this year did the report finally come back—and the distinguished Senator from Michigan knows what a difficult time we had getting it—and when it came back it appeared that he found that 14 of the 91 were still working with the Government. It was not until the matter was referred to him that it was gone into more thoroughly than had been anticipated. He said some of them had resigned, but the system does not provide that when employees are separated from the service they shall not be transferred from one branch to the other. So in this case many of those who had been supposed to be separated from the State Department found their way into other agencies.

Mr. MUNDT. In reply I may say I know that to be a fact; that is correct; but I believe the Senate and the country can get some comfort from the fact that under the able jurisdiction of the present occupant of the chair, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY], a subcommittee of which I am a member is presently conducting hearings in an investigation of the subject of homosexuality, sex perversion, and moral degeneracy and some of the other queer attributes of those former employees of the State Department. I think that is in conformity with the resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska. We have gathered some of the evidence, and are going to bring in a report which will suggest some techniques and devices to prevent some of the things that have occurred in the post, so that these homosexuals and sexual perverts, when separated from the Government service, shall not be moved from one branch of the Federal service to another. We are dealing only with the homosexuals, the sex perverts, and moral degenerates. We have not been authorized by the Senate to deal with communism, disloyalty, and subversion. It was anticipated the Tydings subcommittee would attend to that.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator from South Dakota for assuring us that the committee is making a very thorough investigation into this question. I have every faith in the committee, and I hope it will continue its work.

I should like to say further that a high official in the District of Columbia who has to do with investigating homosexuals made the statement that while the investigation of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations was in progress to his knowledge there had been more than 90 who had resigned as a result of that investigation.

Mr. MUNDT. Good.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the Senator yield to me so I may ask unanimous consent to place, at the end of the remarks of the Senator from South Dakota, correspondence which the junior Senator from Michigan has had with the Chairman of the Civil Service Commission in relation to homosexuals? That correspondence will speak for itself on the question. In 1947 this very problem was called to the attention of the Department of State.

Mr. MUNDT. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have placed at the conclusion of the address by the Senator from South Dakota the correspondence to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield; yes.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator spoke about the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Peurifoy, announcing with pride the separation of 105 disloyal persons from the State Department.

Mr. MUNDT. Since before Yalta.

Mr. BRIDGES. I wonder if the Senator would show us how the wheels within the wheels work. Is the Senator aware that when the Senate Appropriations Committee in the fall of 1947 left for an inspection of the European scene, Mr. Peurifoy told the committee that 10 persons who were employed in the State Department were to be fired, and that the orders had gone out to fire them by reason of disloyalty to the United States of America? I wonder if the Senator knows that when we returned from abroad, Mr. Peurifoy being on that trip, he found that the orders to fire them had been canceled from above in the State Department, and that they in turn were allowed to resign and slip out, so there would be nothing on their records? That is one more indication, is it not, I ask the Senator, of the need of the proper labeling of these individuals in and out of Government?

Mr. MUNDT. There can be no question in the world about that. There is not any question in the world but that wherever there is a Communist in Government he is part of a conspiratorial cell. So unquestionably, while Mr. Peurifoy was away, some member of that cell succeeded in getting the orders canceled.

Now, Mr. President, the second reason why I think we should pass S. 2311 at this time is the fact that with regard to the testimony of Mr. Peurifoy, in which he asserted proudly that they had gotten rid of 105 disloyal persons, each of whom would have been kept out of his job had the so-called Mundt-Ferguson bill been in operation. If it is about to be renamed the Lucas-Tydings bill, and have the same text, maybe I should call it that. If that bill to prevent communism had been in effect, Mr. President, these disloyal agents would not have gotten their jobs. S. 2311 would have prevented that.

The second reason is we know that some disloyal individuals were mighty important. I am not going to dilate this afternoon on Alger Hiss, but some day, inasmuch as the junior Senator from South Dakota acted as chairman of the subcommittee which investigated the Hiss matter from beginning to end, I shall dilate further on that subject. I think last January I discussed it for 3 hours. Much of that story, however, has never been told. Anyway, we know that Alger Hiss, with his great potentiality for evil, which may have found its most far-flung tentacles in the precipitation of the Korean war, worked on as a close confidante and fellow of the present Secretary of State and as a member of the conspiratorial Communist cell in Government. His associate, Henry Julian Wadleigh, has confessed to the same type of crime for which Hiss was convicted. He turned State's evidence and testified against Hiss in the New York trial. Marzani is in jail for the part he played. Judy Coplon has been convicted. Another has fled the country.

Mr. President, we have heard much about the Presidential Loyalty Board. We heard about that today. I would suppose a good loyalty board would check, first of all, the people working in the most sensitive position, in the Atomic Energy Commission. Yet with monotonous repetition we have read day after day of instances where individuals have been picked up for violating the security phases of atomic energy and arrested as spies.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. MUNDT. Yes.

Mr. McMAHON. I am delighted that the Senator has adverted to that situation. The Atomic Energy Commission took over the atomic-energy project on January 1, 1947. The act that was passed——

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, I yield with the understanding that I do not lose the floor, because it appears the Senator from Connecticut is not directing a question to me, but is making an observation. Before I yield, I want it to be understood that I do not lose the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from South Dakota yielding to the Senator from Connecticut without losing the floor? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McMAHON. The act which was passed, which sometimes bears my name, started to be administered by the Atomic Energy Commission on that date, January 1, 1947. That Commission has directly and indirectly some 70,000 employees. From that day to this there has not been a single solitary violation of any law of the United States respecting security proved or alleged against any employee of that Commission.

I say to the Senator from South Dakota that Gold and Fuchs and Greenglass and the rest of them came into the project during its administration by Gen. Leslie Groves, of the Army; and the general would still have had control of that program if the proposal by the minority party in the House of Representatives had been adopted, because a motion to recommit the act was defeated by only seven votes.

Mr. President, let us have done once and for all with the insinuation or innuendo that the Atomic Energy Commission has misadministered the atomic affairs of this country so as to permit the infiltration of the likes of Fuchs and Gold and the rest of them, because by the Atomic Energy Act the Senator from Connecticut and his colleagues on the Senate committee provided for the FBI to take over the investigation of violations against the law of the United States by employees of the Atomic Energy Commission. It was under the United States Army in the stress and heat of war that Fuchs and Gold and others committed their depredations.

Mr. President, I should like to conclude by saying that no one alive can guarantee that among some of the thousands of persons—no matter how great may be the care that is used—there will not be, in the future, some breach of security. However, I can testify that those who are administering that act are doing their level best, in cooperation with the Federal Bureau of Investigation, to maintain inviolate that great organization.

I should like to serve notice now, once and for all, that the effort to tie up Fuchs and Gold and Greenglass with the present administration of the Atomic Energy Commission or with any of the Atomic Energy Commissioners should cease, in common decency.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I do not disagree with the statements just made by the Senator from Connecticut; but in the interest of historical accuracy, I think it should also be pointed out that the law passed by the two Houses of Congress establishing the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy has unusual characteristics, due to the nature of the problem involved and the high degree of security required, for in that bill provision is made that the Members of the Joint Committee shall have access to all the security files. The Senator from Connecticut, the Senator from Iowa, the Senator from California, and the other members of the Joint Committee have from time to time personally examined files; and we have had an opportunity to have very full and free discussions with the members of the commission, and to point out from time to time what are regarded as necessary changes in policies. It is that opportunity to examine the files which has been denied to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations in connection with the matter the Senator from South Dakota is discussing. I merely wish to point out that the committee of which we are members does have, under the statute, power to examine the security files of persons involved in that connection.

Mr. MUNDT. That is precisely correct.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a comment at this point?

Mr. MUNDT. If it is brief.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I am delighted that the Senator from California has pointed out the things he has just stated. I should only like to add that in the case of the 81 persons who were referred to and who were the subject of charges by the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY], the same privilege was given to the subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee; and the FBI files of those persons—files of the same quality and character as those to which the Senator has referred—were also available to the subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee. Those are the files the Senator from Connecticut consulted. However, the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Iowa found it inadvisable to consult any more than 9 or 14 of them, respectively.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, I shall not engage in a prolonged discussion of the Atomic Energy Commission at this time. Since it is a little aside from the point we now have before us, because the Atomic Energy Commission is handled by means of special legislation.

I think I should point out in that connection however that certainly there is nothing in the housing shortage in America which seems to make for an over-crowded condition among persons suited for living in glass houses, because even the Atomic Energy Commission does not have a perfect record in connection with these matters. Let me refer, for instance, to one Hans Freidstadt, who was given a scholarship under the Atomic Energy Commission, but who turned out to be a Communist. That mistake certainly cannot be attributed to General Groves, of the United States Army, or to J. Edgar Hoover, or to anyone other than those with the Atomic Energy Commission. Of course, I suppose that mistake was an honest one. Nevertheless, Freidstadt is still with us, for according to the publication I now hold in my hand, Freidstadt is editor of a Communist student bulletin at the University of North Carolina, for this publication bears the notation, "Hans Freidstadt, box 562, Chapel Hill, N. C.—published by the North Carolina student section of the Communist Party of the U. S. A."

Apparently Freidstadt is doing that to eke out a little extra spending money, since he has been removed from the scholarship which had been granted to him by the Government. Let me point out that he was removed from that scholarship, due to the good work done by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER].

Mr. President, this particular issue of that publication is devoted to the theme You Must Defeat the Mundt-Ferguson Bill. They take that position because they know that if that bill or any similar piece of proposed legislation is enacted into law—regardless of who are the persons who endorse it—and if a piece of legislation embodying such principles is placed on the statute books, with the result that Communists are required to register in the open, not only will such persons not be granted scholarships, but Gold and Fuchs and Greenglass and all the rest of that nefarious crowd will be able to be apprehended much more easily, because they will be smoked out into the open.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for about one minute, to permit me to make a statement, with the understanding that by doing so he will not lose the floor?

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, if we may continue the friendly informality we have been enjoying today, and if I may yield for the purpose requested without losing the floor, I shall do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator may yield for that purpose.

Mr. MUNDT. Then I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, in regard to the statement made a moment ago by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON], let me say that I think he was perfectly sound and fair when he said that Fuchs was not connected with or employed in the project under the present Atomic Energy Commission. However, I thoroughly disagree with the Senator when he says that since the Commission has been in control of the atomic energy program there has not been a single breach of secrecy. I disagree with the Senator from Connecticut as to that.

Without itemizing them, I will say there have been numerous breaches of security under the present Atomic Energy Commission security set-up, and there have been numerous disappearances of materials and things of that kind. I recall one particular employee of the Commission, in that connection; it was necessary to open some packing cases and remove certain things which he had surreptitiously taken out, sometime after the Commission was created.

I remember repeated instances of the disappearance of material and the disappearance of certain documents.

Therefore, I could not let the record stand—according to my view and my recollection and according to the evidence about matters of that sort—as showing that there has not been a single breach of security under the present Atomic Energy Commission.

I thank the Senator from South Dakota for yielding to me.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment at this point?

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, I am reluctant to do so, for I should like to return to the bill I have been discussing.

Mr. McMAHON. I can say what I have to say in 30 seconds.

Mr. MUNDT. Very well.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa has referred to certain matters which were developed in connection with an investigation in connection with the charges of mismanagement, made over a year ago against the Atomic Energy Commission.

I should like to point out that in my statement, when I referred to breaches of security, I meant persons such as Gold and Fuchs and spies. I think the Senator will agree with me that there has not been one case which has developed which in any way in the slightest degree compares with the terrible things that happened to us as a result of the admission of Fuchs and company into the project.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MUNDT. I am glad to yield for a question.

Mr. McFARLAND. I wonder how much longer the Senator from South Dakota will take. Numerous comments have been made by other Senators during the speech of the Senator from South Dakota. Of course, I could have objected to having that done, but I did not wish to do so.

Let me call attention to the fact that the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] has stayed here all day long, since 11 a. m., hoping to get just a few minutes' time devoted to the unfinished business, the appropriation bill, a bill which is most important.

Mr. MUNDT. If I am not interrupted further, I think I can conclude in 15 minutes. I have hesitated to refuse to yield to other Senators who have requested that I yield to them, when they have had comments to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Hereafter the rule will be enforced.

Mr. MUNDT. Very well, Mr. President.

I have already stated two reasons which I have for enactment of the Mundt-Johnston-Ferguson bill. The third reason is that it proposes legislation in strict conformity with the regulations which the Federal Bureau of Investigation has consistently made for dealing with communism.

There are many persons who feel that we should directly outlaw the Communist Party. As is well known, the Director of the FBI has spoken against that particular approach in handling Communists in this country. Nevertheless, I wish to point out that the FBI has expressed itself very clearly in regard to legislation such as that proposed by Senate bill 2311, the so-called Mundt-Ferguson-Johnston bill.

On March 26, 1947, Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, in testifying before the Committee on Un-American Activities of the House of Representatives, of which I was then a member—and, Mr. President, let me say incidentally that was the last time the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation testified before a congressional committee on proposed legislation dealing with this subject; so here we have his last and final word, so far as it is contained in testimony before a committee of the Congress. On page 40 of those hearings, which are available to any Senator who may care to examine them, the following is to be found:

> There has developed, however, as a result of Communist propaganda, some fanciful feeling among Communists that no distinction should be drawn and that Communists have a right to Government jobs. I disagree in that.

Mr. President, in conformity with that disagreement, we wrote into this proposed legislation a specific prohibition against permitting a Communist to obtain a Government job by appointment. It is the only legislative prohibition of that sort now before the Congress for its consideration.

A little later, on page 43 of the hearings, J. Edgar Hoover, on the subject of national defense, made a statement which I desire to quote. That subject, Mr. President, is something we should be thinking about in these days, in time of war. On the subject of national defense, J. Edgar Hoover, in part 2 of the hearings before the Committee on Un-American Activities of the House of Representatives, Eightieth Congress, first session, on March 26, 1947, said:

> The Communist Party of the United States is a fifth column if there ever was one.

I wish I could put that on a little desk motto to be placed in front of members of the Democratic policy committee the next time they hold their meeting, so they could see it, because it is important. We are at war, and they fiddle while the fighters are dying in Korea. J. Edgar Hoover says:

The Communist Party is a fifth column if there ever was one. It is far better organized than were the Nazis in occupied countries prior to their capitulation.

They are seeking to weaken America just as they did in their era of obstruction when they were alined with the Nazis. Their goal is the overthrow of our Government. There is no doubt as to where a real Communist's loyalty exists. Their allegiance is to Russia, not the United States.

The Director of the FBI says that the allegiance of the Communists about whom the Democratic Policy Committee refuses to let the Senate legislate is with Russia, not with our Government. So let it never be said, of this side of the aisle anyway, that we seek to give aid and comfort to the Communists in time of war. If catastrophe involves us and sabotage occurs, let the responsibility rest with the majority leader and the majority policy committee, who themselves have stood with operations road block from month to month, denying this body the right to vote on the only measure before it to smoke the Communists out into the open.

On page 44 of the same hearings, J. Edgar Hoover again says this—testifying, Mr. President, on legislation dealing with this problem, on his last appearance before a congressional committee on the subject; and let this give the eternal lie to the Communist propaganda so slyly spread around America, that the FBI is not for the bill—S. 2311—that J. Edgar Hoover is not in favor of this kind of Communist-control legislation. Let him speak for himself in the quotation from page 44, wherein he says:

Victory will be assured once Communists are identified and exposed—

That is in essence the bill—S. 2311—which identifies, exposes, and denies them Government jobs—

because the public will take the first step of quarantining them so they can do no harm. Communism, in reality, is not a political party. It is a way of life—an evil and malignant way of life. It reveals a condition akin to disease that spreads like an epidemic and like an epidemic a quarantine is necessary to keep it from infecting the Nation.

The bill—S. 2311—is a quarantine, unless the Democratic Policy Committee keeps in effect an ordinance denying Americans the right to use the quarantine. I predict the Senate will pass it speedily and overwhelmingly, once Senators are given an opportunity to vote on it. On page 44, I was asking a question. Before giving Mr. Hoover's answer, I read my question, as follows:

Mr. MUNDT. We have had witnesses before this committee during the past few days, and, for that matter, during the past few years, who have said, in one way or another, that the Communist Party in America, and in all countries, is under the direction of the central party headquarters in Moscow. I take it that you agree thoroughly with that point of view?

To this question Mr. Hoover replied:

Mr. MUNDT, I might say that at least for the last several years the direction of Communist activity has emanated from Paris with a very definite pipeline into Moscow. By reason of matters of expediency they have dropped, for the time being at least, much of this activity from Paris, that emanated from there, although they have a direct tie-up to the Communist headquarters in Moscow.

So we now have in this country running loose in a sizable Communist conspiratorial organism directly tied in with Moscow. The Director of the FBI has warned the Senate, the country, and the Congress. It is time, I say again, that this body measure up to its challenges and do something on the home front to smoke these Communists out in the open. Identify them, expose them, deny them passports, deny them Federal jobs. This is precisely and specifically what S. 2311 would do.

Finally, J. Edgar Hoover, on page 47 of this committee report on these hearings, was asked the following question by Mr. NIXON, Representative from California:

Mr. NIXON. Having in mind the infiltration of Communists as we have it in America today, without doing anything further about it, to expose them, to drive them out of labor unions, out of Government, out of our other institutions, do you see a real present danger to this country in the event of a conflict with the followers of communism in Europe and in Russia?

Replying to Mr. NIXON's question, Mr. Hoover said:

I most certainly do, Congressman.

There we have the warning. We may not be able to penetrate the iron curtain set up by the Democratic policy committee and get action on this legislation; I do not know. I am hopeful. I am optimistic. We shall continue to try. But if we fail, and sabotage and treachery and revolution wreck the American home front while we are engaged in a bloody war in Korea or elsewhere against communism, let the responsibility be nailed squarely on the door of the Democratic Policy Committee of the United States Senate. That is where it will squarely and fairly belong.

The Director of the FBI has called attention to the danger. He says that in time of war that would be a serious risk, unless we identify and expose the Communists. The American public has a right to know, while history is being made, the political maneuvering of Moscow's followers, which helps to foreshadow the shape of the history to come.

The fourth reason, Mr. President, we are urging the Democratic policy committee and the Democratic majority leader, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], to give the elected representatives of the people in the United States Senate an early right to vote on the only measure before us striking at the conspiratorial dangers of communism on the home front is that we are now at war with communism in Korea. Let them vote as they will, but let them not continue to keep under cover and underground and out of sight and away from the Senate the only bill designed to do something about communism here at home.

So much for the reasons, Mr. President. The bill, itself, I hope every Senator has read by now. Certainly he should have. Every Senator has written letters about S. 2311. Every Senator has had ample notice about it. It has been discussed long enough. If he has read it, as he should have, and as I assume he has, he knows that it simply provides for identification and exposure and denial of Federal employment. It does not affect labor unions. It does not affect organizations, other than Communist Party organizations and those controlled by it. It denies passports. It prohibits employment of Communists by the Government, and it establishes an appeal board, through the Subversive Activities Control Board and the appellate courts, so that no injustice can be done to anyone. That is the measure we submit for the Senate's approval.

I have named some of the organizations which have endorsed it. Twice in its national conventions the American Legion has endorsed it. I know the majority leader said on the floor of the Senate recently that it does not make much difference to him whether they endorse it or not. But it makes some difference to me, Mr. President, and to the most of us.

The members of the American Legion do not deal lightly with measures of this character with reference to our national security. They consider them seriously. They are in favor of this proposed legislation which is in the interest of national security. So are the Veterans of Foreign Wars. The AMVETS have endorsed the bill. It has been endorsed by the Disabled American Veterans who have left a part of their blood and their limbs overseas in fighting for freedom. They have endorsed it. It is strange, is it not, that a few men meeting in secret behind the iron curtain of the Democratic policy committee, counting the votes for next November and evaluating the political possibilities, can say, "We are not going to let the Senate vote on this proposed legislation. We want the votes for the CIO; we want the votes of the Lawyers' Guild. So we shall not let the measure come to a vote"?

Mr. President, if they want to vote "nay," that is all right, but give the Senate a chance to vote on a measure which is so important.

All Senators have letters from the United States Chamber of Commerce urging them to support this bill. I received one a few days ago. What are we doing to support it? The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], and the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], are in favor of it. They have spoken up in public. But we do not have to have many fingers on our two hands to count the support we have had from the Democratic side of the aisle. I hope they will have courage to stand up within the next few days and say, "Count me among those willing to be counted in favor of legislation striking at communism at home."

Oh, you may lose a friend or two in some liberal group, but you will be doing something worth while for those who are fighting for the Stars and Stripes in Korea.

The Knights of Columbus have endorsed the bill; the National Education Association has endorsed it; the small-business organizations have endorsed it; the American Bar Association has endorsed it. I shall not read the whole list.

The Communist Party, of course, is against it. Every issue of the Daily Worker is against it. The so-called National Committee to Defeat the Mundt-Ferguson-Johnston Bill is against it—a little group downtown in an obscure office, administered by persons representing a list of leftist organizations as long as a bamboo fish pole. They would be compelled to register under S. 2311 because they are contaminated or controlled by the Communist Party. A few synthetic self-proclaimed liberal groups are against it. Some honest individuals are against it too. Some persons sincerely believe we should do nothing about communism in America. But, Mr. President, by and large, the proposed legislation is supported by organizations of the types which I have mentioned and opposed only by those giving aid and comfort to godless aggressive communism.

Mr. President, as I draw to a conclusion, let me say that the main reason I took the floor today was to make a few simple points simply clear. The first one is that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], Representative NIXON, and I have no pride of authorship in this bill. We have worked for it and on it for 3 years. If the little secret cabal in the Democratic Policy Committee is hearing testimony behind closed doors for the purpose of working out some kind of clandestine compromise, let them bring it out, and we shall support it if it is honest and effective. But do not let them bring out any sham legislation; do not let them bring out any trick legislation; do not let them bring out any pious phrases that will not accomplish anything, or we shall propose to substitute Senate bill 2311 lock, stock, and barrel, and insist on a roll-call vote. We are willing to support an honest compromise. The Democratic policy label can be placed on it and we will still support it.

I want to make it clear that the bill which we are supporting is not a thought-control or a police bill. It is what it says; it says what it means. It is clear. It is concise. It provides for registration, identification, exposure, information as to financial income, financial sources, who belongs to the Communist Party, where are its headquarters, what are the names of its officers, the literature it circulates, the broadcasts it sponsors, and the front organizations it supports. It denies an appointive Federal job or a Federal passport to all Communists, giving the right of open hearings before the Subversive Activities Control Board, which is a better break than front organizations receive today, because the Attorney General puts them on the list and they have no recourse. We give them recourse and the right of appeal to the courts.

Perhaps if the Democrats write the bill in their clandestine meeting they will want to leave out of it the Alger Hiss-Amerasia amendment which defines espionage and makes it a crime to steal documents from the State Department. It defines the crime which Wadleigh committed over 500 times. It defines as a crime what Alger Hiss did, and proposes as a penalty 10 years in the penitentiary and a $10,000 fine. It extends the statute of limitations on such crimes against the Government to 10 years.

I should like to see that amendment retained in the bill, but we can, I hope, work out a compromise on that if some Democrat politician is afraid that by supporting the proposed legislation he might be giving some credence to the charges in connection with the Amerasia case because in time of war is when we should do something about home security, and not think altogether about the votes at stake at the polling places next November.

In conclusion, Mr. President, this bill was reported last March. It had been considered for 18 months before it was reported. It is important; it is urgent. It will do much more in the final analysis to win the war in Korea than will many of the executive controls by which Americans are to be coerced to do certain things. We receive executive messages and listen to fireside chats and proclamations saying we must do something to control and coerce patriotic Americans in this country. But let us not do anything about the Communists; let us not even permit the Senate to vote with regard to Communists. "Let us do something about the businessman, the farmer, the laboring man, the shopkeeper," these administration spokesmen tell us. Let us set up some kind of controls to push them around. Maybe that is necessary, but what a strange mind it must be to concentrate all the power and might of Government upon good Americans and refuse to do anything about bad Americans, about Communist conspirators and traitors.

At a later date I shall have more to say about that type of New Deal-Fair Deal logic. I promised that I would be through by 5 o'clock in order that the Senate might proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bill and 5 o'clock is now here, but I wanted to get before the Senate some of the provisions of the bill and to give the Congress and the country the assurance of the Senator from Michigan and myself that we are for the purposes and the provisions of the bill and are not interested in the name or the label. We want legislation to guard the home front.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Has the Senator from South Dakota given any thought to the fact that in the event the Democratic leadership does not permit the bill even to come to a vote or to be debated on the floor of the Senate, it would be possible to add the provisions of the bill as a rider to the other type of legislation which the Senator has mentioned?

Mr. MUNDT. Yes; we have surveyed every possibility. If we cannot get any cooperation or assurance from the powers that be in the Democratic Party here in the Senate that they will bring up this legislation, we shall use every parliamentary device available to us to have a vote on the floor of the Senate on this most important home-front legislation.

EXHIBIT A

UNITED STATES
CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., May 16, 1950.

Hon. KENNETH S. WHERRY,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR WHERRY: This is in reply to your letter of April 25, 1950, in which you asked to be advised as to how many of the 91 persons removed from the Department of State because of a sexual deviation have been subsequently reemployed by other Federal departments or agencies.

To protect the Federal service from reemployment of persons who have been separated or forced to resign for reasons of unsuitability the Commission's regulations provide that agencies shall report the real reasons for separations.

After obtaining the list of 91 persons from the Department of State, the Commission again called to the attention of all departments and agencies its requirement relating to the proper manner of reporting separations of persons concerning whom there are questions of suitability. Our records have now been noted in these cases to reflect the actual reasons for separations.

Check of these names against our records disclosed that, at the time of the check, 13 of these persons were employed by the executive branch of the Government. In 9 of these 13 cases the Commission had jurisdiction to investigate and to initiate such corrective action as was necessary. In 1 of these 9 cases the person resigned before completion of the investigation. In 7 of these 9 cases investigation has been completed and the separation of these persons has been instructed. The remaining case in which the Commission has jurisdiction is pending completion of investigation.

In the remaining case pending completion of investigation and the three cases in which the Commission has no jurisdiction, the employing agencies have been notified that unfavorable information pertaining to suitability is available to them at the Department of State. So far the Commission has not been advised of the results of the agency's consideration of the matters reported in the other three cases.

In summary, of the 91 persons concerning whom you inquired decisions have not been reached in 4 cases of persons now employed in the Federal service, according to our latest information. In each of these 4 cases the employing agencies have been notified that unfavorable information pertaining to suitability is available to them at the Department of State.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY B. MITCHELL,
Chairman.

UNITED STATES
CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., June 9, 1950.

Hon. HOMER FERGUSON,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR FERGUSON: This has reference to your letter of May 16, 1950, in which you asked for additional details concerning the cases of those persons who had been separated from the Department of State because of sexual deviation who were shown subsequently to have been employed elsewhere in the Federal service.

As you are aware the amount of information I am able to furnish concerning these cases is governed by the President's directive concerning the release of confidential investigative information. In addition, a special committee of the Senate has been appointed to inquire into the details of this matter.

You indicate that you have been furnished a copy of my letter to Senator WHERRY. I am able to advise you of developments which alter the statistical information furnished to Senator WHERRY. In that letter it was pointed out that the action that was taken by the Civil Service Commission when we received the list of 91 cases from the Department of State. In brief, cases of those individuals who were still within the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission have been reopened for investigation and decision. In all of these cases, both those that were within the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission and those that were under the sole jurisdiction of the department or agency, the information was furnished to the employing departments and agencies.

Of the 91 persons, 1 person is shown to be presently employed in whose case the Civil Service Commission has jurisdiction and in whose case separation has not been instructed. Investigation of this case is not yet complete. In one other case, the Commission has rated ineligible and instructed the separation of the individual. We have not yet received official notice from the employing agency of his separation. We have been informally advised that his separation will be effective within the next 2 weeks. These two individuals are shown to occupy clerical positions, one at grade GS–3 and the other at grade GS–4.

The cases of the three additional individuals are no longer within the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission. In these cases we have not yet received formal advice as to the final action taken by the employing agency. We have been advised informally that one of these individuals will be separated within the next 2 weeks. One of these three individuals is shown to occupy a position at grade GS–9, the other two are shown to be employed in clerical positions.

We do not believe that any good purpose would be served by furnishing the information requested concerning former employees who are no longer in the Federal service.

With best personal wishes, I am,

Sincerely yours,

HARRY B. MITCHELL,
Chairman.

UNITED STATES
CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., June 23, 1950.

Hon. HOMER FERGUSON,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR FERGUSON: This is in further reply to your letter dated May 16, 1950, as requested in your letter dated June 14, 1950, concerning the employment records of the 91 persons separated by the Department of State because of sexual deviation.

The list of the 91 persons separated by the Department of State was received by the Commissio on March 24, 1950. A check of the Commission's files at that time disclosed that 22 of these persons had been employed in the executive branch of the Federal service subsequent to their separation from the Department of State. However, at the time of that check, records were found of only 13 who were still employed. These were the 13 referred to in our letter to Senator WHERRY, a copy of which you received from Mr. Peurifoy. The status of these 13 cases was finally checked immediately prior to dispatch of the letter to Senator WHERRY on May 16, 1950, and the letter contained the information disclosed by this check.

Subsequent to the date of our letter to Senator WHERRY, the Commission received information that two additional persons were employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government at the time the letter was dispatched, but notifications of these appointments had not been received by our Service Records Division when our check was made. In these cases the employing agencies were immediately notified that unfavorable information relating to suitability is available to them in the files of the Department of State, and steps were taken to initiate investigation by the Commission. We were subsequently notified that one of these persons was separated by the employing agency. The case of the other is currently being investigated by the Commission.

Of the 13 cases referred to in our letter to Senator WHERRY, only 1 is still employed in the executive branch of the Federal service. In this case the Commission does not have jurisdiction to require separation. The information in our files has been reported to the employing agency. The agency has advised that after considering all the facts in the case it does not contemplate separating this employee.

It is hoped that this will supply you with the desired information concerning these cases.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY B. MITCHELL,
Chairman.

UNITED STATES
CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., May 19, 1950.

Hon. HOMER FERGUSON,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR FERGUSON: Answering your letter of May 16, 1950, it will take some time to get together the information desired, particularly in relation to classification of jobs.

However, we are proceeding with the matter and will advise you further as soon as possible.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY B. MITCHELL,
Chairman.

(P. 601)

Of the group of 11 individuals terminated under the McCarran rider in June 1947, one was reappointed to a temporary position in the Department. The rider under which this action was taken provided, among other things, that "such terminations shall not affect the rights of such officer or employee to seek or accept employment in any other department or agency of the Government, if declared eligible for such employment by the United States Civil Service Commission." Subsequent to his termination, the individual referred to pursued the provision of the law quoted above, and was rated eligible on loyalty and suitability for Federal employment by the Civil Service Commission. The individual's case was considered by the Fourth Regional Loyalty Board of the Civil Service Commission and later post-audited by the Loyalty Review Board. The loyalty boards acted on the basis of a full field investigation conducted by the FBI after his original termination.

Following the decision of the Civil Service Commission, the individual requested reinstatement. The Department took the matter under consideration and in the meantime reviewed the information upon which the Civil Service Commission based its determination. As a result of this review, the Department agreed with the findings of the Civil Service Commission Loyalty Board and determined that the individual could be reemployed without adversely affecting the national interest.

It was about this time that the Department started work on the United States Government's participation in the Haitian Government's bicentennial celebration. There was a temporary need on this project for a person with the technical skills possessed by the individual in question. I therefore approved the employment of this person for the temporary job.

On December 7, 1949, the individual was given a 90-day appointment to expire on March 7, 1950.

The Civil Service Commission has advised the Department that its records do not reflect employment of the other individuals by the Federal Government.

MAY 16, 1950.

Hon. JOHN PEURIFOY,
Assistant Secretary of State,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JOHN: I appreciated your furnishing me today with the copy of the letter of May 16 from Chairman Mitchell of the Civil Service Commission to Senator Wherry. That letter was in response to the latter's request for information "as to how many of the 91 persons removed from the Department of State because of a sexual deviation have been subsequently reemployed by other Federal departments or agencies."

I had made a similar inquiry of you in person and on the record of the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee hearing February 28. Mr. Mitchell's letter is responsive to that inquiry which I had addressed to you, but I find it inconclusive for my purposes. In view of the fact that Mr. Mitchell apparently has the full information I am seeking I have redirected an inquiry to him, a copy of which I am enclosing for your information.

With best personal wishes, I am,

Yours sincerely.

DEMAND OF COMMUNIST PARTY OF HAWAII THAT UNITED STATES QUIT KOREA

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point an article from the Honolulu Advertiser of July 20, entitled "Territory of Hawaii Communist Party Demands United States Quit Korea," which makes it clear that the Communists in Hawaii will do their utmost to sabotage the American military effort in Korea.

I believe this news article indicates strongly the great importance of maintaining Federal control of Hawaii through the territorial form of government and through a federally appointed governor in order to make sure that the Communists there are not successful in endangering our military operations in the Far East.

LEAFLET DISTRIBUTED—TERRITORY OF HAWAII COMMUNIST PARTY DEMANDS UNITED STATES QUIT KOREA

The underground Communist Party of Hawaii has called for immediate withdrawal of American military forces in Korea and a ban on the use of the atomic bomb in a one-page mimeographed sheet widely circulated in Honolulu Wednesday. The circular, violently attacking the policies of the American Government in the Far East, carried no individual signatures. At the bottom it said "issued by the Communist Party of Hawaii, P. O. Box 3886."

Both the FBI and the Army counterintelligence department have knowledge of the vitriolic leaflet and its contents. Both agencies are noncommittal on what action might be taken.

Sole acknowledged Communist in the Territory is Charles K. Fujimoto, who purports to be the party's chairman.

Entitled "Prevent World War III," the circular turned up on streets throughout the city.

It alleges that President Truman increased the danger of an atomic war when he ordered military action against the peoples of Asia, which can only lead to world disaster.

The Red propaganda leaflet echoed the hands off Korea policy of the Communist Daily Worker newspaper, published in New York City, and demanded that the Government which first uses the atomic bomb be labeled an enemy of mankind.

The mimeographed broadside, ignoring the fact that this Nation now is engaged in a critical military action, alleges that "the military provocation in Korea was a planned smoke screen behind which to intervene against the struggle for independence of the peoples of Korea, China, Formosa, the Philippines, Vietnam, Indonesia, and Malaya.

It further charges an attempt to nullify the will of the Korean people which was expressed in the last election by force of American arms.

The local Communist mouthpiece also alleges that the United States Government is carrying on the policy of Wall Street big business to dominate the world.

Then, making the customary Communist pitch, the leaflet continues:

"Think clearly, fellow Americans; consider the facts deeply. Our country, our sons and daughters, are in grave danger. At first it was military supplies, and naval and air force aid. A few days later it was a few battalions of American troops; now it is divisions and whole armies. Next it will be atomic bombs and wholesale slaughter of millions of people. Such a course can only lead to a third world war with the existence of all the people of the world at stake.

"Such a course can be stopped by the united demand of the people for peace.

"Demand a halt to the aggressive military adventures of our administration before they touch off world-wide atomic war.

"Hands off Korea. Demand the immediate withdrawal of United States warships, air force, and troops, and an end to shipment of arms to the puppet regimes in Korea, Formosa, Vietnam.

"Ban the atomic bomb and declare that government an enemy of mankind that first uses it.

"We must—all of us who cherish freedom, who abhor atomic death for hundreds of millions—unite our ranks, combine in a solid front of the people for peace.

"Let your desire for peace by heard.

"Issued by the Communist Party of Hawaii, post office box 3886."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 2160) to amend the Public Health Service Act to authorize annual and sick leave with pay for commissioned officers of the Public Health Service, to authorize the payment of accumulated and accrued annual leave in excess of 60 days, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. PRIEST, Mr. BIEMILLER, Mr. WILSON of Oklahoma, Mr. WOLVERTON, and Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR., were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 2822) to amend the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 264), disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SPENCE, Mr. BROWN of Georgia, Mr. PATMAN, Mr. MONRONEY, Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. GAMBLE, and Mr. KUNKEL were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1951

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7786) making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the time for debate on the appropriation bill is limited to 10 minutes to any Senator, and the debate or comment must be pertinent to the issue.

The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 250, line 5, to strike out "$7,000,000" and to insert "$7,400,000."

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, the appropriation in the Budget for the general administrative expenses of the Bureau of Reclamation last year was $4,300,000. I undertsand that due to a reallocation of functions probably a comparable figure for the functions to be performed this year would be $7,490,000. The House cut this amount to $7,000,000. The committee has raised the figure to $7,400,000, or virtually to a figure identical with the appropriation for the group functions of last year. Since the over-all program of the Bureau of Reclamation for 1951 is being reduced below that of 1949–50, it seems to me that the administrative costs of the Bureau of Reclamation can also be reduced. Therefore, I think we should go back to the House figure of $7,000,000. I hope the committee amendment will be rejected.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois has stated the basic reason for the increase from $4,300,000 to the amount that appears in the bill. He is in error, however, about one figure.

The record which I have before me shows that to the $4,300,000 there was transferred from other branches of the service $3,189,000, which had been paid on separate projects. The Senator also overlooked the increased cost required by law by reason of the pay acts, which amounts to $224,000. Actually if we appropriated a comparable amount to last year it would be $7,713,000. The Budget allowed $86,000 more, or $7,800,000. As it stands, the appropriation is $400,000 under the Budget Bureau's figure. We are actually providing less money than was provided for all these purposes last year.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I read from the report of the House Committee on Appropriations at page 173:

> Since the over-all program of the Bureau in 1951 is reduced below that of the current year, $7,000,000 should be entirely adequate for general administrative expenses.

Mr. HAYDEN. We listened to the explanations, and the committee decided to increase the amount $400,000 under the Budget estimate. We should like to take it to conference on that basis.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 250, line 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 251, line 10, after the word "expenses", to insert a colon and the following additional proviso: "Provided further, That not exceeding $150,000 of funds available for expenditure under this appropriation shall be used for salaries and expenses in connection with information work."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Administrative provisions," on page 251, line 20, after the word "binding", to strike out "not to exceed $75,000 for services as authorized by section 15 of the act of August 2, 1946 (5 U. S. C. 55a), including such services at rates for individuals not to exceed $100 per day, when authorized by the Secretary" and insert "services as authorized by section 15 of the act of August 2, 1946 (5 U. S. C. 55a), at rates for individuals not in excess of $100 per diem (not exceeding $100,000 for individuals)"; on page 252, line 4, after the word "Reclamation", to insert "payment, except as otherwise provided for, of compensation and expense of persons on the rolls of the Bureau of Reclamation appointed as authorized by law to represent the United States in the negotiation and administration of interstate compacts; and, without reimbursement or return under the reclamation laws;"; in line 13, after "(e))", to insert "including payments on account of dependents of employees in field offices in project areas engaged in construction and related activities"; in line 18, after the numerals "1945", to insert "to be reimbursable to the extent therein provided"; in line 21, after the word "prints", to strike out the semicolon and "and studies of recreational uses of reservoir areas, as authorized by law"; in line 22, after the amendment just above stated, to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That funds appropriated for the Bureau of Reclamation shall be available for expenditure through the facilities of the National Park Service in amounts of not to exceed $25,000 for any one reservoir area for studies of recreational areas and planning for their utilization, and funds so expended shall not be reimbursable or returnable under the reclamation law."; on page 253, line 4, after the amendment just above stated, to strike out the colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That no part of any appropriation made herein shall be available pursuant to the act of April 19, 1945 (43 U. S. C. 377), for expenses other than those incurred on behalf of specific reclamation of projects except $7,000,000 under the head 'General administrative expenses' and $375,000 ($175,000 for reconnaissance and $200,000 for general engineering and research) under the head 'General investigations' "; and in line 11, after the amendment just above stated, to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided further, That, except as otherwise provided by the act of April 19, 1945 (43 U. S. C. 377), or by any other law, no part of any appropriation made herein shall be available pursuant to the said act of April 19, 1945, for expenses other than those incurred on behalf of specific reclamation projects except expenses under the head 'General administrative expenses' and under the head 'General investigations'."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 256, after line 10, to insert:

TRANSFER OF EPHRATA AIR FORCE BASE

For the purpose of assisting in the construction, operation, and maintenance, and settlement programs on the Columbia Basin project in the State of Washington, the Armed Services, General Services Administration, or other Federal agency having ownership or custody thereof or interest therein, is authorized and directed to transfer to the Bureau of Reclamation, without reimbursement or transfer of funds, all of their right, title, and interest to certain buildings, facilities, and equipment at the Ephrata Air Force Base, Ephrata, Wash., including the following buildings in accordance with block and building numbers: Block 800, building No. 68; block 1900, buildings Nos. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17; block 2000, four buildings numbered 75, two buildings numbered 56; block 3000, buildings Nos. 56, 131, 58; block 2900, buildings Nos. 59, 53, 55, 57, 66, 89, 90, 85, 84, 124, 141, two buildings numbered 60, two buildings numbered 64, two buildings numbered 65; block 3300, eleven buildings numbered 28; block 3400, seven buildings numbered 28; block 3500, buildings Nos. 43, 46; block 3600, buildings Nos. 34, 35, 36, 38, two buildings numbered 37; block 3700, buildings Nos. 35, 38, four buildings numbered 31, two buildings numbered 32, two buildings numbered 34, two buildings numbered 37; block 3800, buildings Nos. 35, 38, 39, 42, two buildings numbered 37; block 4300, buildings Nos. 19, 20, 21, 22; block 4400, buildings Nos. 113, 114, two buildings numbered 112; block 4600, buildings No. 134; block 4700, buildings Nos. 94, 95, 96, 99, 109, 100, 35, 108, 104, 110, six buildings numbered 97; block 4800, buildings Nos. 53, 40, 102, 101, 103, 105, 107, 111, two buildings numbered 32, five buildings numbered 106, three buildings numbered 98, together with one sewage-disposal plant No. 116, one water tank No. 115, one well, one flag pole No. 118, two garbage racks Nos. 155, two garbage racks Nos. 158, one wash rack No. 63, two grease racks No. 62, and sewer system, water lines, electric-power lines, railroad spur and siding, road improvements, and all other facilities and equipment incident to the foregoing property, and including land and rights-of-way formerly under Reclamation withdrawal to other federally owned land on which said buildings are situate, which have heretofore or which may hereafter be declared surplus to the needs of the Armed Forces.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Geological Survey—Surveys, investigations, and research," on page 258, line 18, after the word "activities", to strike out "$19,129,000" and insert $19,382,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Mines—Construction," on page 261, line 4, after the word "expended", to strike out "$1,372,600" and insert "$1,268,100."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Administrative provisions," on page 261, line 22, after the word "exceed", to strike out "one hundred and forty-five" and insert "one hundred and fifty, of which one hundred and forty-five shall be."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 263, after line 8, to insert:

The Veterans' Administration is authorized to transfer to the Department of the Interior, for the use of the Bureau of Mines, without compensation therefor, full jurisdiction, possession, and control of a parcel of 43 acres, more or less within the boundaries of the Fort Snelling Government Reservation in Hennepin County, Minn.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "National Park Service—Maintenance and rehabilitation of physical facilities," on page 264, line 10, after the word "Service", to strike out "$7,250,000" and insert "$7,448,100."

Mr. DOUGLAS. This is an appropriation for the maintenance and rehabilitation of physical facilities of the National Park Service. I should like to call attention to the fact that for the fiscal year 1949–50 the appropriation was $6,990,000. The House bill increased this amount by $260,000, to $7,250,000. The Senate committee is raising the amount by virtually $200,000 more, to a figure which is nearly a half million dollars more than the amounts for last year. Mr. President, this appears to have been inserted in the bill prior to the outbreak of the Korean war. I think we must transform our thinking with reference to these matters in view of the events of last month. We must curtail our civilian expenditures. As the President has very properly stated, new capital investments should be reduced. Similarly, maintenance and rehabilitation appropriations should be reduced. I see no justification, in view of the national emergency, of spending half a million dollars more on the maintenance and rehabilitation facilities in the national parks than we spent last year. I hope the committee amendment will be rejected. This is a very mild thing to do, because even under the House bill we would spending about $200,000 more than we spent last year.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I should like to point out that we made a very serious mistake during the Second World War in following the philosophy which is advocated by the Senator from Illinois. We thought it would be a good thing to cut down on capital investments and on operation and maintenance expenditures. As a matter of fact, during the war the parks were occupied by military personnel, and the public was able to go there as well.

For lack of maintenance, the roads are now in a deplorable condition. This money would merely keep them open so that the public could get in and out of the parks. No extravagance is involved in this appropriation. It is designed primarily to maintain what we have. War or no war, that must be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 264, line 10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Construction," on page 264, line 17, after the word "expended", to strike out "$20,542,000" and insert "$19,667,000."

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, now we come to an item of new construction. Last year, 1949–50, $14,595,000 was appropriated. On the face of it the committee seems to be covering itself with glory because it has reduced the amount appropriated by the House. It reduces the figure from $20,542,000 to $19,667,000. The first reaction on seeing the reduction is to say to the committee, "What a fine job it is, because you are cutting down the appropriation by nearly $900,000."' However, if we go back and make comparisons with last year we find that it is more than $5,000,000 above the 1949–50 figure. Mr. President, I can see no excuse for increasing the construction appropriation by $5,000,000 when we are in the midst of hot hostilities in Korea and when we are faced with terrific financial difficulties.

So, Mr. President, I move to strike the amount in the committee amendment and substitute in its stead "$15,000,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was on page 264, line 18, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$8,935,000" and insert "$7,935,000."

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the city of Charleston, S. C., is celebrating the two hundredth anniversary——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement there can be discussion only of an amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thank the Presiding Officer. I was absent in a meeting of the Committee on Banking and Currency when the agreement was entered into.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair realizes that. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 264, line 18.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment of the committee was on page 264, line 23, after the numerals "1950," to insert "and, in addition, the Secretary is authorized to incur obligations and enter into contracts, not exceeding a total of $100,000 for the construction of a public information building in the Theodore Roosevelt National Memorial Park, N. Dak.;" and on page 265, line 6, after the word "appropriation", to insert a colon and the following additional proviso: "Provided further, That not to exceed $150,000 of the funds available for the Independence National Historical Park, Pa., shall be available after January 1, 1951, for the management, protection, maintenance, and rehabilitation of Independence Hall, grounds, and structures in that park."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General administrative expenses," on page 265, line 15, after the word "officers", to strike out "$1,264,500" and insert "$1,314,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ECTON. Mr. President, before proceeding further, I should like to revert for a moment if I may, to the amendment on page 260? Last year the Committee on Appropriations inserted an amendment to provide that the Government should take over the chrome mine in Montana, and that amendment was in the bill when it passed the Senate. The conference committee deleted it. In view of the Korean situation and the emergency of the war, I wondered if the distinguished Senator from Arizona, the chairman of the subcommittee, would consider an amendment along that line at this time.

Mr. HAYDEN. Under the parliamentary situation, Mr. President, committee amendments are to be acted on first. The Senator does not propose to amend the committee amendment, but proposes to add a new provision, does he not?

Mr. ECTON. I propose to add a new provision.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator will have an opportunity to do that after the committee amendments have been acted on. It is not in order at this time.

Mr. ECTON. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Fish and Wildlife Service—Management of resources," on page 266, line 11, after "(16 U. S. C. 695–695c)", to insert "and not to exceed $30,000 for payment, in the discretion of the Secretary, for information or evidence concerning violations of laws administered by the Fish and Wildlife Service"; and in line 14, after the amendment just above stated, to strike out "$7,157,000" and insert "$7,082,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Investigations of resources," on page 266, line 22, after the word "law", to strike out "$3,900,000" and insert "$4,125,000."

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, last year there was appropriated $3,324,000 for "Investigations of resources" in the Fish and Wildlife Service, a term which, like an overcoat, can cover a multitude of sins. The House, passing on this provision long before the Korean crisis, raised the sum to $3,900,000. The Senate committee, not to be outdone, raised it to $4,125,000, or $800,000 above last year's appropriation.

Mr. President, I cannot believe that the need for investigations into scientific and economic studies and investigations, conservation, management, protection, and utilization of fish and wildlife resources, including related aquatic plants and products, is so great a national necessity that we should spend $800,000 more for them than we did last year. I believe we can let the aquatic life be relatively less investigated than the committee plans call for, and the war effort can then move forward a little bit better. Eight hundred thousand dollars will equip two or three companies of soldiers. I cannot see that economic and scientific investigations of fish and wildlife, aquatic plants and products, publication and statistics, are as important as guns, artillery, and other munitions of war. So I hope very much that the committee will agree with me. I still hope that they will agree when I propose that we strike out "$4,125,000" and substitute "$3,325,000", which is the same as last year's appropriation, thus saving $800,000. I look toward the very able Senator from Arizona with a gleam of hope in my eye that at last we may be able to save some money. I wait with bated anxiety for his reply.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I sincerely regret to disappoint the Senator, but he forgets a very important fact, namely, that the fish supply is a very large part of the food of the American people, and that it is essential, in order to carry on a war, that we have an adequate food supply. The only increase the committee has allowed above the House figure was for fish freezing experiments. At present it is exceedingly difficult to catch the fish at sea and bring them in in a fresh condition. Another provision is for a fish survey of the blue fin tuna in the North Atlantic. On the whole, this appropriation is fully justified.

I might add, if the Senator is interested in knowing it, that the committee denied requests for $977,000 worth of new construction and new development by this bureau. We felt we should hold it to where it is, but that if it is to operate effectively, the amount carried in the bill is required. Therefore I hope the committee amendment will be supported.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I desire to associate myself with the remarks made by the able junior Senator from Illinois. With the exception of the appropriation for the office building, we have not been making any savings, and have not very much to show for our efforts in economy. It seems to me that one thing the Members of the Senate overlook is the fact that in the case of this appropriation bill, many of the increases were drafted before the Korean situation developed, and before it appeared that we may be involved on an even wider scale in other parts of the world.

I would ordinarily follow the recommendations of a standing committee, because I know the amount of work and effort that has gone into any report a standing committee makes, but it seems to me that wherever it is possible now to save money without affecting the national defense or the national security, or without impairing or prejudicing measures necessary for the health and welfare of the people, or the efficient prosecution of the ordinary and current activities of the Government, we should do so. It seems to me that this is an item which could very readily be cut without detriment to any of the people of the country. Therefore I urge that the amendment to the amendment be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I should like very briefly to state that I hope that the committee recommendation will be followed. This amendment is vital to the New England fish industry, which at the present time is competing, with a great deal of difficulty, with Canada, Newfoundland, and Greenland. Two hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars of the amount proposed is to carry on experiments in freezing fish at sea. The purpose of doing that is to bring them in in an orderly way, so as not to have a glut on the market at one time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this is not only proposed for the benefit of New England, but for the benefit of the entire country, including Illinois.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I agree with the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from New York that we should do something because of the military emergency, by way of proper retrenchment; but American soldiers cannot fight well unless they have something to eat. Food is just as much a part of warfare as is a gun, or artillery, or some other military equipment. I am glad the amendment of the Senator from Illinois was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 266, line 23.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, in connection with the amendment I should like to make the statement that last year there were established four new stations for the training of men who are engaged in this service. I have been advised that there is some question as to whether the estimates as set forth in the 1951 justifications provide sufficient funds for continuing on a full-year basis four additional cooperative wildlife units created by the Congress last year.

It is my understanding that $11,000 additional is required to activate completely these units on a full-year basis, and I see no objection to the Fish and Wildlife Service making up this deficiency for these units out of lapses, delay in filling positions, or such other minor adjustments as might be necessary within the total appropriation recommended for "Investigations of resources."

It was suggested that we add to the amount of money provided in the bill to accomplish this purpose, but I believe it can be done within the sum appropriated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Construction," on page 267, line

6, after the word "expended", to strike out "$2,401,000" and insert "$2,423,450."

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, this is an item, "For construction and acquisition of buildings and other facilities alleged to be required in the conservation, management, protection, and utilization of fish and wildlife resources and the acquisition of lands and interests therein, including continuing the construction of fish cultural facilities on lands owned by the State of South Dakota."

Mr. President, for this purpose last year we appropriated $1,800,000. The Bureau of the Budget, which has looked on these appropriations with a somewhat liberal eye, I may say, and has not exercised great intestinal fortitude in trying to save money for the taxpayer, raised this sum to $2,401,000. The House went along with the Bureau of the Budget. The Senate committee, however, in its anxiety to improve the fish culture facilities of South Dakota and elsewhere, raised the sum by $22,000. This may seem to be a small amount, but it is $600,000 over the amount appropriated last year.

While I do not wish to have an undue amount of fun with this appropriation, I should like to suggest that culture can be furthered in other ways than piscatorial culture, and it would seem to me that the general cause of enlightenment is not particularly helped by raising the cultural level of the fish in this area. Mr. President, here is a chance where we can save money; we can spend as much as last year, but reduce appropriations $600,000.

I want to underscore what the distinguished junior Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN] has said. This budget was drafted in December, presented to Congress in January, long before the Korean hostilties were ever dreamed of. Yet we are blithely going ahead, not only putting it into effect, but raising the ante in a great many instances. Now, let us go back to last year at least and save $600,000, even though the cultural level of the fish in South Dakota may be somewhat less than it otherwise would be.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, permit me to say to the Senator from Illinois, that the Senate committee did not insert the item for the State of South Dakota. That was adopted by the House of Representatives. The amount provided for in this bill is modest. The increases allowed by the Senate committee are very small compared with the absolute need. The demand throughout the United States, if we could supply it, would require $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 to provide for the hatching of fish so that they might be placed in the streams where they could be caught. We have added nothing of that kind to the bill at this time.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, in the committee amendment on page 267, line 6, I move to strike out the Senate committee figure of $2,423,450, and to insert the figure $1,800,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Migratory bird conservation fund," on page 267, after line 21, to strike out:

For carrying into effect section 4 of the act of March 16, 1934, as amended (16 U. S. C. 718–718 h), an amount equal to the sum received during the current fiscal year from the proceeds from the sale of stamps, to be warranted monthly and to remain available until expended.

And in lieu thereof, to insert:

For carrying into effect section 4 of the act of March 16, 1934, as amended (16 U. S. C. 718–718h), amounts equal to the sums received during the current year and each fiscal year thereafter from the proceeds from the sale of stamps, to be warranted monthly and to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Territories and island possessions—Administration of Territories and possessions," on page 270, line 8, after the word "Columbia", to strike out "$3,329,500" and insert "$3,392,180."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Construction of roads, Alaska," on page 270, line 17, after the word "expended", to strike out "$20,400,000" and insert "$18,883,212."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 271, after line 8, to insert:

CLAIMS, ALASKA ROAD COMMISSION

For payment of claims certified by the Comptroller General of the United States to be due for overtime compensation earned in 1945 and prior fiscal years under the provisions of section 23 of the act of March 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 522), $12,893, to remain available until June 30, 1952: Provided, That no part of the amount received by any claimant in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with any such claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding, and any person violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Construction, Alaska Railroad," on page 272, line 1, after the word "expended", to strike out "$31,000,000" and insert "$28,700,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first committee amendment in the next chapter.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Chapter VIII—Executive and independent offices—Title I, Executive Office of the President, Bureau of the Budget," on page 280, line 9, after "(28 U. S. C. 2672)", to strike out "$3,386,000" and insert "$3,412,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office for Emergency Management—Philippine Alien Property Administration," on page 281, line 6, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$160,000" and insert "$215,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Independent Offices—American Battle Monuments Commission," on page 282, line 19, after the word "typewriting", to strike out "$695,000" and insert "$670,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 283, line 11, after the word "elsewhere", to strike out "$8,680,000" and insert "$8,500,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Atom Energy Commission," on page 287, line 1, after the word "justified", to strike out the colon and the following additional proviso: "Provided further, That no part of the foregoing appropriation or contract authorization shall be used in connection with the payment of any contractor or firm of contractors engaged under a cost plus a fixed fee contract or contracts at any installation of the Commission, where the fee for community management is at a rate in excess of $90,000 per annum, or for the operation of a transportation system where the fee is at a rate in excess of $45,000 per annum.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the clerk has proceeded to the chapter dealing with the Independent Offices. I think it was the understanding that the chapter on Labor and Federal Security of the measure would be taken up next. The chapter on Labor and Federal Security was postponed because of the absence of one of the members of the committee. I think that is the next in order of business. While I am very happy to have the rapid progress we have achieved in the last few minutes on chapter VIII, it is my opinion that the orderly procedure should be to return to chapter V.

Mr. CHAVEZ. We are ready to proceed with that chapter.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate revert to chapter V.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be in order. The clerk will state the first committee amendment, in chapter V.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I hope very much the Chair will rule that the items in the Independent Offices chapter which we dealt with thus far have not been formally approved.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; they have been.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments which have been considered have all been approved.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I did not hear the title of the new chapter read. I have never seen Walter Johnson or Bob Feller in their palmiest days move with such speed as the clerk moved in reading those items. In the space of about 2 seconds we suddenly got over to page 287, and I had a batch of amendments ready from page 280 on. I am a green rookie here, and I will not say that there are curve balls, but I will say that there are some speed balls being thrown. I move to reconsider the votes by which the amendments from page 280 on were agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Which amendments?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I suggest that when we return to chapter VIII we begin afresh.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Illinois can present the amendments he has in mind. There is no need to reconsider amendments which have been agreed to, to which the Senator does not propose to offer amendments.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I have amendments on pages 280, 281, 282——

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I did not hear the title of that chapter read. We seem to have suddenly moved out of Interior into Independent Offices, and as I said, Walter Johnson never threw faster balls in his life than were thrown just now.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when we return to chapter VIII, the Senator from Illinois may offer his amendments.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter will be left standing as it is then, and when we return to chapter VIII the Senator may offer his amendments.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, may we proceed now with chapter V?

Mr. McKELLAR. It begins on page 128.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment under chapter V will be stated.

The first amendment under the heading "Chapter V—Department of Labor and Federal Security Agency—Title I—Department of Labor—Office of the Secretary," was on page 128, line 19, after the figures $1,861,000", to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That the compensation of the Solicitor shall be $14,000 per annum."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the amendment just stated was in line 1, on page 129; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is at the top of page 129.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I raise the point of order that the amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it is too late for the Senator to raise the point of order at this time, for the amendment has already been adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware wish to move that the vote on the amendment be reconsidered?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and I so move.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Delaware that the vote by which the amendment was adopted be reconsidered. [Putting the question.]

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment on page 129, lines 1 and 2, is now before the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I raise the point of order that this amendment constitutes legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well made, and is sustained.

The next committee amendment will be stated.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, let me inquire whether the amendment just rejected on a point of order is on page 129.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, at the top of that page.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That amendment relates to the Solicitor for the Department of Labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title II—Federal Security Agency—Food and Drug Administration," on page 138, line 7, after the word "exceed," to strike out "seventeen passenger motor vehicles for replacement only" and insert "sixty-five passenger motor vehicles, of which seventeen shall be for replacement only."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 138, in line 15, after the word "operations", to strike out "$5,066,700" and insert "$5,666,700."

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I am trying to move with speed, but it is a little difficult for me to make sure just what amendment is now pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is that in line 15, on page 138.

Mr. DOUGLAS. In that connection, let me ask the reason for the inclusion of provision for the purchase of 48 automobiles. Is that provision proposed in order to enforce the oleomargarine law?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes. The reason for the addition is because of the necessity for replacements. It has been a long time since the department has had any replacements whatever of the old cars. After complete hearings and a showing made by the Department as to the real necessity for obtaining automobiles as replacements, the committee made this recommendation.

Another reason which justifies the adoption of the recommendation which is made by the committee is that a short time ago the Congress passed legislation by which oleomargarine became a legal commodity, as it were; and Congress placed upon the Food and Drug Administration of the Department of Labor the duty and function of carrying out the provisions of the oleomargarine law. Some of the automobiles covered by the amendment are to be used by that particular agency.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, to this committee amendment I call up my amendment marked "7-13-50—F." That amendment is submitted on behalf of myself, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. McKELLAR. To what amendment does it relate? Does it relate to the one on page 138, in line 15?

Mr. LEHMAN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New York, for himself and other Senators, to the committee amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 138, in line 15, it is proposed to strike out "$5,666,700" and insert "$5,966,700."

In the committee amendment, on page 161, in line 1, it is proposed to strike out "$535,100" and insert "$547,100."

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is to increase from $624,000 to $936,000 the funds available for the enforcement of the inspection provision of the oleomargarine law recently enacted by this Congress. I submit this amendment to the committee amendment only because I believe that adequate inspection affects millions of our people.

In letters printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 1, 1949, the Food and Drug Administration and the Bureau of the Budget estimated that enforcement of the new oleo law would require 950 agents on the basis of only one check or inspection visit a year to every public eating place in the United States. This would mean an expenditure of $6,000,000. Of course, I do not ask for any such sum. I do propose and urge that the sum appropriated be increased to that requested by the President, namely, $936,000. Even that sum, according to testimony of Mr. George Larrick of the Food and Drug Administration, would allow an inspection of only one out of five eating places a year.

There are in the United States 525,000 public eating places which should be—if the law is to be adequately enforced—inspected at least once annually. The amount here proposed, $936,000, would not provide adequate enforcement; but if it is the amount the Food and Drug Administration now requests, I am reluctantly willing to go along with that program. In these times when the emphasis must necessarily be on expenditures required for our essential security, we must be content with less than what we would ordinarily ask.

It was testified that perhaps 10 percent of the restaurants in America, or 50,000 public eating places, are now serving yellow oleomargarine in place of butter, without notice to the public. This is fraud, Mr. President—fraud upon the public and fraud upon the dairy industry. I think it should be stopped in any way that is practicable.

Rigid enforcement of the law against such fraud and deception was promised by the sponsors of the legislation to take the excise tax off oleomargarine. I now ask that my colleagues who supported this measure join me in voting for an increased appropriation for the enforcement of that law.

Testimony given before the Senate Finance Committee last year disclosed that in Pennsylvania, 153 out of 500 public eating places which were inspected were violating the law against the substitution of oleo for butter without notice to the public. If this was the situation in Pennsylvania while the tax was still in effect, what will the situation be with the tax removed and the incentive to substitute oleomargarine for butter obviously increased by the greater spread between the price of oleo and the price of butter?

Mr. President, I hope the pending amendment to the committee amendment is approved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York and other Senators to the committee amendment on page 138, in line 15.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 138, in line 15.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of Education," on page 142, line 4, after the word "same", to strike out "$1,900,000" and insert "$2,023,420."

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee, the ranking minority member, and also the acting majority leader. I wish to inquire whether it is contemplated that we shall conclude action on the bill tonight. In that connection let me refer to a colloquy I had on Friday last with the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] as shown at page 10798 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, just before he left the city of Washington. He asked unanimous consent that two amendments in which he was interested not be discussed until his return.

Mr. McKELLAR. They should be returned to and will be returned to when he comes back to the city.

Mr. WHERRY. I did not know whether separate arrangements had been made about that with the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I understand that the Senator from Washington will be back tomorrow.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the colloquy I had with the distinguished Senator from Washington was to the effect that we would protect him until Tuesday. That arrangement was made in order to get him to withhold objection to consideration of the bill in his absence.

In the event it is contemplated that the bill will be passed tonight, I thought I should make that point now.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, is the pending amendment that on page 142, in line 4?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, in the appropriation bill for last year—that is for 1949–50—we provided $1,900,000 for salaries and expenses of the Office of Education.

The appropriation bill as passed this year by the House provides that that sum shall be continued, and the bill as passed by the House also provides that the salary increase which went into effect shall be absorbed by means of a reduction of the personnel of that agency. In the judgment of the House of Representatives the number of employees in the Office of Education, particularly for overall administration, is excessive—or, in other words, that there is fat in that office, and that the increases in salaries can be absorbed by means of a reduction in the personnel.

However, our committee has recommended an increase in that amount by $123,420, both over the amount of the appropriation made last year and over the amount voted by the House of Representatives this year.

Mr. President, here is a bureau or agency which the House of Representatives thinks is overstaffed. I think my sympathy with the objectives of the Office of Education is rather well known. However, this is no time to play favorites. We need general retrenchment. I believe that this office, by means of increasing the efficiency of its work, can carry on at last year's level with the amount voted by the House of Representatives.

So, Mr. President, I hope the committee amendment will be rejected, so that we may save $123,000.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Illinois, and to support the committee amendment. Speaking as the ranking member on the minority side of the aisle, we went into this very thoroughly. As a matter of fact, the amount allowed the Office of Education will keep that office only at its present level, and, because of the salary adjustments, if this amount were not allowed, it would actually mean a curtailment of the Office of Education. There has been considerable reorganization in the Department over a period of time, and I think that the justifications for this amount were amply sustained before the committee.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Not only that, but the budget estimate for the 1951 item was $2,168,600. The committee allowed only sufficient to keep up the 1950 item, as it were, and allowed only $2,250,300.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public Health Service," on page 145, line 11, after the word "determine", to strike out "$14,900,000" and insert "$14,500,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 145, line 15, after the word "vehicles", to strike out "$10,000,000" and insert "$9,600,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 148, line 8, after the word "only", to strike out "$1,357,000" and insert $2,107,000."

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, this appropriation is for the administration, namely, the payment of salaries and expenses of hospital constructions service. The Hill-Burton Act is one of the best bills I think that this Senate has passed in recent years. But this is not an item for the construction of hospitals; it is an item for the administration of the Federal grants which are given for hospitals. It is overhead. For the year 1949–50 there was appropriated $1,132,000. The House increased this by $225,000, to $1,357,000. The Senate increased the amount to $2,107,000, or a figure $750,000 above the House, and about $1,000,000 over last year.

The increase allowed by the committee is for research in hospital administration—not basic research into diseases, but research into the management of hospitals. I think such research can be done by private agencies. I do not think the Federal Government is exactly famous for its efficient hospital management. At any rate now is not the time to start such a program. The House has already allowed $225,000 more than last year for this item.

Mr. President, this is another illustration of a budget drawn up long before the Korean hostilities, long before these additional expenditures of at least $10,000,000,000 had fallen upon us, which for various reasons the Senate feels itself committed to. Despite the fact that the circumstances have certainly changed an increase is asked. I very much hope that we can hold to the House figure and thus save $750,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 150, line 2, after the word "including", to insert "grants of adrenocorticotriphic hormone (ACTH), cortisone, and other chemical substances, and for", and in line 7, after the word "diseases", to strike out "and including not to exceed $200,000 for transfer to the Department of Agriculture for research into utilization of plant material and vegetable sources of cortisone."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 150, line 21, after the word "Act", to strike out "$20,086,000" and insert "$20,686,000."

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I understand that this portion of the bill is to be passed over until the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] can be present.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That, I think, was one of the items the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] had in mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have these items passed over?

Mr. CHAVEZ. We were to act on them today, but when the Senator from Washington returned, if he wanted them reconsidered, he would have the opportunity.

Mr. McKELLAR. That was the understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. With that understanding——

Mr. MURRAY. I was not here, of course, when that understanding was arrived at. Had I been here, I should have asked for an opportunity, myself, to present an argument in support of the program covered by the item.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator wants to do that, he can do it tomorrow.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The Senator from Montana can speak then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana is recognized. The amendment is offered, and he can discuss it.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I am not prepared to discuss the amendment at this particular time. I did not know it was to come up, because I had been assured it would not come up in the absence of the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to state to the Senator from Montana that under the arrangement he will have an opportunity to discuss the amendment when it comes up tomorrow, or at some future time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; when it is reconsidered tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 151, line 3, after the word "diseases", to strike out "$9,944,000 and insert $10,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 151, line 10, after the word "vehicles", to strike out "$14,150,000" and insert "$14,750,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 151, line 18, after the word "only", to strike out "$2,040,000" and insert "$2,140,000."

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, that is an item in which I am interested, and I assume it is one of the projects that will go over.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I understood that was the request of the Senator from Nebraska, to which the chairman agreed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will go over.

The next amendment was, on page 152, line 16, after the figures "$1,375,000", to insert a colon and the following provisos: "Provided, That the Surgeon General is authorized to convey by quitclaim deed upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe not to exceed 25,000 square feet of land presently included in the site of the National Institutes of Health to the Bethesda Fire Department, a body corporate of the State of Maryland, for the purpose of erecting and maintaining a fire station to provide protection for the facilities of the National Institutes of Health and for the adjacent community: Provided further, That such terms and conditions may include an agreement by the Surgeon General to pay to such department on behalf of the United States 33⅓ percent of the cost of the construction of the station but not to exceed $20,000, to be charged to the maximum limits of costs set out in this paragraph."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "St. Elizabeths Hospital," on page 154, line 20, after the word "illness", to strike out "$1,948,000" and insert "$2,005,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Social Security Administration," on page 156, line 9, after the word "Columbia," to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$300,000."

Mr. DOUGLAS. This is an appropriation for salaries and expenses for the Bureau of Federal Credit Unions. This is a very worthy work. I have been a member of a credit union myself. I have subscribed to the capital stock of a credit union, and sometimes when I was hard pressed I contemplated the possibility of borrowing from the credit union; although I never did. It is a very worthy work. But there is a private association of credit unions, with its headquarters in Madison, Wis., and the President, I believe, some weeks ago laid the cornerstone for the headquarters. The Government did a splendid job in promoting the growth of credit unions, but the conduct of these credit unions is more and more passing into private hands, and I think properly so. Last year we appropriated for this Bureau $200,000, and that is the sum contained in the House report.

But there is a further reason why the House figure should not be increased I quote from page 103:

> Last year the committee suggested that the agency recommend changes in the basic legislation and the committee's action—

Namely, in holding the appropriation down to $200,000—> may stimulate the agency to move with greater dispatch in that direction.

This indicates that in the opinion of the House the Bureau had not shown great alacrity in putting itself on a more efficient footing. The Senate committee, in its report, on page 74, said:

> The Bureau is directed to formulate and execute plans with more dispatch than has thus far been displayed to achieve a program more nearly self-sustaining.

Implying that in the opinion of the Senate committee this Bureau had been dragging its feet in reorganizing itself and making itself more efficient. But nevertheless, the committee, instead of applying a financial stimulus to them to do better, gave them a $100,000 increase. That seems to me like telling a child that he cannot have any more cake, then giving him more cake and telling him not to ask for any more. This may seem to be a small item, but I hope that we will hold to the House figure of $200,000, and save $100,000 for the taxpayers and our defense effort.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, the members of the subcommittee who listened to the testimony were just as sincere and just as anxious to protect the taxpayer as is the Senator from Illinois. We dislike to think, every once in a while, that the only person on the Senate floor or before committees who is honest and has regard for the taxpayer is the Senator from Illinois. I deny that to be the fact. What happened before the committee was that the committee tried to provide the stimulus about which the Senator from Illinois so much loves to speak, but once in a while he forgets that there are 95 other Senators who are also sincere and are trying to bring about the best results for the Nation.

The Bureau of Federal Credit Unions had been for many years working under the authority of Congress, and it is now about to achieve the ideal about which the Senator from Illinois talks, and to become self-sustaining. It was for that reason that the subcommittee, after listening to the testimony, decided to recommend $300,000, an increase of $100,000 over the House allowance. That is greater than the 1950 appropriation. The Senator from Illinois speaks about the budget when it suits his convenience, and he forgets about it when it does not suit his convenience. The amount is $75,000 below the Budget Bureau estimate.

The Bureau of Federal Credit Unions was directed to formulate and execute its business with more dispatch than has thus far been achieved.

That is the dispatch which has been so eloquently discussed by the Senator from Illinois. The committee wanted to make it self-sustaining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 156, line 9.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 156, line 19, after the word "fund", to insert "of which not more than $404 shall be available for payment in advance when authorized by the Federal Security Administrator for dues or fees for library membership in organizations whose publications are available to members only or to members at a price lower than to the general public."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 158, line 7, after the word "distribution", to strike out "$1,500,000" and insert "$1,510,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the Administrator", on page 161, line 1, after the word "Columbia", to strike out "$511,100" and insert "$535,100."

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I may say, before I speak on the amendment, that I regret it very much if I have given to any Senator the impression that I regard myself as having either more wisdom or more virtue than has any other Member of the Senate. I do not feel that way, and it is not true. I certainly have not wished to convey that impression. It is not pleasant to rise with respect to item after item and be bowled over. I had a feeling this afternoon that it would be futile for me to make this effort, and that the most discreet thing for me to do was to keep my mouth shut and not try to speak on these items. I was afraid that what I would have to say would be misunderstood and that Members of the Senate would feel I was either a crank or I was self-righteous. I certainly hope that I am neither.

But, Mr. President, we are in a very serious position. We have a deficit of $4,000,000,000, exclusive of the Korean war, and unless we tax for the Korean war, the deficit will amount to billions of dollars in addition. We are told that the way to approach the question is by selective cutting. If we do that, we can deal with items only as they arise. It is not a pleasant thing to study this whole bill, item by item and to get up time after time, but I have to do it in this instance as I have to do it in other instances, because I feel that it is the best way to reduce appropriations.

To get down to business, I should like to point out that this is an item for salaries and expenses of the general counsel of the Federal Security Administrator. We expended on this group last year $455,000. The House raised this amount by $56,000, thus providing an increase for doing the work which the oleomargarine law will entail. The Senate raised that amount by another $24,000. This means that we shall be spending $80,000 more for lawyers than we did last year. If there is anything of which we have a surplus supply in Government it is lawyers, and we can take some of the existing lawyers and have them work a little harder. Also, the various agencies should use the legal services of the Department of Justice. I should be perfectly willing to adopt the House figure of $511,000 and provide a 10-percent increase, but I hope we can save at least $24,000 by rejecting the committee amendment.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. We should like to do that, but the difficulty is that last year there was less money for lawyers in this particular department. This year we gave the particular agency more work to do. While the Senator from Illinois may not have voted for the oleomargarine bill, Congress did create additional work for the agency. The Senate has heard the Senator from New York this afternoon complain because we cut $300,000 off the oleomargarine enforcement provision, and now comes the Senator from Illinois who complains because there are a few additional lawyers required to enforce a law which Congress passed. The amount is still under that recommended by the Budget Bureau.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I should like to say a few words on this particular item. I believe the Departments of the Government have too many lawyers. I have many times on the floor advocated that the Attorney General's office, through the Solicitor General's office, should be the legal adviser to the various departments, so that they would be receiving, as far as possible, impartial advice on legal questions. I believe that no private concern hires as many lawyers to do work, much of which is clerical and much of which is propaganda to the people of the United States, as does the Government. While I know that private concerns pay their top lawyers more money, they do not have as many lawyers as the Government employs. I hope the Senate will not continue to increase the legal forces so far as the Government is concerned.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, as the ranking minority member of the committee, I wish to support the position taken by the chairman of the subcommittee. I do not disagree with the Senator from Michigan, as a general proposition, that complete reorganization of the legal functions of the Federal Government is in order and should perhaps be concentrated in the Office of the Attorney General. During the 6 years in which I served in the legislature of California I was one of the authors of a bill which did away with independent attorneys and concentrated the work in the office of the attorney general. But I think that should be done by general legislation, after a study by the Judiciary Committee of which the able Senator from Michigan is a member. I think the testimony before our committee justified this nominal increase because of the oleomargarine work and other enforcement work which is connected with it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I do not always agree with my two distinguished friends, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] and the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND]. I usually agree with my friends on this side of the aisle, and as an efficient and competent committee has passed upon this question, I hope the Senate will sustain the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 161, line 1.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 162, after line 9, to insert:

SEC. 207. Appropriations under this title available for salaries and expenses shall be available for travel expenses and for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the functions or activity for which any such appropriation is made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 162, line 15, to change the section number from "207" to "208."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title III—National Labor Relations Board," on page 163, line 17, after "(5 U. S. C. 150)", to strike out "$8,550,000" and insert "$8,615,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes consideration of chapter V.

Mr. MAYBANK obtained the floor.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, at this point I believe it necessary to discuss briefly the effect upon the public assistance grants of section 1111, beginning on page 468 of the bill, and known as the antideficiency section, which section further amends section 3679 of the Revised Statutes.

The subcommittee of which I am chairman received hundreds of communications requesting clarification of this anti-deficiency section with respect to the apportionment of funds for grants.

The committee did not consider it necessary to amend the language, and wishes to register its understanding that subsection (e) (1) (B), as it appears on page 472 of the bill, will permit the apportionment of funds for public assistance grants in order to observe the legal commitments to the several States to make payment of, or contributions toward, sums which are required to be paid to individuals either in specific amounts fixed by law or in accordance with formulas prescribed by law.

This same understanding exists likewise in connection with the Employees' Compensation Fund, administered by the Department of Labor, to which fund the Federal Government makes contributions from which payments are made to employees suffering injuries and occupational disabilities.

Let me read the language in the bill to which I have referred:

(e) (1) No apportionment or reapportionment which, in the judgment of the officer making such apportionment or reapportionment, would indicate a necessity for a deficiency or supplemental estimate shall be made except upon a determination by such officer that such action is required because of * * * (B) emergencies involving the * * * immediate welfare of individuals in cases where an appropriation has been made to enable the United States to make payment of, or contributions toward, sums which are required to be paid to individuals either in specific amounts fixed by law or in accordance with formulas prescribed by law.

I thought it would be of interest to the Senate to make this statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I inquire as to the page and line at which we stopped when there were under consideration the amendments to chapter VIII of the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On page 283. The Senate stopped there with the understanding that the Senator from Illinois would have the right to move to reconsider the committee amendments from page 277 to page 283, for the purpose of offering amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Chair.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR CHILDREN'S BUREAU

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, the Senate Committee on Appropriations recommended $1,510,000 for the 1951 appropriation for the Children's Bureau. The committee indicated that the recommended figure would permit "the Bureau to continue its staff and program at the 1950 level."

In a letter to me, Mrs. Jack B. Fahy, executive director of the American Parents Committee, indicates that the recommended appropriation will not permit the Children's Bureau to operate at its 1950 level. During the present emergency I have no intention of seeking an increase in the recommended figure, but I feel this letter may be of interest to Senators and I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed, as follows:

AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE,
Washington, D. C., July 13, 1950.

DEAR SENATOR LEHMAN: The Senate Appropriations Committee reported out $1,510,000 for the Children's Bureau. This is $12,300 under the budget estimate recommended by the President. In the Senate Report 1941 it states "The amount recommended will permit the Bureau to continue its staff and program at the 1950 level."

This is untrue.

If Congress appropriates any amount less than what the President requested, the Children's Bureau will have to abandon plans to employ part-time consultants in plastic surgery, nutrition of children in hospitals, and medical care of premature infants. In addition they will have to choose between reducing services in regional offices or in headquarters.

In order to absorb a cut in amounts set aside for operation of regional offices, the Bureau would be forced, either (1) to reduce in at least one additional regional office the professional services already greatly curtailed, by releasing, for example, the medical director, a public-health nurse, or a medical social worker, each of whom performs services that are essential in the development and administration of maternal and child health and crippled children's programs; or (2) to curtail even further the travel funds available to regional staff who even now are unable to meet the requests of State agencies for consultation.

If the Bureau were to absorb the cut in its operation at headquarters, it would be forced to choose between several alternatives, each signifying elimination or curtailment of greatly needed services, such as: (1) to release one or more of its specialists such as the sole adviser on children's dentistry, the one consultant on juvenile-court work, or the only adviser on State training schools for delinquent children; or (2) to eliminate a greatly needed bulletin for parents—in spite of parents' expressed need for nontechnical material to help them understand and work with such children at home; or (3) to cease immediately all efforts to develop and carry out a study of different types of hospital care given premature babies—although prematurity is one of the leading causes of infant deaths today.

Sincerely,

MRS. JACK B. FAHY,
Executive Director.

DIXIE MARGARINE CO.—VETO MESSAGE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

To the United States Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, the enrolled bill (S. 1086) "For the relief of the Dixie Margarine Co., a Tennessee corporation, Memphis, Tenn."

The bill provides for payment of the sum of $69,530.40 to the Dixie Margarine Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Tennessee, in full satisfaction of its claim against the United States for refund of capital exacted by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, for taxes for the period March 1923 to November 28, 1925. The bill recites that the statutory period for refund of the moneys collected had expired prior to the date of a decision of the United States Supreme Court that the moneys had been illegally collected as taxes and it also having been held by both the United States Court of Claims and the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals that relief must be from the Congress and not from the courts.

It appears that in 1932 the Supreme Court held in the case of Miller v. Nut Margarine Co. (284 U. S. 498), that products similar to, if not identical with, the products manufactured by the Dixie Margarine Co. were not subject to the tax on oleomargarine. Thereafter, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue refunded to the Dixie Margarine Co. the sum of $234,512.86 representing all amounts collected as such tax from that company prior to the effective date of the act of July 10, 1930, refund of which was not then barred by the statute of limitations. The act of July 10, 1930 (46 Stat. 1022), amended the act relating to taxes on products defined as oleomargarine so as to include products such as manufactured by claimant company. The Commissioner refused to refund the sum of $87,410 paid during the period covered by this bill for the reason that no refund claim therefor had been filed by the company within the 4 years required by section 3228 (a) of the revised statutes, as amended, now section 3313 of the Internal Revenue Code.

In justice to all taxpayers the Government has had no alternative other than to disapprove, because of its discriminatory nature, the enactment of special legislation designed to relieve taxpayers who allow their rights to become barred by the statute of limitations. To approve the instant bill would be to prefer this taxpayer not only over other taxpayers similarly situated from whom such taxes were collected prior to the Supreme Court's decision in the Miller case, but also over taxpayers generally who are bound by the same statute of limitations.

It is contended that the instant case is to be distinguished from the ordinary case of refund of taxes on the ground that in the Miller case the Supreme Court held that the money collected was not taxes but was an exaction in the guise of a tax. In this connection it is pertinent to note that the Supreme Court case did not involve the Dixie Margarine Co. and the language of its opinion when read in context is hardly susceptible of this construction. However, even conceding such a distinction, the case would not differ from those in which similar exactions have been collected by the Government, such as the processing and floor-stocks taxes collected under the Agricultural Adjustment Act—held unconstitutional in United States v. Butler (297 U. S. 1) and Fontenot v. Ricker Rice Mills (297 U. S. 110), gift taxes collected under the Revenue Act of 1924 on gifts made prior to its enactment, Blodgett v. Holden (275 U. S. 142); Untermeyer v. Anderson (276 U. S. 440), taxes collected under earlier acts on articles later held not to be taxable as automobile parts and accessories, United States v. Jefferson Electric Co. (291 U. S. 386), and cases discussed; Cf. Indian Motorcycle Co. v. United States (283 U. S. 570), and many other situations far too numerous and of too general occurrence to warrant further consideration. Return of this tax to claimant would constitute little more than a windfall. It would not reach the consumers who must be presumed to have paid it.

For the foregoing reasons, I am constrained to withhold my approval from the bill.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 24, 1950.

JEWS IN AMERICAN HISTORY

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, Harry L. Golden and Martin Rywell wrote a book entitled "Jews in American History," in which is contained a foreword by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM]. The book deals with the Jewish people in my community, Charleston, S. C.

In the book are contained a great many articles taken from Charleston newspapers, with which I am familiar, because this year we are celebrating the two-hundredth anniversary of the Jewish congregation in Charleston, S. C. Therefore I should like to have printed in the RECORD at this point the articles to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE TWO HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE JEWISH CONGREGATION OF CHARLESTON, S. C., 1750–1950

[From Jews in American History, by Harry L. Golden and Martin Rywell, with a foreword by Senator Frank Graham]

Remembrances of Charleston—the remembrances of her laurels as they form a wreath and a song is on her lyre, Charleston with its stately mansions, high piazzas and colorful gardens looks out upon the harbor. A subtle strength permeates the peaceful brightness of her sun, the luminous turquoise sky and ecstacy is in the air. Charleston, mistress of the harbor and busy with its commerce. Fort Sumter out on the harbor as a reminder of a period bygone. Charleston stands picturesque and colorful—famed and fortunate.

1950 marks the two hundredth anniversary of the organization of the congregation in Charleston. Jews settled early in South Carolina since Gov. John Archdale states he had a Jew for an interpreter in Charleston in 1695.

Many have been illustrious citizens in its history, Moses Lindo, Francis Salvador, the Jews of Charleston who fought under Captain Lushington in the Revolution, Solomon N. Carvalho, the artist who accompanied John C. Fremont in 1853 on his expedition to the west. Michael Lazarus who opened the Savannah River to navigation by steam between Charleston and Augusta. De Leon, Penina Moise, the Harleys, Franklin J. Moses, brilliant lawyer who served as chief justice of the South Carolina Supreme Court, Philip Phillips, and Maj. Edwin Warren Moise of the Confederate Army and prominent lawyer. Dr. Elias Marks founded the Columbia Female Academy in 1820 and later the Barhamville school from which Miss Martha Bullock, mother of President Theodore Roosevelt was graduated. Dr. B. A. Rodriguez was a prominent dentist who in 1836 was the first to make an artificial plate.

Gov. John Archdale, in his new description of that fertile and pleasant province of Carolina (London, 1707), tells how, in 1695, he employed a Spanish-speaking Jew—a marrano who professed "the Christian religion as the Papists do"—as an interpreter between himself and the Florida Indians.

The name of a certain Mordecai Nathan appears in connection with an assessment of 1694. Samuel Mendis is mentioned in the records of 1696. Jews also were among the first to take advantage of "the act for making aliens free in this part of the Province and for granting liberty of conscience to all Protestants" (1696–97), as is indicated by the naturalization papers of Jacob Mendis, Abraham Avila (1697), and of Simon Valentine who was designated as "an alien of Ye Jewish Nation." Reference is made to David Riz and Moses Modina in 1700, and Jews are on record as having voted in the municipal election of 1703.

In the eighteenth century the number of Jewish settlers in Charleston (or, as it was then known, Charles Town), increased steadily. Most of them hailed from London, but some came from France, Holland, Jamaica, and Barbados. In 1741, there were several arrivals from Savannah, Ga., and thereafter others came from New York and Rhode Island, Germany and even Poland, where the author of the Sefer Haberith (Vilna, 1798), referred to Charleston as Charlesville.

These early Jewish settlers were mostly small traders, but some of them engaged in banking, agriculture, and industry on a large scale. Indigo culture, which in provincial days was the most lucrative industry of South Carolina, excepting the rice trade, flourished largely through the efforts of Moses Lindo, who arrived from London in 1756. In 1762, Lindo was appointed Surveyor and Inspector General of Indigo, a post created especially for him. Mordecai Sheftall, Philip Hart and the Joseph family did an extensive banking and exchange business with England and other countries. Also prominent in the colonial period was Joseph Levy, who was commissioned lieutenant in the Cherokee War of 1761.

In 1770, a number of Charleston Jews, including Lindo and Benjamin Hart, subscribed a substantial sum toward the maintenance of Brown University, a new institution in far-off Providence, R. I. Impressed by this generosity, the college trustees voted that "children of Jews may be admitted to this institution, and entirely enjoy the freedom of their own religion, without any restraint or imposition whatever."

During the period of the American Revolution the Jews, like the rest of the population, were divided in sympathy between the Patriot and Tory camps. But a remarkably large number served the Revolutionary cause. Indeed, after Charleston fell to the British, many Jewish families preferred to flee to Philadelphia, where 10 Charleston Jews were among the founders of Congregation Mikveh Israel in 1782. Of the 60 Charleston citizens who constituted the militia company of Capt. Richard Lushington, about 20 were Jews, and one of them, Joseph Solomon, was killed in the battle of Beaufort. At least 34 Jews served in the Revolution Armies. Of these, David N. Cardozo, who distinguished himself in the attempt to recapture Savannah, and Markes Lazarus were sergeants major; Jacob de la Motta and Abraham Seixas were captains. Maj. Benjamin Nones, of Philadelphia, distinguished himself in the siege of Charleston. Mordecai Sheftall was deputy commissioner general of issues to the Continental Army assigned to the southern department. Mordecai Manual Noah (1747–1845; not to be confused with his more famous namesake), contributed £20,000 to the cause of the Revolution, while Myer Moses, who supplied the Continental Army with provisions and aided the wounded and imprisoned American patriots, earned "the good wishes and gratitude of all," according to Gen. Thomas Sumter.

In 1791, the community, now incorporated and numbering over 400 persons, decided to erect a larger synagogue, and within a short period raised the amount of $20,000 for the purpose. This "new synagogue" which Lafayette later described as "spacious and elegant" was dedicated on Friday, December 19, 1794, with imposing ceremonies attended by the governor, the civil and military officers of the State, the municipal authorities, the clergy, and the public in general. It was regarded as the handsomest synagogue in America until its destruction in the great fire on Saturday, April 27, 1838.

Charleston Jews began their formal communal life on the day after Rosh Hashanah, 5510 (1749) when they organized Kahal Kadosh Beth Elohim (originally called Beth Elohim Nnveh Shallom), the fourth oldest congregation in what is now the United States. Moses Cohen was elected Haham or chief rabbi of the congregation, Isaac da Costa became Hazan or reader, Joseph Tobias, parnes or president, and Michael Lazarus, secretary. The officials of the congregation were probably unsalaried; they are known to have engaged in trade. The congregation was strictly orthodox, and its ritual was that of the Portuguese communities, as practiced in London and Amsterdam. A parochial school was also established, where the children were taught not only Hebrew and the rudiments of Judaism but secular subjects as well. In 1764, the congregation purchased the cemetery on Coming Street, adjoining the family burial ground of Isaac da Costa. In 1784 the Hebrew Benevolent Society was established, an organization for the care of Jewish poor, which is still active today. The Hebrew Orphan Society, founded in 1801, was the first to adopt the method of placing orphans in private homes.

In 1790 the congregation wrote an address of congratulations to General Washington on his elevation to the Presidency, and also joined in the felicitations sent him by the congregations of New York, Philadelphia, Newport, and Richmond to which Washington graciously responded.

At first the congregation worshiped on Union Street (1750-57), on Kong Street (1757–64), and on Beresford Street (1764–80). In 1780, Joseph Tobias granted it a 7 years' lease to his new house on Hassel Street for the consideration of a "Miseberach on every Yom Kippur night" during his lifetime. On this site, or very near it, Kahal Kadosh Beth Elohim has been holding services for more than a century and a half.

The period between the Revolution and the Civil War may be called the golden age in the history of the Jews of Charleston. The community grew rapidly until, by 1816, it consisted of more than 600 souls. At that time it is said to have been the largest, most cultured, and wealthiest Jewish settlement in the United States. Many of its members amassed considerable wealth and became prominent in various walks of life. Capt. Abraham M. Seixas was a magistrate and warden of the workhouse (1797). Myer Moses was elected a member of the legislature in 1810, and commissioner of free schools in 1811. Lyon Levy was State treasurer in 1806 and from 1817 to 1822. Jacob de la Motta, who in 1836 was elected a member of the Royal Academy of Medicine at Paris, was secretary of the Medical Society and the Literary and Philosophical Society of South Carolina. Apothecary Hall in Charleston, of which he was proprietor, is said to be the oldest drug store in the country. Abraham de Leon was noted as a physician, Isaac Harby, Mordecai Manuel Noah (1785–1851), and Jacob N. Cardozo as essayist, dramatist, and journalist, respectively; while Penina Moise stood out as a poet and hymnal writer of marked ability. Solomon N. Carvalho was an artist and inventor. David Lopez, an architect and builder, is credited with the invention of the forerunner of the modern torpedo boat, the Little David, which attacked the United States Ironsides during the Civil War. Philip Phillips, the congressman and lawyer, achieved prominence first in Charleston.

Among the leading merchants of Charleston prior to the Civil War were the Tobiases, the Harts, the Mordecais, Abraham Ottoleghi, and Jacob Barrett. Mordecai Cohen, a Polish emigrant, became, next to Robert Adger, the wealthiest citizen of South Carolina. He was also the most philanthropic, and his memory is perpetuated on a tablet erected by the city in the Charleston Orphan Home. Maj. Joshua Lazarus, president of the Cheraw Bank, introduced the use of illuminating gas into Charleston, and Michael Lazarus, one time vice president of the Palmetto Society, opened up steam navigation on the Savannah River with a line between Charleston and Augusta, Ga. Later, Solomon S. Solomons further helped the expansion and prosperity of the city by constructing the Northeastern Railroad, of which he was president until it consolidated with the Atlantic Coast Line. Aaron Lazarus (born Charleston, 1777), was one of the first Jewish settlers in Wilmington, N. C.

Jews were prominent also in the social life of their native or adopted city. It was chiefly due to them that Charleston became the "see city" of the Masonic fraternity. Isaac da Costa, a member of King Solomon's Lodge No. 1 since 1753, founded the Supreme Grand Lodge of Perfection in 1783, while Abraham Alexander, Emanuel de la Motta, Israel de Liebon, and Moses C. Levy promoted the organization of the Supreme Council of the Scottish Rite of Freemasonry. There was little, if any, social discrimination against the Jews. They held memberships and were elected to office in such exclusive societies as the Palmetto, the Ubiquarians, and the St. Andrews. They entertained lavishly, and contributed generously to Christian and nonsectarian institutions. They were followers of the chase, and some distinguished themselves as expert huntsmen and skillful duelists. When the Marquis de Lafayette visited Charleston in 1825, the gold and silver plate used at the banquet tendered in his honor by the city, was borrowed from Mordecai Cohen, and Dr. Abraham de Leon was the recipient of the grand master's jewel (a Masonic decoration) as a personal gift of Lafayette "for the happiest hours of my life which you have afforded me."

Many Jews of Charleston took an active part in the War of 1812, in which Abraham A. Massias served as major and Myer Moses as captain. Solomen Heydenfelt, who served in the war againstt the Seminole Indians in 1836, later became chief justice of the supreme court of California. In the Mexican War, Jacob Valentine, the youngest member of the Palmetto regiment, was severely wounded at Churubusco.

Charleston Jews made a specially brilliant record in the War Between the States. The first and largest contribution ($10,000) to South Carolina's war chest was made by Benjamin Mordecai, who also fed at his own expense thousands of the widows and orphans of his fallen fellow patriots. So many Charleston Jews enlisted in the service of the Confederacy that from 1862 to 1866 K. K. Beth Elohim found it impossible to obtain a quorum of trustees, and could hold no regular meetings. Some families sent to the front every male member capable of bearing arms, while lads of 12 and 13 ran away and volunteered to act as messengers or drummer boys. From the Jewry of Charleston came such soldiers as Valentine, this time as captain; the hero, Marx E. Cohen, Jr.; Sgt. Maj. Maier Triest. Of the 182 who went to the front, 25 were killed.

It was during the prewar period that the Charleston synagogue became the cradle of the Reform movement in American Judaism. In 1824, 47 members who were dissatisfied with the traditional mode of worship, the lengthy Sephardic service, and the exclusive use of Hebrew which few of the congregants understood, presented a petition to the board of trustees requesting changes in the liturgy and the introduction of English. Receiving no response, they seceded from the congregation and organized (1824) the Reformed Society of Israelites. The leading spirit in this movement was the litterateur Isaac Harby until he left Charleston in 1828; David Nunez Carvalho acted as its first reader. The schism caused much bitterness in the hitherto peaceful community till a reconciliation was effected in 1833.

With the appointment of Gustavus Poznanski to the rabbinate in 1836, the Reformers found a new champion of their cause. During the construction of a synagogue to replace the building that had burned to the ground in 1838, the Reformers presented a petition to the trustees (1840) signed by 38 members urging that an organ be included in the synagogue to assist in the vocal part of the service. Poznanski supported this move. The request, however, was rejected by the board, but the board was overruled by a general meeting of the members. This brought about a split in the congregation. Poznanski eventually resigned his post, though he had been elected in 1838 for life. When K. K. Beth Elohim proceeded with plans for the organ, forty conservative members withdrew, formed the Congregation Shearith Israel, and erected a synagogue of their own on Wentworth Street (1847). Jacob Rosenfeld, who officiated at the dedication, was the congregation's first Hazan, and served for a number of years. But in 1851, Shearith Israel advertised in the Occident for a Portuguese Hebrew Reader and Scholar at an annual salary of $800. Ellis Lyons (1852–53), Solomon Jacobs (1853–58), and Henry S. Jacobs (1858–61) all served as rabbi.

The congregation was disbanded in 1866, owing to the exigencies of the Civil War, however, and the membership rejoined the fully Reformed parent congregation.

Forty thousand dollars was raised for the new synagogue for K. K. Beth Elohim on the Hasell Street site. The architect and builder was David Lopez. The cornerstone was laid on January 3, 1840, the building completed in February 1841, and dedicated in March 1843. It is a model of Grecian Doric architecture. Over its doors is a marble table bearing the inscription of the Shema in Hebrew with the translation: "Hear O Israel, the Lord our God is the sole Eternal Being."

It was also in the last days of the old synagogue (1838) that a religious school was organized exclusively for the instruction of the youth in the tenets of Judaism. The leaders of this project were Aunt Sally Lopez and the poetess, Penina Moise, who communicated with Rebecca Gratz a few months after the latter established the first Jewish Sunday school in Philadelphia. They received valuable suggestions from Miss Gratz and the weekly lessons which she prepared for her own pupils.

During the Civil War, the scrolls of the Torah, the records of the congregation, and other valuables were shipped to Columbia for safekeeping, but were destroyed when the city was burned at the time Sherman's army captured it (1865).

K. K. Beth Elohim continued in the vanguard of the reform wing of Judaism. In 1879 it introduced the prayer book compiled by its then rabbi, David Levi, and later it adopted the Union Prayer Book. Its doors were kept open to nonmembers, even on the high holy days, and it was among the first congregations to admit women to full membership and elect them to its board of trustees. In 1879 the women's gallery was removed and the reading desk (Bimah) was placed in front of the Ark. In 1924 the tabernacle was renovated and enlarged through a bequest by Miss Anna Luryea.

A score of rabbis have served K. K. Beth Elohim. These include: Moses Cohen (1750–62), Lsaac da Costa (1750–64, approx.), Abraham Alexander (1764–84, approx.), Abraham Azuby (1785–1805), Jacob Suares (1807–11), E. N. Carvalho (1811–14), Hartwig Cohen (1718–23), S. C. Peixotto (1823–35), Gustavus Poznanski (1836–50), Julius Eckman (1850–51), Maurice Mayer (1852–59), Abraham Harris (1860–66), M. H. Myers (1866–68), J. H. M. Chumaceiro (1868–74), Falk Vidaver (1875), David Levy (1875–93), Rabbi Lewis (1893), Barnett A. Elzas (1894–1909), Isaac E. Marcuson (1910–14), Jacob S. Raisin (1915–43), Sidney Unger (1943–45), and Dr. Allen Tarshish, who is the spiritual head of the congregation today.

Among the most prominent Charleston Jews in the period since the Civil War were: Lee C. Harby, the authoress, in whose memory the Daughters of the American Revolution erected a tablet; Octavus Roy Cohen, the author; Samuel Rittenberg, member of the general assembly from 1913 to 1914; and from 1925 until his death in 1932; Dr. Leon Banev, president of the International Society of Medical Health Officers and associate professor of preventive medicine at South Carolina Medical College; Anita Pollitzer (Mrs. Eli Edson), vice president and member of the executive board of the National Woman's Party.

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION—ADDITIONAL COPIES OF REPORT AND TESTIMONY

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, earlier in the day the junior Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Michigan sent a resolution to the desk. The resolution simply provides that Members of the Senate be furnished with copies of the so-called Tydings Committee Report, and that 1,500 additional copies of it be printed for the use of anyone who is interested in it. The resolution asks that the proceednigs at all hearings, both open and closed be printed. Some dispute has arisen as to whether all the proceedings have been included. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] stated that 30 pages of testimony had been deleted. It may be that other portions of the testimony are not complete. The difficulty is that it would take a concurrent resolution for Members of the Senate to have these copies made available to them, unless the chairman of the committee cleared them. One or two Senators today were unable to get copies, but I think they said it was all right. In a way I think the committee should have jurisdiction, as they have had, over any printed copies.

I wonder if there is any objection to unanimous consent to consider the resolution, which is self-explanatory, and provides exactly what the junior Senator from Nebraska has requested.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I would have to object, inasmuch as Members of the Foreign Relations Committee are not present. I object to the resolution being taken up at this time. I told Senators that there would not be any business transacted after we finished with the appropriation bill, and I feel that I must keep faith.

Mr. WHERRY. I will not press it further. I did not feel that it was such an issue that any other Senators would have to be here. In fact, it can be seen that so far as I am concerned, I merely wanted to clear the RECORD so that Senators could get copies of the testimony.

I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. With the resolution as it has been presented, would it have to be considered before any other copies are printed? I am told there are 40 or 50 pages of the record which do not appear in the copy of the hearings now available. Furthermore, it is printed only for the use of the committee. Would any additional copies be printed until a resolution had been considered and adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If any additional copies are printed, it would have to be by resolution.

The Chair has been informed the resolution has been referred.

Mr. WHERRY. That is what would be done, unless I withheld it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution lie over and be taken up tomorrow at the beginning of the session, and not go to the committee. I do not think it is necessary to send it to the committee and have hearings on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Arizona to the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask unanimous consent that instead of sending the resolution to the committee, which would be a referral, it be held over until tomorrow, and that it be taken up tomorrow when the Senate reconvenes.

Mr. McFARLAND. I think it should go to the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Parliamentarian calls the attention of the Chair to the fact that the rule requires that it go to the committee.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand that, but I ask unanimous consent that it be not referred tonight, and that the Senate take it up for consideration the first thing tomorrow, in order to expedite it.

Mr. McFARLAND. I believe such matters, which involve printing of records, should take the regular course. I want every Senator to have a copy of the record. I presume there will be a demand for a great many more copies than merely those necessary for Senators. I think the resolution should go to the Committee on Rules and Administration, and that they should determine on the number. I think that is the proper place for it, because certainly the Committee on Rules and Administration is the committee to determine how much is to be spent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the regular order.

Mr. WHERRY. I recognize that unanimous consent can be requested, and blocked, but I think I am not asking for anything more than what the committee itself would do. It would prevent further printing of any copies unless the whole record was printed.

If the distinguished acting majority leader feels that the resolution should not be acted upon tonight, then it will be referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, or perhaps to the Committee on Foreign Relations. To what committee would it be referred?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator could ask that the resolution lie on the table.

Mr. WHERRY. I want to take it up tomorrow. To what committee would it be referred?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To the Committee on Rules and Administration.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection.

Mr. McFARLAND. I would have no objection to the resolution lying on the table until tomorrow.

Mr. WHERRY. That is exactly what I asked, that it lie on the table and be taken up tomorrow morning.

Mr. McFARLAND. The Senator asked that it be taken up tomorrow.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly.

Mr. McFARLAND. I am not going to agree that it be taken up, but I do not mind agreeing to its being in the same status tomorrow that it is in today.

Mr. WHERRY. If the Senator refuses to give consent to have it lie on the table and have it taken up tomorrow, I would just as soon have it referred to a committee.

Mr. McFARLAND subsequently said: Mr. President, in regard to the reference of the resolution, there was a misunderstanding between the minority leader and myself. I have no objection to its lying on the table, to be in the same status tomorrow it is in today. I do not want to be committeed to agree that it be taken up, but I think we can work the situation out between now and sometime tomorrow.

Mr. WHERRY. In view of that statement, I ask that the resolution lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie on the table.

CONDITIONS ON FORMOSA AND QUEMOY

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I wish to take just a couple of minutes of the Senate to call attention to a press dispatch which has just come in over the wires dated Taipei, Formosa. It reads:

TAIPEI, FORMOSA.—The Chinese Nationalists reported tonight the Communists were bombarding the northeast corner of Quemoy Island and were sending junks for what might be a long-anticipated assault.

The Defense Ministry spokesman who made the report to newsmen said Nationalist ground troops on the 50-square-mile island opposite the Red mainland, 100 miles west of Formosa, were adequate to cope with the expected attack. He said they would be supported by locally assigned Nationalist air and naval units.

Mr. President, I got out my notebooks, and I find that I was on Quemoy Island last November, an island otherwise known as Kinman Island. I flew there from Formosa.

The commander of the island is General Hu Lien, one of the ablest combat commanders in the forces of the Government of the Republic of China. With a very small force of men he won a notable victory last October 25, 26, and 27, when with limited equipment he beat off an amphibious assault of over 10,000 Communist troops, captured 6,000 of them with all their equipment, and drove back into the sea those who had not been killed by his troops.

The Chinese soldiers on Kinman Island demonstrated great courage. They held their positions despite the fact that their lines had been infiltrated, and it seems to me that we have a considerable responsibility, because at the request of the President of the United States the Government of the Republic of China ceased its blockade of the Chinese coast, and ceased its assaults by air upon the concentration and mobilization points of the Chinese Communist forces. If at this time we have tied the hands of the Republic of China in defending this island, which may well be the key to Formosa itself, we will be doing a great disservice to the free world.

This is not a case of the Government of the Republic of China attacking the Chinese mainland, but on the contrary is an attempt by the Chinese Communists to invade Kinman Island, otherwise known as Quemoy Island. The Government of the United States should make very clear immediately that the Government of the Republic of China is free to use its navy and its air force to the fullest extent to see that they do not lose the Island of Kinman.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Thomas P. O'Donovan, of Illinois, to be United States marshal for the northern district of Illinois;

Eugene J. Smith, of New York, to be United States marshal for the eastern district of New York;

John M. Comeford, of Wisconsin, to be United States marshal for the western district of Wisconsin; and Donald A. Draughon, of Puerto Rico, to be United States marshal for the district of Puerto Rico.

By Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

C. Tyler Wood, of the District of Columbia, to be deputy United States special representative in Europe, with the rank of Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary;

John E. Peurifoy, of South Carolina, a Foreign Service officer of class 1, now serving as an Assistant Secretary of State, for promotion in the Foreign Service to the class of career minister, and to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Greece, to serve concurrently and without additional compensation as Chief of the American Mission for Aid to Greece;

Hocker A. Doolittle, of New York, a Foreign Service officer of class 2, to be the representative of the United States of America on the United Nations Commission for Indonesia; and Carlisle H. Humelsine, of Maryland, to be an Assistant Secretary of State, vice John E. Peurifoy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nomination in the new report on the Executive Calendar.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Clarence J. McCormick to be Under Secretary of Agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed. That is the only new report on the calendar.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION—PROGRESS ON APPROPRIATION BILL

The Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I wish to express my appreciation to the distinguished minority leader and the other Senators for cooperating and enabling the Senate to devote 1 hour of work today to the important appropriation bill, which is the unfinished business. I hope we can make further progress tomorrow, and that Senators will bear in mind that it is important to the defense of the country that the appropriation bill be passed immediately, for delay will jeopardize departments which are charged with the responsibility for the defense activities.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, in commending the distinguished acting majority leader for the work he has done today, I wish to say that it will be our position on this side to continue to cooperate and to get the bill passed. I wish to reiterate that there are two or three speeches which will be made tomorrow, and when they are out of the way we no doubt can go right on with the other chapters of the appropriation bill. I think we have completed seven chapters.

At least three chapters have not yet been considered. The minority will do everything it can to help expedite consideration of the bill.

Mr. McFARLAND. I thank the distinguished minority leader. I am hopeful we may be able to arrange a unanimous-consent agreement tomorrow, similar to the agreement we worked out today, as soon as two speeches have been concluded.

Mr. WHERRY. As I have said, the minority will cooperate.

RECESS

Mr. McFARLAND. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, July 25, 1950, at 11 o'clock a. m.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate July 24 (legislative day of July 20), 1950:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Clarence J. McCormick, of Indiana, to be Under Secretary of Agriculture.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JULY 24, 1950

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou infinite and eternal God, grant that in these days of world crisis we may have that courage of heart and that constancy of faith which will keep us from anxiety and fear, from discouragement and despair.

Wilt Thou daily illumine with divine wisdom the minds of all who have been called to lead our beloved country in this time of trial and struggle.

We thank Thee for our fellow citizens who are out on the fields of battle giving themselves so bravely and sacrificially for the preservation of those blessings of freedom and democracy which our forefathers found hard to win and which we now are finding hard to hold.

May we be faithful and worthy partners with all who are the loyal champions of the rights of man and who are seeking to bring in that better day when the kingdom of peace and good will shall be established everywhere.

In Christ's name we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, July 20, 1950, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carrell, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 3859. An act to authorize the President to control the anchorage and movement of foreign-flag vessels in waters of the United States when the national security of the United States is endangered, and for other purposes; and

S. 3937. An act to authorize the President to extend enlistments in the Armed Forces of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate recedes from its amendment to the bill (H. R. 3506) entitled "An act for the relief of Louis P. Murphy, United States immigrant inspector, El Paso, Tex."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills and concurrent resolutions of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1027. An act for the relief of the Merit Co.;

S. 1049. An act for the relief of Amy Alexandrovna Taylor and Myrna Taylor;

S. 1792. An act for the relief of Thomas Nicholas Epiphaniades and Wanda Julia Epiphaniades;

S. 2243. An act for the relief of Tevfik Kamil Kutay;

S. 2864. An act to authorize certain administrative expenses for the Department of Justice, and for other purposes;

S. Con. Res. 91. Concurrent resolution favoring the suspension of deportation of certain aliens; and

S. Con. Res. 95. Concurrent resolution favoring the suspension of deportation of certain aliens.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2160) entitled "An act to amend the Public Health Service Act to authorize annual and sick leave with pay for commissioned officers of the Public Health Service, to authorize the payment of accumulated and accrued annual leave in excess of 60 days, and for other purposes"; requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MURRAY, Mr. PEPPER, Mr. NEELY, Mr. TAFT, and Mr. SMITH of New Jersey to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2822) entitled "An act to amend the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 264)"; requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MAYBANK, Mr. ROBERTSON, Mr. DOUGLAS, Mr. TOBEY, and Mr. FLANDERS to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Vice President has appointed Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina and Mr. LANGER members of the Joint Select Committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of August 5, 1939, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government," for the disposition of executive papers referred to in the report of the Archivist of the United States numbered 51–2.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency may sit this afternoon during general debate in the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE ACT

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2822) to amend the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 264) with House amendments thereto, insist on the amendments of the House and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. SPENCE, BROWN of Georgia, PATMAN, MONRONEY, WOLCOTT, GAMBLE, and KUNKEL.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

[Mr. JONAS addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

TAKING THE COMMUNIST PARTY OFF THE AMERICAN BALLOT

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a bill today to take the Communist Party off the American ballot. Their presence on the ballot of this country gives them prestige and recognition to which I do not believe the Communist Party is entitled. The Communist Party is not a political party; it is a revolutionary party which seeks to destroy every other political party by force, violence, and bloodshed, if necessary. Does anybody in this House believe that if the Communist Party won an election in the United States there ever would be another election?

Every Communist takes orders from Moscow. His party is the fifth column here and in every freedom-loving country. It is hostile to freedom and Christian civilization the world over. Every informed American knows that under our system of government the defeat of any political party in a free election does not mean the end of that party or its political faith. It will have another chance or chances in the future.

Should the Communist Party win a national election, all political faiths would end, their leaders shot or exiled, their property seized, and their organization destroyed. Freedom and free government—the Republic of the United States—would "perish from the earth."

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. FORD asked and was given permission to address the House for 15 minutes on Tuesday, July 25, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

PERSONAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. GOODWIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOODWIN. Mr. Speaker, during roll call No. 211, I was called from the Chamber on official business. If I had been present and voting, I would have voted "no."

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

[Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio addressed the House. Her remarks appear in the Appendix.]

A NEW VIEW ON SURPLUS FOODS

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, Secretary Brannan has surrendered. For almost 6 months he was perfectly happy about the mounting scandal of Federal Government hoarding of wholesome food commodities. The fact that it was costing the American taxpayers scores of thousands of dollars each day did not interest him in the least. The possibility and probability that a lot of this food would spoil gave him no concern whatever.

But now when hoarding food is unpatriotic and when he and his Department is issuing warnings against it daily he is suddenly awakened. This morning he appeared before the House Committee on Agriculture. He described the critical nature of the problem of disposing of these foods. He offered a solution. This solution is exactly what was contained in four bills filed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CORBETT], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR.], and myself on February 2. Twenty additional Members of this body endorsed these bills. But, Mr. Brannan would have no part of them.

His conversion is welcome but decidedly belated. As I listened to him I felt certain that the statement warranted a further study in the light of the facts as to this program and I shall make that study with the hope that I can report further to you this afternoon during a special order.

In any event, Mr. Brannan now urges emphatically immediate action. I hope our committee will give us that opportunity at once. If the situation is as serious as Mr. Brannan describes it, and I suspect it is worse, surely all the Members of this body have the right to pass upon this. In view of the opposition by Mr. Brannan and the President to any action in this field during these months, some Members may claim no action by Congress was necessary. Now Mr. Brannan makes action imperative. No one can doubt who will be blamed by the executive department if action is not taken.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. JACKSON of Washington asked and was given permission to address the House for 10 minutes today, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

ADDITIONAL FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, it has been stated by Government sources that an additional 250,000 Federal employees will be hired as a result of the Korean problem.

This morning's news reports estimated 12,000 Government jobs now available in the District of Columbia, compared with 2,000 at the time of the last announcement.

Apparently wholesale hirings are in process of being undertaken by the Government agencies.

Yet, there is to this moment no breakdown of the expenditures requested by the President. The Government agencies themselves do not know how the money is to be spent. They cannot possibly know how many new employees, if any, are required for the successful prosecution of the war in Korea.

To the profits-as-usual, politics-as-usual, hoard-as-usual crowd it appears that we can add Government as usual. There is as little patriotism in hoarding Government workers as there is in hoarding food.

ANNUAL AND SICK LEAVE FOR COMMISSIONED OFFICERS OF THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 2160, an act to amend the Public Health Service Act to authorize annual and sick leave with pay for commissioned officers of the Public Health Service, insist on the amendments of the House, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Mr. PRIEST, Mr. BIEMILLER, Mr. WILSON of Oklahoma, Mr. WOLVERTON, and Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. MILLER of California (at the request of Mr. HOLIFIELD) was given permission to extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.

Mr. HOLIFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in four instances.

Mr. WILSON of Oklahoma asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances.

Mr. BARTLETT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

Mr. HEDRICK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a statement by Frank Pace, Secretary of the Army.

Mr. PRICE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in four instances and include extraneous matter in each.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in three instances and include excerpts.

Mr. MASON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an article by Robert B. Dresser on the need for limiting the spending power of Congress.

Mr. POTTER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances; in each to include an editorial.

Mr. KEATING asked as was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances; in two to include editorials, and in one a radio address.

Mr. GOLDEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in two instances, in each to include newspaper articles.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in three instances and include newspaper material in each instance.

Mr. COLE of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. RICH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.

Mr. MAGEE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a short editorial.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial from the Charlotte (N. C.) News of July 19, 1950, on the proposed Lodge-Gossett amendment to the present electoral college system and in another instance to extend his personal remarks with reference to the voluntary retirement of the Hon. J. HARDIN PETERSON from the Congress after the present session.

Mr. JACKSON of Washington asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an article appearing in the Harvard Law Review, written by Prof. Zecharia Chafee, Jr.

Mr. CROOK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Clarke Beach appearing in the South Bend Tribune of July 20.

Mr. BOYKIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a statement by Louis Johnson.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

Mr. MADDEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. My observation does not indicate the presence of a quorum. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

EXTENDING ENLISTMENTS IN THE ARMED FORCES

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow it may be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3937; that general debate shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, with the time being equally divided and controlled by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] and myself.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and from what I know about this I do not think I shall object, I think it would be well for the gentleman from Georgia to tell us what the measure is which he proposes to call up tomorrow and give us something of the reasons or necessity for it.

Mr. VINSON. The bill deals with freezing enlistments in the Army, Navy, and Air Force. The enlistment of some 135,000 men will expire within 1 year, and they will expire at the rate of 4,000 a month in General MacArthur's forces in the Pacific. This measure proposes to extend those enlistments for 1 year until we can get Reservists, National Guard men, and draftees to take their places. It was unanimously passed by the other body and unanimously recommended by the Committee on Armed Services. It is one of the things the President is urging the Congress to do immediately.

Mr. HALLECK. As I understand it, the gentleman's request provides for debate and consideration of the measure on the floor of the House.

Mr. VINSON. Yes; exactly. It will be open to amendment. I do not have time to bring it before the Committee on Rules, otherwise I would be before the Committee on Rules asking for a rule.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the bill H. R. 9177?

Mr. VINSON. Yes. The House bill, H. R. 9177, is the same as Senate bill 3937.

Mr. McCORMACK. What about the House bill, H. R. 9178, suspending the authorized personnel strength of the Armed Forces?

Mr. VINSON. I intend to make the same request with reference to that bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

SUSPENDING AUTHORIZED PERSONNEL STRENGTH OF ARMED FORCES

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the same unanimous-consent request on H. R. 9178.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Georgia explain the bill?

Mr. VINSON. This bill removes the statutory ceiling on the composition of the Army, Navy, and Air Force. At present the Army is fixed by law at 837,000. This bill removes that limitation. It leaves it entirely up to the Congress as to what the strength of the Armed Forces shall be through the appropriations of the Congress.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman tell us anything about any other messages which may be necessary to give immediate consideration to, which may be reported by his committee?

Mr. VINSON. The Armed Services Committee started today having hearings with the Joint Chiefs of Staff, each one separately. Admiral Sherman advised the committee that for the time being this is the only legislation that he is particularly interested in. There probably will be some other legislation, but it is not as urgent as this. I do not think there is any important legislation except making the money available.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. The leadership on both sides is much interested in the gentleman's statement. The gentleman said, "For the time being." Did Admiral Sherman give any statement as to what he meant by "for the time being"?

Mr. VINSON. Of course, we have not finished with the Joint Chiefs of Staff, but as to anything that has been sent to my office, these are the only two bills that are necessary for the House to consider immediately.

Mr. McCORMACK. "For the time being" and "immediately." Just what does that mean?

Mr. VINSON. I would say that as far as this week is concerned and next week is concerned, we do not have any legislation in the mill that the Department has sent up.

Mr. McCORMACK. Well, the gentleman had better tell the Department that if they have anything in the mill this week or next week, they had better get it up as quickly as possible.

Mr. VINSON. I appreciate that. I am just as anxious that the House take a recess as the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]?

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF TWO ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6454) to authorize the appointment of two additional district judges for the northern district of Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6454, with Mr. THORNBERRY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BYRNE] is entitled to 30 minutes and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] is entitled to 30 minutes.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 8 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to quote from a letter by Peyton Ford, the assistant to the Attorney General, to the chairman of our committee [Mr. CELLER], what I consider to be salient features of this particular proposal, and which undoubtedly will be interesting and also valuable to the members of the committee:

In considering the merits of this measure, it may be of some assistance to compare the court business in the northern district of Illinois with that in the northern district of California and the eastern district of Pennsylvania, which are two districts having comparable work loads. For the fiscal year 1947 the average number of cases adjudicated and terminated per judge was 415 in the northern district of Illinois, 473 in the northern district of California, and 393 in the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

The figures for the year 1948 in those districts were 359,443, and 326, respectively, and for the year 1949, 454, 417, and 351, respectively.

It is to be noted that the court for the northern district of Illinois adjudicated and terminated more cases in the fiscal year 1949 than were so disposed of in either of the other districts. Yet, instead of being able to reduce the backlog, it has increased from 349 cases per judge in 1947 to 429 cases in 1949. It is also noted that it takes approximately a year on the average to file and dispose of civil cases and many cases may not be disposed of for 2 years because of lack of judicial manpower.

During the first session of the Eighty-first Congress, Public Law 205 was enacted (approved August 3, 1949) providing two additional judgeships for both the northern district of California and the eastern district of Pennsylvania. In view of the above comparative statistics there appears to be equal or greater justification for providing similar judicial assistance for the northern district of Illinois.

The Judicial Conference of the United States, at its meeting last September, recommended the creation of the two additional judgeships which would be provided for in this measure.

In view of the foregoing considerations, the Department of Justice favors the enactment of the bill, and the Bureau of the Budget has advised it is in accord with the program of the President.

Yours sincerely,

PEYTON FORD,
The Assistant to the Attorney General.

I consider that to be very important by way of comparison with the judges that were put into office a year ago in California and in Pennsylvania, indicating that the greater need for these judges is found in the State of Illinois than in either of those two States.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to quote a little from a statement of the chief judge, John P. Barnes, of the district court for the northern district of Illinois, testimony that he gave before our subcommittee when we were having hearings upon these particular bills.

I am now quoting:

It was not until about a year ago that I looked over our calendars and observed that the accumulation of cases was getting to the point where we must have help. I knew we were getting behind but did not know that the situation was as serious as it is; whereupon I assembled statistics in the Director's office and we called a meeting of the judges and then decided to ask for help. We addressed our communication to the conference of the seventh circuit. At that meeting our recommendation for additional help was approved, and at that conference were present all the judges of the circuit with one exception, and that request was unanimously approved.

Thereupon our request went before the national conference and was carried there by Chief Judge Major, and that conference approved our request for two additional judges. It was not until after that was done that any of these bills for creating additional judgeships were presented.

So I call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that these bills are not what we would call fly-by-night bills; these are not just accommodation bills; these are not just friendship bills as was indicated here last Thursday as the manner in which bills of this character come up and are disposed of by the House. These are bills that are well documented, most essential, and necessary, and carry what we call the highest degree of probity and necessity.

Quoting further:

There are in our district a number of long cases—cases that will take a long time to try. After I was designated to appear before you I asked them to write me letters regarding the matters which should be called to your attention. I will just tell you of one of them.

Judge Sullivan wrote me a letter calling attention to four cases on his calendar. One of these is an antitrust case which will take a year to try. Another of these cases is an antitrust case which will take 5 months to try. Four of them will take 6 to 7 months, and a fifth 4 to 6 weeks on the calendar of one judge.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself two additional minutes.

Quoting further from Judge Barnes:

You will observe that on July 1, 1944, there were 1,105 civil cases pending in the District. On April 1, 1950, there were 2,428 civil cases pending—an increase of 1,323 cases. During the same time, the number of criminal cases pending in our court has increased by 176.

So you can readily see that there is great necessity for these judgeships, a good reason, a good foundation, and a direct cause for the introduction of this bill by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]. May I say in this connection that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] also introduced an identical bill with that of Mr. SABATH. The bill of Mr. SABATH is the one we are discussing, the one introduced by Mr. YATES having been set aside.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JONAS].

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Chairman, I am vitally interested in this bill and I am not going to take time discussing certain phases of the bill that were discussed here the other day. As was done in the case of the bill dealing with an additional judge for Texas, I am going to start off on the same premise as that of the distinguished gentleman from that State, and particularly those who are familiar with the district. In my opinion, the soundest argument and the best evidence you can get whether a judge is necessary or not necessary is from those who have to practice their profession in the particular district involved.

Since I left the bench in the Superior Court of Cook County I venture to say that I have been in the Federal courts of the northern district of Illinois at least once a week during court hours. There is no question about the fact that the court calendar is exactly as has been detailed here, only we get it statistically and in figures. If you would approach the situation from a professional or practical standpoint you would not hesitate one moment to give this district or add to the district two additional judges.

The congestion is almost beyond description. Where we formerly tried cases within 3 months, we now have to wait 12 to 15 months. This has made the cost of litigation almost prohibitive in that district. Where a witness obtains only about $3 a day for witness fees, and he is a craftsman or tradesman of some kind, and he comes to court and the case is continued time and again he finally refuses to be cooperative. The litigant under the circumstances then has to pay him a salary which in some instances amounts to $15 a day or more. The jurors also become uncooperative because they do not get an opportunity to sit in judgment on cases and they persist in importuning and harassing the judge to be excused. All of which results in turmoil and confusion.

Unfortunately we just lost a district judge the other day; Judge Shaw, died suddenly, so we are already one judge short. You have no idea of the condition of the calendar in the District Court of the Northern District of Illinois, especially during vacation period, with one or two judges sitting and trying to dispose of all the litigation. The scene represents a town meeting much more than a courtroom because of the congested condition that prevails every morning. Scores of witnesses, litigants, lawyers, and all those who are a constituent part of our jurisprudence that deals with expediting justice, are there.

There is just one request I make, Mr. Chairman. I am not interested in this situation from a political standpoint. I think the last place in the world where partisanship should play a part is in the selection of who is eligible to sit in judgment of his fellow man. The selection should be on the basis of whether he meets the necessary qualifications, rather than whether he is a good Democrat or a good Republican, or whatever he may be. The question, first of all, is this: Is he capable, is he a well trained and an experienced lawyer, who possesses integrity and proper judicial temperament and a good moral character.

In Illinois I am a member of the Cook County Central Committee that has to do under our laws with the selecting of candidates for Cook County judgeships, and those who are to go on the ticket as nominees. We have an agreement among both parties that no man is eligible or is considered for a position on that ticket unless he is first thoroughly screened through the Chicago Bar Association or the Illinois State Bar Association, and if they do not approve of his qualifications, then he does not get consideration for the position that he is seeking. By reason of that fact we have left off a number of the sitting judges time and time again, and we have refused to nominate men who have not made a good record in the courts while acting as judges, and who do not possess the necessary requisites to make a competent, fair, and impartial judge. So I ask you to consider this bill first, because of the pressing need that we should have two judges in our district and, second, I hope some consideration will be given by the proper body, when the bill is finally passed, that we nominate for those positions men of the highest caliber, outstanding, distinguished lawyers, who can do the job and do it right, to relieve the congestion in the courts that have this tremendous amount of work to do, and finally that such nominees are approved by the local or State bar associations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONAS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. I have here a letter dated February 17 from the Chicago Bar Association, signed by the executive secretary, Mr. Denning, who states:

> I am directed to advise you that the board acting for the association favors the legislation which will provide two additional judges for the northern district of Illinois.

That is the Chicago Bar Association.

Mr. JONAS. I am glad to learn that they favor the legislation. They said nothing about the selection, did they?

Mr. BYRNE of New York. And I have here a letter from the Illinois State Bar Association. This is the office of the president, Albert E. Jenner, written under date of March 1, 1950:

> I am pleased to advise you that the board of governors of the Illinois State Bar Association has unanimously approved H. R. 6255.

Mr. JONAS. I am sure they would, because they know better than anybody else the necessity for having those two additional judges.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. I have here also a letter from the American Bar Association, signed by Howard F. Burns, dated March 6, 1950, in which he states:

> A meeting of our committee was held in Chicago on February 26, 1950, in connection with the winter meeting of the house of delegates of the bar Association, and at that meeting of the committee, at which a quorum was present, we voted unanimously to recommend the passage of H. R. 6255.

Do those agree with the gentleman's idea?

Mr. JONAS. I thank the gentleman for the information. I take it the gentleman is aware of the fact that one of the justices died, and we have a temporary vacancy. The pressure is all the greater because of that situation.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. The judge passed away a few days ago?

Mr. JONAS. That is right; Judge Shaw.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LANE].

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, there were two bills filed to take care of this situation in the northern district of Illinois, which of course takes in the Chicago district. One of the bills was filed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] and the other by his colleague [Mr. YATES]. Both of these bills call for two additional district judges in the northern district of Illinois, but under the provisions of those bills both of the judges were to be permanent.

Your committee after a lengthy hearing on this bill felt that the proponents of this measure had made out a good case. They had proven to the subcommittee that there was a substantial workload in that area and that two additional judges were necessary. But your subcommittee felt that they would make these two positions of a temporary nature. For that reason there is a committee amendment to this bill.

The chairman of the subcommittee has already stated to the House some of those who appeared before the committee and who corresponded with the committee with reference to the passage of one of these bills. I felt I should like to bring to the attention of the Committee a letter that I think is of much importance, because it comes from the office that knows all about the workload in the various districts throughout the United States. I refer to the Administrative Office of the United States Courts.

Last year we corresponded with Mr. Chandler, who is the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, in reference to the situation in this district. He wrote back to us that the matter was being handled by his assistant, Mr. Elmore Whitehurst, the Assistant Director, and he in turn corresponded with our committee as follows, in connection with the bill authorizing the appointment of two additional district judges for the northern district of Illinois:

> This proposed legislation conforms with a recommendation which was made by the Judicial Conference of the United States at its recent meeting held in September. There are now six judges in the northern district of Illinois and the addition of two more would make a total of eight judges for that district.
> I am enclosing a compilation of statistics prepared for me by the Chief of the Division of Procedural Studies and Statistics of this Office showing the flow of judicial business through the northern district of Illinois. These statistics in my judgment amply justify the recommendation of the conference. They disclose particularly a large increase in the number of private civil cases commenced and pending.

After all, Mr. Chairman, it is our experience on the Subcommittee on the Judiciary that the time of the judges is consumed more on civil cases than on the criminal side of the court.

He says further:

> The number of private civil cases commenced increased from 832 in 1940 to 1,545 in 1949, while the number pending increased from 802 in 1940 to 1,705 in 1949. This type of case in general requires a substantially greater proportion of time of the judges to dispose of than other types of cases generally require.

Mr. Chairman, your subcommittee felt that this bill was meritorious and for that reason has so reported to the full committee, who in turn are placing it before the Members of the House for their consideration today.

But, Mr. Chairman, at this time I want to speak of another matter which I think is of importance to the House.

FIRST UNITED STATES VICTORY IN KOREA WON BY NEGRO GI'S

For day after day, a gallant band of American kids had been falling back under the hammer blows of Korean Reds who were superior in numbers, guns, and armor—superior in almost every element of ground fighting except raw courage.

Their families and neighbors back home were becoming restless and worried, fearing another disaster like Bataan.

When would this one-sided battle turn for the better?

People were switching their radio dials right past high-class entertainment, trying to catch the latest war bulletins. Newspapers were being bought, not daily, but by editions, searching for the first ray of hope, no matter how slim it might be, that would pierce the gloom of strategic withdrawals.

It came on July 20, when the Army's oldest Negro infantry regiment, spearheading the Twenty-fifth Division which had just come into the line, counterattacked and drove the Reds out of Yechon.

It was the Twenty-fourth Infantry Regiment that did the trick and braced morale where it was needed most, back in the United States of America where hoarding and profiteering reflected uncertainty over the immediate situation.

And you have heard something about that as the first order of business today, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANE. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. The gentleman recognizes that we are still withdrawing, does he not?

Mr. LANE. I certainly do.

Mr. Chairman, all of us should offer a prayer of thanks to the regulars of this Negro regiment for shaming us out of our fears. They demonstrated, the hard way, their faith in a common cause that has no room for the ignorance and selfishness of racism and bigotry.

Communist propaganda took it on the chin at Yechon when the Korean Reds were blasted by American Negro troops who believed not only in the United States as it is, but in the better Nation that it will become when intolerance is also defeated.

They fought and won for all of us.

Segregation is on the way out in this world, and we are in this fight, among other things, to hasten its departure.

Our Army is becoming truly democratic, and in this respect is far ahead of our social and economic organization.

If the present crisis should spread, young draftees would become better soldiers if they had some veterans of the Twenty-fourth at their side to steady them in their baptism under fire.

Let us pay tribute, then, to the men of the Twenty-fourth, who have added battle honors to those they first started winning against the Comanche Indians over 70 years ago.

This old-line outfit, stems from the two Negro companies that were organized in 1866, at Jefferson Barracks, Mo.

It is the oldest and perhaps the last Negro infantry regiment in view of the fact that from now on all our soldiers will be Americans, without any stigma of segregation .

But give credit where credit is due, and the Twenty-fourth has earned it by being the first to push the enemy back. It may be temporary and only local, but it is a morale builder that should stir every one of us to give his best.

Take heart. We are in this thing together, as equals, and we will win as equals, with such men as those of the fighting Twenty-fourth to show us the way.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

A DICTATOR NOT NECESSARY

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, in his message, the President told the people and the Congress that, at the request of the Security Council of the United Nations, he had ordered our armed forces to fight in Korea to protect the Republic of South Korea.

If, as the President insists, Stalin is behind the North Koreans, it is logical to assume that he will shortly instigate attacks against other governments, in Indo-China, Iran, Yugoslavia, Turkey, Greece, and west Germany. Then United Nations will call upon us to meet those attacks with armed forces. The President said we were committed to do so.

Then we shall find ourselves involved in war in Asia, Europe, possibly in Africa—each of our fighting forces thousands of miles from its base of supply. Will we not then have fallen into the trap set by Stalin?

Is the prophecy of Nikolai Lenin, who wrote in 1924, "Some day we shall force the United States to spend itself into destruction," about to come true?

Will not someone in authority tell us, if anyone knows, approximately the number of dollars, the amount of material, and, of vital importance, the number of men, it will take to fight and win these wars? With such information we may the better direct our efforts.

To date, Congress has not declared war. That issue was decided by the United Nations. Up to this date, not one of the other 58 United Nations has sent a single foot soldier to fight in the war declared by United Nations. Our soldiers are slugging it out alone against overwhelming odds.

Inasmuch as we seem committed to fight a dictatorship abroad, is it not well that we retain here at home the constitutional processes of government which have made us what we are, enabled us so far to retain a large degree of our individual freedom, the security of our Nation?

H. R. 9176, up for consideration this week, is based upon the false premise that the American people have so little faith in constitutional government, so little confidence in the loyalty, the courage, the endurance of our people, that, to carry on this war, the Congress must abdicate, grant to Mr. Truman the powers of a dictator.

With Mr. Truman surrounded as he is by graduate politicans from corrupt political machines, individuals of doubtful loyalty, an Acheson who apparently thinks first of the British Empire, and others who would haul down our flag, surrender our independence and make us a member of a world organization, Congressmen who believe in this country, who are concerned about its future, should consider well the implications carried in this and other proposed legislation.

Behind Mr. Truman stands a group whose thinking, from the evidence at hand, is not concerned first with the welfare of the average American citizen, with the problem of maintaining our national independence and security, but of how we can best lend ourselves to aid an international group which is apparently depending upon America to fight and win the wars in which they involve us.

Support to the fullest extent those now fighting the war in which the international organization, United Nations, has now involved us, we will. But that war should not be made an excuse for granting to Mr. Truman the powers of a dictator, for a cowardly surrender of congressional power, for a failure to protect the freedom of our citizens, the security of our Republic.

Let Mr. Truman and those at the head of the Armed Services tell us what is needed; then let Congress legislate toward that end; then let labor and management produce the things that are needed.

That is the way to avoid disaster; that is the way to avoid defeat by an enemy, while at the same time protecting our future.

We need no dictator to either fight or win a war.

To win any war in which we may become involved, to establish after that war has been won an American policy which will protect our national security, we should, in November, elect a Congress, and in 1952 a President, both of whom will place the interest, the welfare of our country and its people above every other consideration.

If civilization, the welfare of other nations, rests upon us, then it is imperative that we follow a policy which will insure our survival.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING].

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, on Thursday we adopted a bill for an extra judge for Texas. Today we have two judges for Illinois. And I believe coming up after that is one for Kansas City.

In connection with the Texas bill I made certain general observations in opposing that measure, which apply, of course, to the bill before us now. One, that we should scrutinize very carefully all of these additional expenditures on the home front before authorizing them. The Members, of course, should realize that when we authorize a judge it does not mean just the salary of that judge, but it means all of the attendant expenses that go with the creation of a new judgeship. There is the clerk and his criers, and all of the panoply which is connected with the creation of a judgeship.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Would the gentleman tell us approximately how much that would amount to in thousands of dollars? It would be about $50,000 for each judge, would it not?

Mr. KEATING. I would think that is a fair figure. I think the judge's salary is $15,000. Then, all of these incidental expenses run it up. If the gentleman would take the provision in the appropriation bill for the courts and divide that by the number of judges, he would arrive at it. I do not have the exact figure, but I would think that altogether it would amount to at least $50,000 per judge.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Especially as we are placing on the pension list in the future an extra individual who draws full pay in the form of a pension after he retires.

Mr. KEATING. That is correct.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Can the gentleman tell us why we need two additional judges at this time for northern Illinois?

Mr. KEATING. Well, I do not think we do, and I will come to that. Then, when I have finished, if I have not satisfied the gentleman, or have not covered the point that he has in mind, I will be glad to elaborate on it. I do want to say one word about my general objections to all of these bills.

First, is the question of economy.

Second, we have already created in this Congress, and I repeat it because some of the Members may not have been here, we have already created 27 judges by the bill which we passed last year, which is already the largest number of judges ever authorized in any Congress of the United States including the first, the Continental Congress. Now we are asked to provide for eight more.

When I take my little granddaughter on my knee and she says, "Grandpa, you served in the Eightieth and Eighty-first Congresses, didn't you?" I will stick out my chest and say, "Yes, I served in the Eightieth Congress." Then I will quickly and with the hope that she may overlook it, add, "and also the Eighty-first." Then, she will say, "What did you do in the Eighty-first Congress?" I hate to tell her that the principal thing we did was to create more Federal judges than any Congress in the history of the United States. I just do not think that is anything to be particularly proud about.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I shall be happy to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Would the gentleman or anyone else be able to tell us how many district judges there are in the whole United States?

Mr. STEFAN. I can tell you, I believe: 296 judges, district and circuit.

Mr. TABER. And how many are there in the northern district of Illinois?

Mr. KEATING. There are now in the northern district, six, and this bill would bring them up to eight.

Mr. TABER. I notice by the schedule on page 7 of the report that there were an over-all total of cases terminated of 4,847. That would be on the basis of approximately 145 per judge. In northern Illinois with six judges they terminated 245 cases in the year 1949, or about 40 per judge. I do not know whether that has any significance or not, but to an ordinary fellow it does.

Mr. KEATING. I think the gentleman has put his finger on a very important point. It must be appreciated, and I do appreciate the fact, that there are different kinds of cases.

Mr. TABER. I appreciate that.

Mr. KEATING. But that is taken across the board.

Referring to table 2 on page 6, which is the case load per judge for both civil and criminal cases, you will note that they are given separately, they are in two separate tables; and I am gratified to note and to point out to my friends from Illinois that crime is apparently on the wane in Illinois, and there were fewer criminal cases there; they seem to be coming down a little. It is very interesting and I feel a very wholesome tendency. But if you add the cases in those two columns, both civil and criminal, over a period of the last 10 years you come out with figures showing that in 1940 the case load was 354 per judge. In 1945 and 1946 it went up to 484 and 568; and they handled those cases. Since then it has slumped off into the four hundreds, and in the last year it was 469 per judge.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. In just 1 minute. Then on the first table on page 5 you will see the situation regarding the number of cases commenced and terminated, both civil and criminal. These are the factors upon which decision must be reached. It will be noted that under the civil cases there were 2,230 started and 2,079 finished; but of those, as appears down at the bottom in the next table, 292 were OPA cases which are, of course, on the down grade; so they are practically current with their civil cases and are completely current on their criminal cases.

Now I shall be happy to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. JONAS. What I understood the distinguished gentleman from New York to point out was that in New York they have disposed of more cases in the Federal district court. That may be true; you may have more diligent judges up there, or the cases may not have run as long. But to make an argument from the standpoint of statistics as to the diligence or ability of judges is fallacious and silly.

Let me point out this and I will be through: The courts have their calls divided into calendars; one judge may dispose of 250 cases while another judge is trying 1 case which takes 3 or 4 months. So one cannot rate a judge solely on the number of cases disposed of, nor can you rate a district by the same yardstick.

Mr. KEATING. We have not attempted to stigmatize any judge, or make comparison between judges. I appreciate the fact, as I said in my reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], that there is a difference in the length of cases. The number of cases is not the entire criterion. But in comparing this district with others throughout the country the same thing applies to the others. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BYRNE], my distinguished and beloved chairman, used the words of Peyton Ford, for whom I have the highest respect, in comparing this district with two other districts, the northern district of California and the eastern district of Pennsylvania. That made it look as if the northern district of Illinois needed more judges.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, if you compare this with a number of other districts throughout the country, it will look just as bad the other way. It means nothing simply to pick out a couple of other Federal districts and compare the need with them. One must view the over-all situation.

At the conclusion of the debate I am going to offer a motion to recommit which will provide that the bill be reported back forthwith and authorize the appointment of one judge instead of two. This is the only bill of the eight that will come before us which calls for two additional judges. Normally when we authorize additional judges, we just authorize one.

In view of the statistics that have been given here, it seems to me that to authorize one at this time is certainly all we should do, particularly in view of the reiterated statements of our President since we were here Thursday when he said that the Congress and the people of the United States must cut down as far as possible the expenses of running our Government domestically when we have such tremendous burdens facing us in our overseas and miiltary commitments.

I hope that the committee will go along with me. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] were present, I feel that he would agree that one judge would take care of the situation in which he is particularly interested, and which he had in mind in introducing this bill. If we increase the number of judges out there by one, it seems to me we are doing all that we should do, and I will therefore ask for support on the motion to recommit from my friends on the Democratic side, as well as on our side where, I am confident, such a move will have overwhelming support.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order and to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, with the general objectives listed in the President's war message, I am in full accord in the face of the world situation today. However, the message brings home to us the terrible price we must pay for the mistakes our leaders made at Yalta and Potsdam. The situation in Korea today is the tragic result of following the Acheson policy in Asia, and refusing to follow General MacArthur's recommendations in regard to our military strength and responsibilities in Asia. After writing off China, Korea, and Formosa, following the advice of Acheson, we now reverse ourselves and overnight attempt to recover what we have thoughtlessly thrown away. That is a very costly program. If we had followed the advice of MacArthur, given last year, we would have headed off the present trouble in Korea. MacArthur's communications and recommendations, ignored and filed in the Pentagon secret files, should be made public.

THE MESS MAC ARTHUR INHERITED

Mr. Chairman, the American people have more faith, more confidence, and more trust in the ability, the knowledge, the integrity, and the judgment of General MacArthur than they have in Secretary of State Acheson, Secretary of Defense Johnson, and President Truman, all three combined. General MacArthur is responsible for the only bright spot in our entire foreign program. Where Acheson, Johnson, and Truman can only show failure after failure in their foreign-policy program, General MacArthur can point with pride to his particular sector of our foreign-policy line because it is the only bright spot in the entire line. For this reason the dastardly and unwarranted attack upon General MacArthur by former Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes, placing the blame upon General MacArthur for the present situation in Korea, cannot go unchallenged and must be answered.

General MacArthur recommended and urged that our military strength in Asia be built up to take care of the situation that was developing in Korea, Formosa, and Indo-China. He was the first man to propose that our seventh fleet be used to protect and guard Formosa because Formosa was of the utmost importance in our Asiatic defense line. His recommendations went unheeded, and the Acheson policy in Asia was adopted. We now face the results of the Acheson policy and General MacArthur has been given the job of cleaning up the mess. The war in Korea is "The Acheson War."

SABOTAGE OF KOREAN AID

Mr. Chairman, last year Congress voted money to bolster the miiltary strength of South Korea and to aid anti-Communist forces in Asia. One item of $75,000,000 was appropriated; another of $27,600,000; another of $10,300,000. The program of military aid to South Korea was sabotaged by the State Department to the extent that only $52,000 worth of barbed wire out of the millions appropriated was sent to South Korea with which to stem the present onslaught of Communist tanks, planes, and artillery. While the Russians were furnishing North Korean Communists heavy tanks, artillery, and planes, our State Department experts on the Far East, the pink trio in the State Department—Acheson, Lattimore, and Jessup—were sabotaging our program to give military aid to the Korean Republic and Secretary Acheson was announcing to the world that we would not aid South Korea even if it were invaded.

The excuse offered by Acheson for sabotaging Korean military aid was that it might be used by the South Koreans to attack the Communist forces in North Korea. Of course this attitude on the part of our State Department gave encouragement to the Communists in North Korea, and acted as a "Go sign" to them in their attack upon South Korea.

OUR SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

Mr. Chairman, Louis Johnson, Secretary of Defense, talks too much. He blusters like a schoolboy about what we can do with one hand tied behind our back. In 1939, at a meeting of the executive committee of the American Legion in Indianapolis, Louis Johnson was asked, "How long would it take us to clean up the Japs in the Pacific if war broke out?" His answer was, "It would take us 6 weeks." Was that a good guess?

Only a few months ago, when appearing before a congressional committee of the House, Secretary Johnson was asked, "Is it true that the Russians are using the major part of their steel production in the building of heavy war tanks?" Johnson's answer was:

> I don't know, but I hope so, because heavy war tanks are obsolete today and we can easily take care of them.

In view of what is happening in Korea today, was that a good guess?

Mr. Chairman, in Korea we need the type of fighting that the marines are noted for, but our marine force has been skeletonized and suppressed under Johnson. We need aircraft to support our ground troops in Korea, but our aircraft replacements, personnel, and aircraft carriers have been slashed under Johnson. We need tanks and antitank weapons to block the offensive power of the heavy Russian tanks. We have no such defensive weapons because tank modernization was one of the first items scrapped under Johnson. We have spent during the last 4 years $55,000,000,000 on national defense, but we are not prepared to fight even a "police war" in Korea. Where have the $55,000,000,000 been spent?

Are we prepared for an outbreak in western Europe—Berlin, Yugoslavia, Greece? Are we prepared for an attack upon Iran and the oil fields of the Middle East? Why have not our Joint Chiefs of Staff during the past year heeded the pleas of General MacArthur for more troops and more weapons in Asia? These are questions being asked on every main street in America. Our Secretary of Defense should answer them.

Mr. Chairman, since President Truman has repudiated the Acheson policy in the Far East by his right-about-face concerning South Korea and Formosa, he should now repudiate the author of that policy by demanding the immediate resignation of his Secretary of State, Dean Acheson. This step should be taken by the President forthwith.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a couple of questions I desired to ask the gentleman from New York?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Is there anything in this bill that the gentleman thinks will result in winning this present war? In other words, will the passage of this bill in any way contribute to the winning of the war?

Mr. STEFAN. I do not think there is anything presently in it that will.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING] spoke about his granddaughter. It seemed to me he was in some doubt as to the answer he would make if she asked him whether he is a Member of the Eighty-first Congress. In the gentleman's opinion, are the Republicans on this side of the aisle responsible for what the Eighty-first Congress does?

Mr. STEFAN. Of course, we are in the minority. The majority has over 90 votes more than has the minority.

Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to give the membership some information about the Federal judiciary which we are discussing at this time in view of the fact that the legislation before us provides for the creation of additional judgeships. I hope this will answer some of the questions that have been propounded. Only recently we passed a bill making appropriations for the Federal judiciary which amounted to $23,560,000. When you pass legislation like this it means appropriation of money. In that bill we included funds for 27 new Federal judges; 6 circuit and 21 district judges. We have presently employed 286 district and circuit judges. We have on the roll 35 retired judges and 9 have resigned.

The present salary of a circuit judge is $17,500, and that of a district judge $15,000. When you first glance at the salary you do not get the rest of the picture, as my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING] endeavored to tell you. We have improved the conditions of the Federal court greatly in the last 10 years in that we have provided additional services. I am glad we did that because it makes for efficiency. When you create a Federal judge, do not forget that you have to have a clerk of the district court to service that court Then there are probationary officers, the matter of criers, secretaries, stenographers, reporters, law clerks, and travel expenses and per diem. In addition to that we will have to appropriate money for the Justice Department which, invariably, when we create a new judgeship, asks for additional marshals and United States attorneys.

So, I ask that you give very serious consideration when you pass a piece of legislation creating a judgeship, that you take all of these things into consideration, because $23,000,000 servicing 286 district and circuit judges over the country, is a tremendous increase over the appropriation which we have been making for the Federal judiciary not long ago. Although I am a very good friend of the Federal judiciary, and I want the best Federal judiciary in the world, I think in these times of stress we should give some attention to economy in Government. Perhaps some of the judges are needed. Perhaps some of them can be held up.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. JONAS. The gentleman has stated that in addition to the $15,000 that a Federal district judge is paid, that there are other incidentals that run up to the stupendous figure that my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING], mentioned. He said it might run up to $50,000. In what respect could it amount to $50,000? The judge gets a clerk at about $4,000; he gets a marshal at about $4,000, he gets one probationary officer at $3,500, and one secretary. Now that does not by any means amount to a stupendous figure.

Mr. STEFAN. I think the gentleman had better revise his figures, because I think I can furnish information that the gentleman has not got the correct figures as to the additional services that are required to service a district judge.

Mr. JONAS. I think it would be well, when you talk about the sums we spend for the courts, to take into consideration the sums we voted for ECA.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, these matters of judges were carefully scrutinized and screened and discussed by the Committee on the Judiciary and the members came to the conclusion that the judges involved in the bills that come before you this afternoon are absolutely needed.

Now, I heard tell of additional expense. Where justice is involved, we must not be pinchpenny. There will be some additional administrative employees required. That is always the case when you designate a new judge. But, justice delayed is justice denied. That is an old adage, and it is well to repeat it. Failure to pass these judgeships will delay justice. The calendars of the courts are crowded with cases that cannot be reached and tried for months because of the paucity of judges. It is our duty to supply them.

As to the necessity for these judges, certainly we cannot gainsay the approval of the Attorney General, the Administrator of the Courts, the American Bar Association, the State Bar Association of Illinois. There came before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary the Chief Justice Major of the circuit court of appeals and the chief judge of the district court, Judge Barnes, and they testified as to the absolute need of these two judges in the northern district of Illinois, and there was received a communication signed by all the district judges of that northern district of Illinois, Judges Barnes, Sullivan, Igo, LaBuy, and Shaw. I am going to read one or two paragraphs from that communication. By the way, the judges I have named are not all Democrats. The letter in part reads as follows:

One of the judges of our court informs us that there are pending on his calendar four cases which must be tried and which will take, in the aggregate, not less than 1 year and 7 months for trial. The first of these cases, an antitrust case, will take not less than 1 year for trial. Another, an antitrust case, will take not less than 5 month for trial. A third, a mail-fraud case, will take 6 or 7 weeks for trial. And the fourth, a condemnation case, in which 139 parcels of property were involved, of which 115 have been disposed of, will take 5 or 6 weeks for trial in respect of the remaining properties involved. The calendars of the rest of us are not dissimilar.

The clerk of our court informs us that on April 1, 1950, there were 44 antitrust cases pending in the court. Of these, 4 were criminal cases, 11 were civil Government cases, and 29 were civil private cases. Some of these cases will take months to try and most, if not all, of them will take several weeks. There seems to be a concentration of antitrust litigation in our court. The Attorney General maintains an office for the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice in Chicago, separate and apart from the district attorney's office. This office looks after the territory embraced in several States. Apparently, counsel find it more convenient to institute antitrust prosecutions in Chicago than in other places, which perhaps accounts for the concentration of that particular class of business in our court. Nearly every governmental prosecution under the antitrust laws which results in a conviction brings in its train private antitrust actions for treble damages based on the governmental conviction, and a large percentage of these find their way into the court where the conviction was obtained.

I could go on and read you much more from the very illuminating letter from the justices of that court, but time will not permit. I do indeed hope that wisdom will prompt an overwhelming vote in favor of this bill for the two additional judges for the northern district of Illinois.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the enactment of this legislation. Let me say something to you about the northern district of Illinois. I am sorry I do not have with me the figures according to the latest census but must refer to the census of 1940, which, of course, is much less than the one that has been taken this year.

The northern district of Illinois is composed of 18 counties with a population of 5,414,800, which is more than two-thirds of the State's total population of 7,897,241. In addition to the northern district of Illinois there are two others—the southern district and the eastern district. Together those two districts have a population of 2,482,441, with four district judges, two in each district. From 1940, the northern district of Illinois has had six judges.

In that year it was deemed by the Congress advisable to give it an extra judge, and authorized such appointment but provided that the first vacancy that occurred in the district should not be filled. Unfortunately, after a little over 6 months, a vacancy did occur and so from that time on there have been but six judges. The two additional judges authorized by this legislation would bring the total up to eight in the northern district of Illinois. There is dire need for eight judges in that district.

Let me call your attention to these facts: In 1947 the cases adjudicated and determined in the district with 6 judges were 415 cases per judge. In 1943 it was 359 cases per judge, and in 1949 they jumped to 454 cases per judge. At the end of 1949 there were 429 cases pending per judge. No matter how much they have been able to expedite their work, they are still falling behind.

I had intended to say something concerning the statement which was made by the gentleman from New York as to the increased cost of these judges. I think something like $50,000 for each judge was suggested. That is absurd. The salary of the judge himself is $17,500. He would be required to have a clerk, a bailiff, a secretary, and a probation officer. The only additional cost would be that of the maintenance of the courtroom which already exists and must be maintained now.

In my opinion, the necessity for these judges is urgent in the northern district of Illinois if we are to expect the court to adjudicate fairly and impartially. When judges are required to hurry through a congested docket, litigants are deprived of the careful and thoughtful consideration of their cases to which they are entitled and faulty and insufficiently considered judgments mean more appeals and cause congestion in the dockets of the courts of appeal. All this causes delay and expense to litigants and to the Government. This bill not only has the approval of the present district judges, the judges of the court of appeals for the seventh circuit and the judicial council of senior circuit judges. It is also endorsed by the Chicago, Illinois State, and American Bar Associations. I have talked with and received letters from scores of lawyers who have extensive practices in the Federal courts and who urgently request this legislation in order that they may have assurance that their cases may be promptly tried. The case load per judge at the present time is much too high. Even with two additional judges, it will take years to bring it down to normal.

Mr. Chairman, I urge favorable consideration of this measure, now.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, much stress has been placed on statistics as a basis for the necessity of this bill. Personally I do not place too much importance on the value of satistics in this instance. When I came to the Congress we did not have the Administrative Office of the United States Courts. We did not have the Judicial Conference. Both of those agencies were created to help solve these problems on other than a political basis.

However, the experiment has not been entirely a success, because we drift into these misleading statistics. Let me give you one illustration with which we are all familiar right here in the House of Representatives. So far as case loads are concerned, in the last Congress the Committee on the Judiciary had 52 percent of all the bills introduced in the House. Did the Committee on the Judiciary do 50 percent of all the work performed in the House? Certainly not. Number of bills is no criterion.

Another illustration is the Consent Calendar and Private Calendar. On Unanimous Consent Calendar Day, or on Private Calendar Day the House will pass 50 to 100 bills whereas it would take a week or 2 weeks to pass a tax bill or a foreign-relations bill or a bill of another type. Could we base our work here at all on these statistics as far as case load is concerned? Well, the same thing happens with judges. Go to the city of Detroit, a great industrial center, and you will have patent cases. One of those cases will take days and weeks and months. Those judges will work for days and weeks and months on a single case. You might go out into the Midwest somewhere, where they do not have that type of cases, and they can dispose of their cases just as we dispose of cases on the Consent Calendar. So to me these statistics cut very little figure. The type of case is which takes time. I am a realist. On our own committee we have been holding hearings and making a study of newsprint. It was suggested, factually, that 200 newspapers had discontinued business during the last year. Therefore, the implication was, without any proof, that they had gone out of business because of the lack of newsprint. Now, that was an assumption. We want some proof here. That is just what the trouble is here. I think they probably need one additional judge in Indiana, but I do not think they need two.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time. I yield back the remainder of my time,

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two additional district judges for the northern district of Illinois. Accordingly, title 28, United States Code, section 133, is amended to read as follows with respect to said district:

"Districts | Judges

Illinois

* * * * *

Northern---------- 8

* * * * *"

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, after the period, strike out the remainder of the bill and insert: "Vacancies occurring by reason of the death, retirement, resignation, or removal of either of the judges appointed pursuant to this act shall not be filled."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I want to direct the attention of the Committee to certain facts which pertain to the territory in and around Chicago.

Lake County, Ind., is just across the Indiana-Illinois State line. I am officially advised that the welfare department of Lake County pays out almost $100,000 per year to supported deserted children whose parents have skipped across the State line. I was very interested in the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING] in speaking about the fact that when he took his little granddaughter on his knee——

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield there before he goes on with his discussion?

Mr. JACOBS. Yes, I yield.

Mr. KEATING. I would like to advise the gentleman that I have already stated I am in favor of the "Pappy" bill. I think it is a fine piece of legislation, and I hope it is enacted.

Mr. JACOBS. I thank the gentleman very much. It is before the Judiciary Committee, and we have had hearings on it. I will appreciate anything that the gentleman from New York may do to assist in getting it out of the Judiciary Committee so that when the gentleman reluctantly admits that he was a member of the Eighty-first Congress and his granddaughter should happen to say: "Well, now, Grandpop, what did you do to get the runaway pappy bill out of the Judiciary Committee?" that the gentleman will be able to say that he really made an effort in favor of it.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOBS. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. I shall be very well able to say that I did, because I have already indicated my interest in the bill; in fact, if the gentleman thinks it would be germane I would be very happy to have the gentleman move to substitute his bill for the bill now before us.

Mr. JACOBS. Does the gentleman himself think it would be germane?

Mr. KEATING. I fear it would not, but I would be very happy to support the gentleman's bill.

Mr. JACOBS. I am glad the gentleman thinks well of it and thinks it is meritorious. There is more money spent in Lake County to support children whose parents have abandoned them and and taken refuge in other States than it would cost to support approximately three Federal judges in Chicago.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOBS. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. I think the gentleman's observation is probably correct and also I pointed out in the debate on Thursday the fact that if the bill that is before our committee to raise the jurisdictional limit from $3,000 to $10,000 were passed it would get rid of a lot of the load that is now improperly in the Federal courts, and in my judgment that is the constructive approach to the problem of these judges having too much work to do.

Mr. JACOBS. I am glad the gentleman mentioned that because I am heartily in favor of it. I think it is a bill that should be brought up.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. THORNBERRY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6454) to authorize the appointment of two additional district judges for the northern district of Illinois, pursuant to House Resolution 702, he reported the same back to the House with an amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. KEATING. I am.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KEATING moves to recommit the bill H. R. 6454 to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute therefor the following:

"That the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one additional district judge for the northern district of Illinois. Any vacancy occurring by reason of the death, retirement, resignation, or removal of the judge appointed pursuant to this act shall not be filled."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN) there were—ayes 33, noes 50.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that a quorum is not present and object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present. The roll call is automatic. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll and there were—yeas 116, nays 163, not voting 151, as follows:

APPOINTMENT OF A DISTRICT JUDGE FOR NORTHERN AND SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF INDIANA

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 703 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6240) to authorize the appointment of a district judge for the northern and southern districts of Indiana. That after general debate which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order the consideration of the bill H. R. 6240. When the majority leader indicated the order in which these bills were to be considered he indicated that the next bill would be H. R. 7009, for the eastern and western districts of Missouri. Of course I am not raising any question about the Speaker changing that in any way that he feels should be done, but would the Speaker be able to indicate at this time whether, with this exception, the order which the majority leader indicated will be followed?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will consult with the interested Members and at the proper time will recognize the Member to call up the rule making in order the bill to be considered at that time.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, might I say to the gentleman from New York that there are special reasons why this bill has been taken up out of order. I can assure the gentleman it is the intention to follow the order I have heretofore announced. But there are reasons why this bill is being taken up now. I conferred with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK], and it was agreeable to him. There are extenuating circumstances.

Mr. KEATING. But hereafter it is expected to follow the order as annouced by the majority leader?

The SPEAKER. If that is possible, it will be done.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the distinguished majority leader how many of these bills the gentleman contemplates will be taken up today?

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course I would like to get them all through today if there is no fight on them. But I try to be practical. I can assure the gentleman from Michigan that the gentleman from Massachusetts always tries to have a reasonable regard for the feelings of the membership of the House. It is now almost 3 o'clock. If the gentleman will let us go along and dispose of this, and see how far we get along, perhaps we can finish another one. I am hopeful that we can get through with this one and another one.

Mr. MICHENER. In other words, it all depends on which way the wind is blowing.

Mr. McCORMACK. It all depends on how rapidly we get along. I would like to get them out of the way, because it is all a help to us in connection with possible adjournment and getting home.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MADDEN] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, further with reference to the remarks of the distinguished majority leader in regard to whether or not there should be a contest on any of the remaining judgeship bills, speaking for Indiana, I do not think there has ever been a bill asking for an additional Federal judgeship that has any more merit than this bill, which was introduced by my colleague from Indiana [Mr. DENTON].

I notice that in the recent census Indiana has increased 500,000 in population. That will make Indiana the only State in the Union with over 4,000,000 people which has only two Federal judges. I do not think there is any State in the Union where the Federal judiciary is clogged or stymied like it has been for the past 10 years in Indiana. Every member of the Judiciary Committee that I have talked with has stated that this bill asking for an additional judge in Indiana is one that should be granted without opposition.

When you compare Indiana with other States of the Union, we should really have two additional judges instead of the one that we are asking for.

The United States Judicial Council, after investigation, has recommended that this additional Federal judge for Indiana be granted. The Indiana Bar Association, the Hammond, Ind., Bar Association, the Gary, Ind., Bar Association, practically every bar association in the State of Indiana has endorsed this bill. I do not know of any lawyer in the State of Indiana who would oppose an additional Federal judge for Indiana. Of course, I do not say that any other State that has three Federal judges is not entitled to three Federal judges, but when you consider that the State of Indiana has over 4,000,000 population and only two Federal judges, and we have States in this Union with only seven or eight hundred thousand population which have as high as three or four Federal judges, I do not think there should be any opposition to Indiana having an additional Federal judge. Only once in its history has an additional judge been given Indiana, and that was 25 years ago.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Of course, the gentleman would not base his reason for another judge on population, would he?

Mr. MADDEN. No.

Mr. MICHENER. Because there are States with large populations which have little Federal court business. You would not give them judges just so they would have as many as New York.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course the gentleman knows that Indiana is not only a great agricultural but an industrial State as well. It is on a par with the State of Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. It is a very good State, but, like Michigan, our taxpayers do not want more judges than are necessary, regardless of population.

Mr. MADDEN. I thank the gentlemen on the Judiciary Committee, who have investigated Indiana's case and recommend that Indiana should have another Federal judge. If you have gone over the testimony that was presented by Federal Judge Swygert from Indiana in testifying before the committee, you will remember that Federal Judge Swygert stated that last year he was unable to have a vacation, that he worked 6 days a week trying to carry out the heavy case load. Judge Swygert and the judge for the southern Indiana district have not been able even to make a dent in the heavy case load in the State of Indiana.

Mr. Speaker, our senior colleague from Indiana on the other side of the House [Mr. HALLECK] is familiar with the bill and is not opposed to it. I do not know of any Member from Indiana who is opposed to it, for they all know what the situation is in regard to the case load of the Federal judiciary in our State.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may use.

Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the explanation of this rule by the able gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MADDEN]. I agree fully with him there is more justification for providing an additional Federal judge to be added to the number now serving in Indiana, or for increasing the number of judges from two to three, than there is for the establishment of a new Federal judgeship in many of the other States, bills for which will be considered as we go along.

Indiana is a great State, which has something like 4,000,000 population with only two Federal judges to take care of the Federal business within the confines of that Commonwealth at this time. I notice that Indiana has a lower number of criminal cases in the Federal courts than the national average. I do not know whether this is because the people of Indiana are more law-abiding or law-respecting than the average for this country, or that the Federal law-enforcement officials of that great State are just a little more dilatory in their prosecution of cases. But, in any event, there is a great deal of legal business of a Federal nature within the State of Indiana, and there is a pretty good case made in behalf of this particular judgeship.

May I say in passing, however, that I doubt very much that the majority leader of the House is misleading anyone—no—I would not want to charge him with misleading anyone or even attempting to do so—rather I should say the majority leader must have been engaging in a rather facetious remark when he said our adjournment would depend a great deal upon the rapidity with which we handled these judicial bills.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I certainly will yield to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts; for I was hoping I would get some reaction from him.

Mr. McCORMACK. Well, the fish rises to the bait; I take the bait willingly. The gentleman, of course, does not want to misquote me.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Oh, no. I expressed the hope that I had misunderstood him.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not think I made that statement; if so, I would certainly want to correct it.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I certainly would not want to misquote the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. If no other Member of the House who was present at the time got such an impression of what I said——

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I cannot see how either the gentleman from Massachusetts or myself can speak as to what impression any other Member of the House may have got.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is the gentleman yielding to me?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I certainly am.

Mr. McCORMACK. If no other Member of the House got such an impression as that I would not want my distinguished friend from Ohio to have such an erroneous impression.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. That is very fine.

Mr. McCORMACK. The sum and substance is that I am trying to evaluate and interpret the minds of the Members of the House, as well as my own, and to expedite, as much as possible, the consideration of legislation that must come before the House, all of which tends very prominently toward adjournment or a prolonged recess as quickly as possible. Now, after the program is completed in connection with the emergency and we have disposed of all business here, I am sure the gentleman from Ohio would not want to hold the House in session if he could, would he?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. No. I sometimes feel the longer a legislative body such as ours remains in session the worse off it is for the people. But that brings up a question in the mind of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is not my reason. The gentleman can make his reason. I do not think the gentleman means that upon reflection. When we have completed our business I think we should leave here. The people are very practical, they are usually far ahead of us, they know this is an election year, and we might just as well face it openly, frankly, and plainly.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. No one can question the gentleman's frankness or open way in which he approaches these problems. He did mention, and I am sure I am not wrong in saying this, the word "adjournment" a while ago?

Mr. McCORMACK. I hope an adjournment.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. So I am wondering if the gentleman can now give us any assurance as to when he plans or expects adjournment of the House?

Mr. McCORMACK. Well, so far as the gentleman from Massachusetts is concerned, when the emergency legislation is out of the way.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. When will that be?

Mr. McCORMACK. When the Committee on Banking and Currency reports out a bill. If that committee reports it this week, the bill will come up next week. That is one of the major pieces of legislation. If anything is done on taxes and I hope if it is it will be done quickly, we will take that up. With those two matters out of the way, unless some further recommendations come that I am not aware of, that would practically complete it.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I presume there will be some military legislation come to us from the Armed Services Committee?

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] and I tried to get that out of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] today, but we were not quite successful.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The gentleman feels there will be some legislation along that line?

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not know. I cannot answer that or whether these two bills coming up tomorrow may be sufficient to meet the present immediate situation or not. I do not know.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Does the gentleman expect any legislation, for instance, out of the Veterans Committee to protect the rights of those who may be called into the armed services?

Mr. McCORMACK. If any legislation comes out of the Armed Services Committee, knowing the complexion of that committee on both sides, the members are very active, they are very energetic, we know it will come out quickly. I presume any kind of legislation relating to veterans, if any is needed, is something that will be acted on quickly. So that I am hopeful—I do not know about others—that we might clean up the situation, clean up our legislation within the next 3 weeks. That is my hope. I trust I have satisfied the gentleman. I did not say that the passage of these eight judgeship bills were necessary for adjournment.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. May I ask one other question? In contemplating adjournment at the end of 3 weeks, or in expressing the hope, as the gentleman does, that we will be able to adjourn in about 3 weeks, does he take into consideration the possibility the administration may ask for a greatly broadened and increased appropriation and authorization for military aid for other countries?

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, I am basing any opinion I may express upon my knowledge as of now. The gentleman from Ohio knows that we are in a very flexible situation and no one, if he is in position of leadership, is going to definitely close his mind, but in connection with that my impression is as of now that any additional legislation, say in relation to the North Atlantic Pact, and this is my personal opinion—I want that understood—probably would come later on, because that is a matter of some negotiation with other nations. But it is something that can be done very quickly.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. May I ask the gentleman one other question? Does the gentleman feel that we could adjourn sine die or recess, or what action should be taken? I am asking these questions because I am seeking light, as one Member of the House, and I think the gentleman knows more about this than anyone else. I know that the gentleman is in constant contact with the White House and knows what the true situation is.

Mr. McCORMACK. I cannot plead guilty of giving more information than any other Member, except here is the Speaker.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The Speaker is presiding.

Mr. McCORMACK. But I can plead guilty in trying to give all the information I possibly can under the circumstances. So far as I am personally concerned, and I am talking about my own personal opinion——

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. We are also interested in the gentleman's opinion as majority leader. That is very important.

Mr. McCORMACK. I cannot very well separate my personal opinion from that of majority leader. But I will say this, either personally or as majority leader, I hope that when we adjourn it will be sine die. Now if the gentleman asks me if I expect that, that is another question.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Well, I will ask that other question.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is a question that I cannot answer at this time, for that question is a matter of consultation.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. May I conclude by asking the gentleman one other question. Does the gentleman favor the adoption of this rule for the consideration of H. R. 6240?

Mr. McCORMACK. I join with my friend from Ohio in urging its adoption.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Then, Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6240) to authorize the appointment of a district judge for the northern and southern districts of Indiana.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H. R. 6240, with Mr. CARNAHAN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is to authorize the appointment of one additional district judge for the northern and southern districts of Indiana. Accordingly, it amends section 133, title 28, United States Code.

The State of Indiana which is a part of the Seventh Judicial Circuit is divided into two judicial districts, the northern and southern. At the present time there is one permanent district judge serving each of the districts. These two judges hold court in seven different cities throughout the State. The need for this roving judge for the State of Indiana is clearly indicated in the memorandum and data submitted by the Administrative Office of the United States Courts. Moreover the bill has been recommended by the Judicial Conference of the United States at its annual meeting in 1949.

An examination of the volume of litigation throughout the State of Indiana indicates a general trend of increase, both civil and criminal. Moreover an analysis of the judicial statistics for this State over a period of years indicates that the trend upward in the volume of litigation is permanent and that the same will continue to increase unless the number of judges is increased.

This bill by providing for a roving judgeship will permit help in each of the two districts as the need for same arises.

It is the opinion of the committee that the bill is a meritorious one and recommends its enactment.

I am going to quote merely the last paragraph of the report of the administrative office on this subject at this point so that the Members of the House from Indiana may have a chance to discuss the matter for you.

> The facts above set forth and others appearing in the tables show plainly that the remarkably small number of district judges, one each for the two districts of Indiana, is not commensurate with the business of the districts. On account of the high population and the concentration of industry and business in the State, there is every reason to expect that the disparity, unless the number of judges is increased, will continue and grow. The pending bill will give reinforcement in a way which will be helpful to both districts by providing that the new judge shall be a judge for both. It is only a reasonable response to the manifest demands of the judicial business and is requisite for proper service to litigants and the public. I, therefore, trust that it may be enacted.

The letter is signed by Henry P. Chandler, who is the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts.

So, Mr. Chairman, there can be no question at all but that the necessity for the passage of this bill is manifest from every side. Our committee hearing indicated from the testimony of judges and others concerned that this is one of those cases in which there can be practically no dissent whatsoever, insofar as we of the committee know about the facts.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, in all my time and service in the House of Representatives, which is now approaching 16 years, I have always sought to give to the consideration of measures affecting my own area the same treatment I would accord to those of any other area. I recognize full well that many may assume that that just could not be done, but at any event I have sought to do that, and I believe I have done it.

With respect to the matter of the additional judgeship in Indiana, let me say first of all that I was strongly of the opinion that that should have been provided for in the omnibus bill acted upon in the first session. For reasons which are of no moment at this time it was not so acted upon and was not included. However, the need remains. But I have not urged the reporting or the consideration of any of these bills at this time.

However, since the bill is now before us, let me say that I have talked personally with the present president of the Indiana State Bar Association regarding this measure, and he tells me it is needed, that there is definite need for this additional roving judgeship in Indiana. His name is Richard Tinkham, of Lake County, Ind.

The president-elect of the State Bar Association is Roger Brannigan, of Lafayette, Ind. I have also talked with him, and he tells me there is very definitely a real need for this additional judgeship to meet the requirements of justice in the State of Indiana.

I have also talked with Mr. Kurt Pantzer, of Indianapolis, an outstanding lawyer, who is chairman of the State bar's committee on selection and tenure of judges, and he, too, tells me that this additional judgeship is very much needed.

As to the facts: It is true that population is not an absolute criterion as to the necessity for courts or judges. But, as the report indicates, the work in the courts of the country comes from the people. So to my mind there is a definite relationship between the number of people in a given area and the requirements and necessity for judges and courts available to meet the needs of the people to the end that justice may be done expeditiously, as justice must be done, if it is to be truly justice.

It was suggested in connection with the bill which was just acted upon by which two, not one—two additional judges were created for the northern district of Illinois, that the population of that district is about 5,400,000. The population of Indiana, I think, computed as of 1947, was 3,800,000. It follows from that that the northern district of Illinois with the legislation that has just been adopted will have eight judges and unless this legislation is adopted Indiana, with a population showing only the difference between 5.4 and 3.8, would have only two judges.

In addition, the report which has been filed and which we have here before us shows not only in respect to population but also in respect to case loads, the number of civil and criminal cases filed, the number required to be disposed of and those that are disposed of are way above the national average. I think the report discloses that for the southern district of Indiana the number is twice above the national average and for the northern district of Indiana it is one and a half times above the national average.

So I cannot help but believe on my responsibility as a Member of this body and charged certainly in times like these with the necessity of scrutinizing very carefully everything that comes before us, that this proposition is meritorious at this time. Had this proposal been included in the omnibus bill adopted in the last session certainly then it would have been meritorious.

As the chairman of the committee has pointed out the sessions held by the Federal district judges in Indiana are held in seven different municipalities. There are residents of certain other municipalities in Indiana where the people believe that sessions of the Federal court should likewise be held. However, that is not an issue in this measure.

In connection with the cost which might be involved I take it that these seven cities now have available the courtrooms where the sessions would be held. They would be available for the third roving judge who would serve not only one of the districts in Indiana, but in both of the districts in Indiana in order to expedite the business of all of the courts. So I cannot see where in this particular instance there would be any substantial increase in cost to the Federal Government by virtue of providing this additional judgeship.

Mr. Chairman, I trust the measure will be adopted and certainly by what I have said here it is indicated that I expect to vote for it.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the author of the bill, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DENTON].

Mr. DENTON. Mr. Chairman, the State of Indiana now has two Federal judges who sit in two districts, the northern and southern districts of Indiana. They hold court in seven different places. This bill provides for one roving judge who will hold court in both the northern and southern part of the State.

Indiana has a population, according to the 1940 census, of 3,800,000. We do not have the figures, of course, for the 1950 census, but we estimate Indiana will have a population, in round numbers, of 4,000,000.

There is no other State in the Union that has a population as large as Indiana that does not have more than two judges. As a matter of fact, there is only one other State with a population over 2,600,000 that has two judges. Six States with populations smaller than Indiana have three judges. Seven States with a population smaller than Indiana have four judges and two with a population smaller than Indiana have five judges.

I realize that population is not the only factor to be considered in determining the need for a judge. However, it is a factor, and, naturally, with this large population and small number of judges, you would expect that those judges would have a much higher case load than the judges throughout the United States; and that is a fact.

In the northern district of Indiana the judge has a case load 50 percent higher than the national average. In the southern district the judge has a 100 percent greater case load than the national average. I am speaking about civil cases, and of course they take the most work. Naturally, you would find the court is getting behind with its docket. At the present time it is approximately 1 year behind. The judge for the northern district stated it would take him at least a year to try the cases ready for trial, if no new cases were filed. This is not because the judges have not worked. The senior judge of the Seventh Circuit stated that the judge in the northern district had not had a vacation since he had been appointed approximately 6 years ago. He said he held court 6 days a week. He held court throughout the summer. As a matter of fact, last year he held court throughout the entire Christmas holidays and also on New Year's Day.

The most disturbing fact is that the docket is getting further and further behind, and the congestion is getting worse. I think that Indiana has made out the strongest case for an additional judge of all the bills on that subject, both at this and last session. This legislation has been recommended by the Seventh Circuit Judicial Council, by the United States Judicial Council, and by the Department of Justice, and by the Indiana Bar Association and innumerable other bar associations throughout the State.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENTON. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. I intended to say in my remarks, and it skipped my mind, that I was talking also with Mr. Kurt Pantzer, of Indianapolis, who is a member of the Judicial Council. I was informed by him that the Council for the Seventh Circuit met recently in Chicago. As I understand it, that council is made up of judges of the circuit, and of lawyers representing the States of the circuit, which, I believe, include Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin. He told me that the vote for this particular measure involving an additional judge for Indiana was supported unanimously by the members of that conference.

Mr. DENTON. I thank the gentleman for that statement. I might say that Roger Branigan, the president of the Indiana Bar Association, has spoken to me about this legislation. The outgoing president of this association, Tilford Orbison, also has spoken to me about it; as have numerous lawyers throughout the State of Indiana. As a matter of fact, the testimony before the committee indicated there was need for two judges in Indiana, and that the workload required it, but they are only asking for the one judge. I surely hope that you will pass this legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING].

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, it is a very unenviable position to be in to find myself differing in any degree from my very good friend from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK], although I can thoroughly appreciate his position, as I do that of the other Members from Indiana. I do say to him, as well as to any of the other Members from Indiana that I dare say that if I were to call the president of the New York State bar, or my own law partner, who happens to be the president of the Rochester, N. Y., Bar Association, or others in the legal profession they would tell me that we needed about twelve or fourteen more judges in New York State. Therefore I have no doubt that the gentlemen to whom he has referred are estimable gentlemen and undoubtedly leading lawyers of Indiana, else they would not hold the positions they do; yet the views of the lawyers, of whom I am very proud to be one, on the subject of the need for judges, as the gentleman from Indiana will recognize, always have to be carefully scrutinized.

And, then, a word in passing about the judicial conference. It is made up of most amiable and estimable gentlemen, made up of the senior circuit judges of the country, several of them good friends of mine; I hope that after this debate they will continue to be good friends of mine. But they meet periodically and pass on the question of the need for judges throughout the country, and it is fairly rare—it has been my experience that it is relatively rare—that if real pressure is placed by one of the brethren upon the others, it is rather rare that they do not succumb and agree that there is need for another judge in his area.

So I find myself in the position where I do not think we should accept without scrutiny, careful scrutiny, the recommendations of the judicial conference, important as they are and helpful as they are in assisting us in determining what we should do. After all, the responsibility is ours and not that of the judicial conference.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. The Judicial Conference meets in Washington in September of each year. It is composed of the presiding judge of each of the circuit courts of appeals of the country and it is presided over by the Chief Justice. If they take any action other than at the September meeting it is done by a letter vote, as was explained to our committee not later than yesterday by a representative of the courts. So if they voted on all of these judges they must have voted by mail on some of them.

Mr. KEATING. As a matter of fact, in this particular instance this is a case where last year the judicial conference, generous as they are in the distribution of judges, did not approve this particular judge.

Of course, whenever a particular judicial district is unable to establish the need for a judge, then they get together with an adjoining district and create this creature that we call the roving judge; in other words, if we cannot prove a case for an additional judge, perhaps we can prove a case for half a judge or a third of a judge; and that is what they are doing here in presenting this bill for a roving judge for the northern and southern districts of Indiana. Each district has a judge now but neither district could show the certain need for a full additional judge, so they create this roving judge.

Mr. HALLECK. Is there anything wrong with that?

Mr. KEATING. No; I think that is an admirable thing to do, to have a judge who can sit in both districts. Now, I must throw out a warning, however, that we have a bill coming along where there are two roving judges. The roving judges may get together and decide they are not going to rove as much as it was intended that they should rove when the original roving judge was created. This does not apply to the gentleman from Indiana's rover, because he is the single rover in the State; but we will come to a bill later on where there are two roving judges and they decide one of them will sit in St. Louis and the other one will sit in Kansas City and they will rove very little from one area to the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. KEATING. So there can be abuse of this roving judge proposition. But in this case I do not charge that.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Not right at this moment. I appreciate and admire the vigorous fight the gentleman is making for this bill.

On page 3 of the report it is pointed out in the third from the last paragraph a matter which probably may not be known to all Members:

> The sharp rise in the number of pending civil cases in the southern district is attributable largely to the ill health of the district judge for that district who recently retired.

That would indicate it may be a temporary situation, and at the appropriate time I shall offer an amendment which we find in many of these bills providing that the vacancy occurring as a result of the creation of this additional judgeship by retirement or otherwise shall be a temporary one so that it will not be a permanent appointment. I hope if the bill is adopted at all it will be adopted with that amendment.

There are one or two other points I would like to cover.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. My intercession here is only for the purpose of trying to obtain information. The gentleman is a very able member of the committee and I respect his judgment. However, in respect to that amendment the judge in the southern district has retired. The present judge, I understand, is one of the youngest Federal judges in the United States. So we either need the additional judge now or we do not. I do not know how young a man might be expected to be appointed to this third position if it is created, but the two who are presently serving in Indiana are young men who undoubtedly have a great expectancy.

Mr. KEATING. What the gentleman says may very well turn out to be true. It has been our general practice here, in authorizing new judgeships, to provide almost uniformly, that the vacancy later occurring shall not be filled; in other words, making it a temporary judgeship.

Let me say that I am not suffering any illusions on that point that the temporary character of the judgeship is likely to continue, because several of the measures here before us today are to remove that temporary provision, and it may very well be it should later be removed in this case. My point is if that amendment is adopted it would mean we would take another look at the situation at the time a vacancy arose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. KEATING. If the situation then exists that the need is still present I have no doubt, from the experience I have had here today, that there will be no difficulty in continuing that judgeship. I do think when we first authorize the new judgeship we should follow the practice which we have followed in the past almost universally and provide that it shall be temporary.

I am frank to say to the Members, and particularly to my friend from Indiana, that this is a stronger case than the Illinois case; but it still does not seem to me to indicate the need for a judge.

As was pointed out by the gentleman from Ohio, Indiana is a particularly law-abiding State. The number of criminal cases brought in the Indiana districts is well under the average for the country at large. As appears on page 11, so far as criminal cases are concerned they are terminating and disposing of more criminal cases than are being started, which is an admirable position and somewhat different, I believe, from Kansas City which we will come to later.

But, there is an improvement also as the gentleman will observe at the top of page 11 over the year before in the termination of civil cases, and the court, with the two judges, is almost current at the present time, so I feel that the need is not sufficiently established, certainly, to provide for a permanent judge. I feel I shall have to oppose the bill and certainly oppose it unless such an amendment is adopted.

I just received some interesting figures which I will go into in more detail on the next judgeship bill, but they indicate this important fact: We are adding to the number of judgeships much faster than our population is increasing, so that the per capita number of persons served by a single judge is decreasing all the time; in other words, all of these average figures which we get, it must be remembered, take account of many areas where there is not a need for the number of judges that are there now. The difficulty with passing all these judgeship bills is that we never get a bill—at least, I have never seen a bill presented here—to eliminate or cut down the number of judges in an area.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. That is the point I wanted to make, when are you going to get that legislation? We had the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MADDEN] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DENTON] speaking here saying that in some seven or eight States they have three and four judges, States with much less population than Indiana. When are we going to get a bill in here to redistribute these judges or abandon some of them?

Mr. KEATING. Well, I do not know. The only advice I can give the gentleman is to survey the situation in Iowa, and it might be that the gentleman would conclude that we ought to introduce a bill to cut down the number of judges in Iowa. I do not know what the result would be. I do not want to do it for New York, if that is what the gentleman is asking for. Without a thorough survey, I would not be prepared to say New York has too many judges.

Mr. GROSS. We have two judges for some 3,000,000 in the State of Iowa. I do not think that is excessive.

Mr. KEATING. I agree with the gentleman. That does not seem excessive.

Mr. GROSS. But when you are dealing with three, four, and five judges in States with populations in the hundreds of thousands, that is a different proposition.

Mr. KEATING. My judgment is that both Iowa and New York are probably comparatively understaffed so far as judges are concerned today. Certainly that is true, if you take the bills that we are passing today as a criterion. However, I do not think you should take that as a basis for determination, because most of the bills now before us are, in my judgment, lacking in merit.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, Indiana is expected to have about 4,000,000 population today. I think the over-all population for the Nation is 150,000,000, so that if you take into account the average on the basis of two Federal judges, you would have about 75 United States district court judges in the United States. Does anyone know what the total overall number is?

Mr. KEATING. Yes, in that respect Indiana is much better than the average, because there are, I believe, about 250 judges in the country. Purely from the population standpoint, Indiana stacks up pretty well.

Mr. HALLECK. I take it that the gentleman would agree with me that as to these separate measures which come in, each stands on its own bottom. I supported the gentleman's motion to recommit on the bill we just had here to reduce the number in the northern district of Illinois from two to one, because I felt that that was a reasonable increase at this time.

Mr. KEATING. As I say, I think the case of the gentleman from Indiana has more merit than the Illinois case.

Mr. HALLECK. I am sure the gentleman did not seek to impute to any Member from Indiana any selfish purpose in the consideration of this bill. Rather we are engaged in a consideration of the report that was submitted by the gentleman's committee, which report clearly indicates, so far as I can discern, that a better case has been made for this situation than any other one; in fact, a good case, a complete case.

Mr. KEATING. Well, the gentleman's interpretation of the report is not exactly the same as mine. But, I do not impute anything but the finest of motives to the gentleman or any of the other Members from Indiana on either side of the aisle. We can have our differences of opinion without rancor or ill feeling, I am sure.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. The gentleman has stated that he would favor a temporary selection of this judge.

Mr. KEATING. I would prefer that to permanent, although I question the need for either.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. The gentleman also has implied that if he were to call the bar associations they would get together most anywhere and decide they needed another judge.

Are we Members of the House supposed to draw the conclusion from what the gentleman has said that these judges, even though we add another one to Indiana, or perhaps two, would let the work pile up so that they would never get it cleaned up? We are a year behind, they say, in northern Indiana. Suppose we had an additional judge. Would they clean that work up or would that work lie there as a backlog so they could always justify an additional judge?

Mr. KEATING. There is always the danger of that, but I would not want to impute to any of our Federal judges an intention to do such a thing as that.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Is that why we have so many judges in New York and why the work is so far behind, that they do not properly handle the workload?

Mr. KEATING. In New York you have that condition primarily because you have the greatest workload of any State in the country, and the largest population.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Why do you have that?

Mr. KEATING. Because of the large number of cases of long duration, antitrust cases and other long-drawn-out trials in New York City. That does not apply so much in the part of New York from which I come, but in New York City they have very long-drawn-out trials and complicated litigation, more so than any other city in the country.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. NOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. NOLAND. I believe the statistics showing the case load in Indiana definitely show that an additional judge is needed in Indiana. I think we should commend our colleague from Indiana [Mr. DENTON], who has introduced this bill and has brought to the attention of the Congress the severe need for an additional judge in Indiana. He should be commended for his untiring efforts in bringing this bill before the House.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, 16 years ago this month I was admitted to the bar of the State of Indiana. I am not so much interested in the population argument in this discussion regarding the creation of a roving judgeship for the State of Indiana. I am going to speak very briefly. I do not want to be like some lawyers in a case, who after they have made their case continue to present their arguments and then lose it.

We in Indiana need this judge as much as any other State in the Union. During the war I left my practice and before entering the armed service was connected with the United States Corps of Engineers in the field of condemnation of real estate. Immediately after my discharge from the service I went back to the United States Corps of Engineers, and found that many of the cases I had filed earlier were still pending in the Federal courts of Indiana.

We are now facing the possibility of another world conflict, in which much of the real estate of our people will be seized by our Government because of the need for additional airports, Army and Navy camps and installations, and the building of war factories.

I am one of the many authors of bills to create an Air Force Academy, and I have proposed to place that Academy in my district. Of course, there is only perhaps a slight possibility that it will be placed there. However, I have received more criticism from the farmers of my district over this suggestion than anything else I have ever done. What arguments do they give? They say, Mr. WALSH, you took our land last time. We did not receive our money for 2 or 3 years. The value of the real estate in our communities skyrocketed and we were forced to buy real estate on contract and pay high interest, or we were forced to go out of the farming business for 2 or 3 years until we got our money."

As a lawyer of 16 years' experience, one of the hardest arguments I had to refute to the average layman, and it is one you cannot refute, is: Why is there such delay in lawsuits? Why can we not get this case into court? That applies in every court, whether it is in a justice of the peace court or the court of common pleas in the State of the Nation or in the Federal courts of the United States. A year behind—a year behind in the northern district of Indiana. If I practiced in this Federal court, I would have a hard time explaining this to my clients. We are spending billions of dollars for defense. We are spending billions of dollars for social security and so forth. One of the strongest arms of democracy is the judicial system, and I can say to you honestly and sincerely this bill should pass. I am for every one of these bills that has been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. One of the chief ways in which democracy speaks is through our court system. There should not be delay in the determination of the rights of men. We need these courts. The American people who are forced to go into our courts should be given the privilege of having their cases presented promptly.

This bill is one of the most important bills that has been presented to the House, as far as the State of Indiana is concerned, during the Eighty-first Congress. I ask that the Congress give this bill its utmost consideration.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Chairman, I have only a word to say. I shall support the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING], which will make this judgeship a temporary judgeship. The only difference between the bill as now written and the bill as amended, if the amendment is adopted, will be that when a vacancy occurs the Congress will again have to reappraise the situation to see whether or not an additional judge is needed at that time.

As far as the roving judge is concerned, I think the older members of the Committee on the Judiciary will bear me out when I say that I was one of the originators of the roving-judge theory. Of course we felt that one judge could serve a number of districts, and that therefore there would be sufficient and adequate judicial consideration given to the legal matters in a State. Let me say that the experience has been illuminating.

Mark well that the time will come when this judge, as suggested by one of the other gentlemen, will not like "to rove" anymore. He will pick himself out a particularly nice place in which to live. Then he will want the district boundaries changed and he will want to reside in this particular home. In addition to that they will need a new post office in that town. When they are building the post office—a Federal building, of course—it will cost very little to put on another story and have a Federal courtroom.

In addition to the judge there will be the clerk and the staff, the United States marshal, and the library, and all the other things that go with the United States district court.

Mr. Chairman, that is coming just as sure as this bill passes. I will not be here, but remember what I am saying.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. I have no doubt but what there is much in what the gentleman has said and probably in many States that situation has come to pass. However, I think it is only fair to point out that the two district judges in the State of Indiana who are serving there today are in truth and in fact roving judges. The judge in the southern district holds court in four different cities and the judge in the northern district holds court in three different cities.

Now, that is a great accommodation to the citizens of our State who have litigation in the courts. It makes it possible for them to be present in court at places less far removed from their homes. Probably it is a matter of some inconvenience to the judges, but as I said, it can be pointed out fairly that we have had that system which has prevailed for a long time and still prevails, and I hope it continues to prevail.

Mr. MICHENER. My good friend, the assistant minority leader, should be commended for his tenacity. When he wants anything he goes after it and he hangs onto it like a puppy to a root. He usually succeeds. I again commend him. If you will put on the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING], it will give you this "rover," and it will give you time to consider the thing which I have called attention to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] has expired.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROOK].

Mr. CROOK. Mr. Chairman, I subscribe wholeheartedly to this measure before the committee. I think we have absolutely passed through the temporary stage and tryout for the need of such a judge. All the evidence points to the fact that we need this new judge and he will not differ so much from the ones that we have at the present time. They are roving, and why should we worry about whether they are going to be permanently established in one city? I have not seen any judge who is better than a Congressman, but we do not get to establish ourselves in any one point.

This extra judge is necessary. It has been needed for several years, and I do not see any need to give this judge a try-out. It is necessary, and I trust this bill will be passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one district judge for the northern and southern districts of Indiana. Accordingly, title 28, United States Code, section 133, is amended, to read as follows with respect to said districts:

"Districts | Judges

Indiana

* * * * *

Northern and Southern---------- 1

* * * * *"

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KEATING: Page 1, line 12, at the end of the bill, insert: "Any vacancy occurring by reason of the death, retirement, resignation, or removal of the judge appointed pursuant to this act shall not be filled."

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment to which I referred in general debate. It is in conformity with the practice which we have adhered to in the past, in general, in authorizing new judgeships. We have almost uniformly provided that when they are first authorized they shall be temporary. Of course, that means, as the distinguished ranking minority member [Mr. MICHENER] has said, that when a vacancy does come about, then we will take another look at this thing. Certainly, it seems to me that in this case, as in the others, we should follow that practice. If we are going to authorize an additional judge, we should do it in a conservative manner by doing it temporarily at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I simply rise to say that I for one have never been in sympathy with this argument for temporary judgeships, although I yield to no one in my admiration for its advocates. If the Judiciary Committee of the House has any doubt as to whether or not this judgeship is needed, then under our oath we owe it to ourselves, our constituents and the judiciary, then we should never have reported the bill favorably.

We have certified the facts upon which our judgment is predicated, and there is not another State in the Union which has made out any better case than Indiana both as to case load and population. We in our committee believe sincerely that this should be a permanent judge, which would give but one judge for every one and one-third million people in a State which has as many industries almost as it has farms—a perfect balance. It seems to us that this is abundantly justified and that we do not need to postpone the relief which Indiana is clearly entitled to under our report and under our fixed belief.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. With pleasure.

Mr. JACOBS. I should like to make this observation at this point: The gentleman from New York earlier referred to the increasing number of judges in ratio to population. The State of Indiana now has within 10,000 the same population as the Nation had when the first Federal judiciary was created. I understand, because I got the figures from the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING], and I know they are correct, that we had 24 Federal judges at that time in the first Federal judiciary which was created. I am quite sure that the population of Indiana will continue to increase as it has.

I want to thank the gentleman for the comments that he has made in reference to my statement; they are absolutely accurate. I have given this matter careful consideration myself. I have been a lawyer 23 years. I am firmly convinced that the judgeship is needed, but I should like to make that comparison so that it would be in the RECORD.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. HOBBS. I shall be so happy to yield to my distinguished colleague on the Judiciary Committee, and one of the most distinguished members of our committee since the days of Daniel Webster.

Mr. KEATING. I thank the gentleman, and I want to say in response that it is a great source of regret to me that the gentleman is not going to be here in the next Congress to serve on this committee. However, it was the gentleman's gracious gesture which caused me to get into that, and I asked the gentleman to yield primarily for the purpose of saying to the gentleman from Indiana that when I gave the figure 24 it included the judges of the supreme court who were originally appointed. It seems to me, however, that it is scarcely a comparison which we can draw to take our Nation in its entirety when it was originally founded, when communications were quite different from what they are today, because there is, of course, a minimum number of judges necessary due to geographical considerations.

Let me say to the gentleman from Alabama that I feel sure that he did not mean to leave any impression that the adoption of this amendment would delay anything to which Indiana would otherwise to entitled. I feel sure, on the other hand, that he would agree with me that the question of permanency could be decided later as well as now so that the adoption of this amendment does not delay the creation of this additional judgeship any.

Mr. HOBBS. Certainly not, sir.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment is defeated.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of these temporary judgeships as was understood in the hearings we have had before the Judiciary Committee was for cases like this. There was a judge who was old or who was sick who could not perform his duties. That was a temporary situation. They then appointed a so-called temporary judge. You had the situation in that particular court where the docket was crowded, not because of workload but because the judge could not perform his duties. They appointed these temporary judges solely for the purpose of clearing up the docket. The unusual thing that happens in practically every case where a temporary judge has been appointed is that as soon as the old or ailing judge dies or resigns, the judgeship is made permanent. There is one of these cases where they had an old judge and they appointed a temporary judge and the temporary judge died before the old judge did.

That is not the situation we have here in Indiana. I might point out that this was considered by the Judiciary Committee. In a number of these cases they made the judgeships temporary because they thought there were situations there which might warrant a temporary judge. But that is not the situation in Indiana.

The judge in the southern district of Indiana is approximately 36 or 37 years old. The judge in the northern district is in his forties. They are judges who work hard and are able to perform their work. The situation in Indiana is that they need more than a temporary judge.

In large cities you have more litigation than in small communities. Let us look at the situation in Indiana. The judge of the southern district holds court in Indianapolis with a population of over 500,000, he holds court in Terre Haute, a large city. At Terre Haute they have a Federal prison which calls for a good deal of work. He also holds court in Evansville, a city with a population of over 100,000, and also in New Albany.

The judge in the northern district holds court in Hammond, Ind., in Lake County. I do not know its population, but that county is large enough to have one Congressman. He holds court in South Bend, a city of over 100,000, and in Fort Wayne, also a city of over 100,000.

As I said, the Committee on the Judiciary considered this case and they thought it was a case for a permanent judge. Just as sure as two and two are four if you make this a temporary judge, and a vacancy occurs, we will have to make it permanent. This Indiana case is not one in which a temporary judge should be appointed. It should be a permanent judge.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LANE. The gentleman will recall at the time of the hearing on this bill when the chief judge of the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit was testifying, Hon. John Biggs, Jr., the gentleman asked him:

> Let me ask you: You have probably had more experience on this than anybody. Do these temporary judges ever turn out to be temporary? Do they not always become permanent?

This is the reply of Judge Biggs:

> I have never known of a case in which a temporary judge remains temporary. Invariably the practice has been to make the temporary judge permanent.

Mr. DENTON. That is right. In the omnibus bill creating additional judges which we considered last session a request was made to create a temporary judgeship. That was done, but this year we will consider a bill to make that judgeship permanent. There is so much work in Indiana this judgeship is bound to be permanent.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENTON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. JACOBS. Is there any indication or evidence whatever that the population or the business of Indiana is liable to recede?

Mr. DENTON. Why certainly not. We have a great many large cities. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] pointed out where the court ought to be held in other large cities in Indiana. This is a case where it should be permanent. You will be making twice as much work by accepting this amendment.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of propounding a unanimous-consent request. The clerk of the committee advises me that if the amendment is adopted, the sentence in line 5 starting with the word "Accordingly" should be eliminated. I ask unanimous consent to substitute in place of the amendment at the desk an amendment which would strike out the sentence beginning in line 5 and insert in lieu thereof the wording which has already been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment, then present his new amendment.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment and offer in lieu thereof another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. KEATING: Page 1, line 5, after the period, strike out the remainder of the bill and insert: "Any vacancy occurring by reason of the death, retirement, resignation, or removal of the judge appointed pursuant to this act shall not be filled."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KEATING) there were—ayes 20, noes 40.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. CARNAHAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6240) to authorize the appointment of a district judge for the northern and southern districts of Indiana, pursuant to House Resolution 703, he reported the bill back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. KEATING. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Mr. KEATING moves to recommit the bill H. R. 6240 to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendment: At the end of the bill add a new sentence as follows: "Any vacancy occurring by reason of the death, retirement, resignation, or removal of the judge appointed pursuant to this act shall not be filled."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 102, nays 171, not voting 157, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE EASTERN AND WESTERN DISTRICTS OF MISSOURI

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution No. 708 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7009) to repeal the proviso against the filling of the vacancy in the office of district judge for the eastern and western districts of Missouri. That after general debate which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN], and I now yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution making in order, not the appointment of another judge, but making permanent a roving judge in the State of Missouri. This judgeship, incidently, is now being filled by a very able man who was a former Member of this House, former Congressman Richard Duncan. I have observed, for some reason, quite a bit of objection to the appointment of these additional judges. Of course, as long as there is need for judges to carry on the courts, we have to have the judges to do that job.

In that connection I want to make this simple observation. I am supporting this resolution and I am supporting this bill, but as long as the Federal Government continues to grow and we have additional bureaucracies, additional agencies of government, and the Congress passes additional laws, we will have to have additional judges to enforce them, and there is no use complaining about these particular appointments. The Committee on the Judiciary has looked into the matter. It has found it necessary, and I am sure that some of us do view with alarm the ever-increasing tendency to create new departments, all at the expense of the State courts. So, there is no real consistency in providing for new laws and then objecting to the appointment of new judges to see that those laws are considered in the courts. There is, as I say, some alarm for the continuous increasing of the Federal court powers by the Federal laws at the expense of the State courts, which results in the removal of the government that much further from the people, with the centralization of government here in Washington.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may desire.

Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Mississippi explained, House Resolution 708 does make in order H. R. 7009, an amendment to the present law so as to provide the additional judgeship in the State of Missouri permanent in nature. Many of you who were here at the time, back in the summer of 1942, will recall that a judgeship was created, which was filled through the appointment of one of our colleagues of that day, Dick Duncan, who served with such distinction as a member of the important Committee on Ways and Means. At that time when the judgeship was created it was not made permanent, but only for the period of time Mr. Duncan should serve as the jurist. This bill would make that judgship permanent so as to give Missouri as a permanent arrangement the Federal judges it now has, even should Judge Duncan retire.

A few moments ago in connection with the Indiana judgeship bill I said I thought there was a great deal of justification for the naming of an additional Federal judge in the State of Indiana, perhaps more justification for the passage of that bill than any other one of these judicial measures now pending before us. I think I should correct my previous remarks by now stating that this bill provides an even more justifiable action. I am very happy and very well satisfied with the services of Mr. Duncan as a Federal judge. He has made a splendid jurist, but I am sure that the need for the additional judge will continue in Missouri long after Mr. Duncan may retire from office.

I am not so certain in my own mind but what we might not even use an extra judge or two down Missouri way, just to take charge of grand jury investigations, and to take a few other judicial notices of those things that may be going on, such as violation of the election laws, and so forth. I have noticed with a great deal of interest, and some fear and trepidation within my heart and soul, that the crime rate in certain portions of Missouri has increased in an amazing degree in the last few years, and that a committee of another body of this Congress has been making an investigation and obtaining some rather startling evidence and revelations as to the crime situation within the State of Missouri. So with due deference to my good friends and splendid colleagues from the State of Missouri, may I say I favor the adoption of this rule and the consideration of this bill, because I believe if there is any State in the Union which needs a strong and active Federal judiciary it is the Show Me State, the great State of Missouri.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special order I have for today be vacated and that I be given permission to address the House for 10 minutes tomorrow following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURKE] is recognized for 20 minutes.

(Mr. BURKE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include certain printed material.)

A TOTAL PEACE OFFENSIVE

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, some 15 years ago when I first met Mr. Walter Reuther I felt that he was destined to become one of the outstanding figures of our time. It has been my pleasure since that first meeting to be associated with him as a friend working toward the same objectives. My original appraisal of him has been borne out. He has become an outstanding figure in his own field as a fine American, ready and willing to contribute his great talents and his fighting qualities to our Nation's ultimate good.

As young men striving for improvement in status for the working men and women in mass production industry, Mr. Reuther, his other associates, and myself quickly found that communism will never serve the interests of the American worker, or any other worker for that matter. Communists have attempted by energetic effort, by false but plausible sounding argument, and by deceit and fraud to gain influence and control in the American labor movement.

Efforts of greater energy, factual logic, and the teaching of true American trade-union principles have defeated the Communist attempt to influence and control the American labor movement. Mr. Reuther has been in the forefront in defeating communism. He has battled with communism in close-in combat. He has been in front-line leadership in stripping from communism its false mask and in showing it up for what it is—enslavement of people and subservience of the individual to the state.

To effectively fight an evil enemy you must know who the enemy is and what methods he will use. Mr. Reuther knows the enemy and knows well his methods. We all know that Communists in America are no different than anywhere else. They take their direction from outside the borders of our own country.

Reaching into his wealth of experience and knowledge of communism and its methods, gained through his effective fight against it, Mr. Reuther last week sent to the President of the United States a proposal for a plan of action designed to bring about world peace and preservation of democracy in this world. He offered it, not in a spirit of "here is a cure-all plan that must be adopted without change," rather, it is, he says, "an effort to contribute to the thinking and discussion of the over-all problem."

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment my very good friend the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURKE] for bringing to the attention of the House the plan proposed by Mr. Walter Reuther last week. I, too, have had the pleasure of knowing Mr. Reuther intimately for nearly two decades. I have always found him to be a man of unusual intelligence and ability. I certainly concur in the remarks made by the gentleman from Ohio with regard to Mr. Reuther's leadership in the fight against communism in the American labor movement. It has been my pleasure to be associated in a minor way in a couple of those battles with Mr. Reuther. No one in America has done more to drive the Communists out of the American labor movement than Walter Reuther.

I would like to comment briefly on the fact that at the outbreak of World War II Mr. Reuther offered a plan for retooling the entire automobile industry, to turn it into a very efficient mechanism in the war against the Nazis. I think if we had accepted more of Mr. Reuther's plan at that time, our production methods would have been speeded up considerably.

I hope the entire country will pay attention to Mr. Reuther's proposals. I think they are deserving of the careful attention of every thinking person in America. It is important that we all realize that while we must fight Communist aggression on all fronts, we must also offer a positive program to the peoples of this world. There is a moral vacuum as well as a material background that we Americans must fill.

I repeat I am very happy that my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio, has seen fit to bring Mr. Reuther's proposal to the attention of the House.

Mr. BURKE. I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to read into the RECORD the text of Mr. Reuther's plan entitled "A Total Peace Offensive," along with its foreword and its letter of transmittal to the President:

A PROPOSAL FOR A TOTAL PEACE OFFENSIVE TO STOP COMMUNIST AGGRESSION BY TAKING THE INITIATIVE IN THE WORLD CONTEST FOR MEN'S MINDS, HEARTS, AND LOYALTIES—A POSITIVE PROGRAM OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL ACTION TO ELIMINATE POVERTY, HUMAN INSECURITY, AND INJUSTICE WHICH ARE THE SOURCES OF COMMUNIST POWER

(By Walter P. Reuther, president, UAW-CIO)

FOREWORD

In view of the character of world communism and the impossibility of predicting the next power move of the Politburo, no one can be certain that war is or is not inevitable. What we can be certain of is that America, the strongest nation among the free peoples of the world, has a moral obligation and duty to ourselves and to the world to make an all-out effort to avoid war and to build a just and lasting peace.

This proposal is suggested in the sincere belief that our best prospect of avoiding war and winning the peace lies in our pursuit of a plan of action that combines a fully adequate military defense with a positive peace offensive. The proposal set forth herein is an effort to outline the essentials and scope of such a peace offensive

We cannot give up hope for peace. To do so would weaken the moral fiber of our people and our allies, drying up the wellsprings of hope and aspiration which are the source of the spiritual strength of a free people. To give up hope for peace makes war inevitable.

We must not lose faith in the cause of peace. We must not lose faith in ourselves.

We must believe in peace. We must be prepared to work and fight for peace.

There are no pat answers to the problem of our complex and explosive world situation. There is no one simple action to stop the threat of Communist aggression and to establish lasting world peace.

America rejects the theory of preventive war as the answer to Soviet aggression. We could not live with ourselves nor stand before the world as a defender of human freedom and of the worth and dignity of the individual if we accepted the moral responsibility for launching a war of aggression.

We must work at the task before us on every sector of the world problem—on the military front, the political front, and the economic and social front. This proposal is an effort to underscore the importance and the compelling need for bold positive action on the economic and social front.

The Marshall plan and the work of ECA were an important beginning on this front, but a broader, more comprehensive, long-range program of economic and social action must be launched as a total peace offensive.

During the past year many men of good will all over the world in their search for peace have made important contributions through bold and imaginative proposals.

The ideas and suggestions set forth herein are not advanced as a finalized plan of action, but rather as an effort to contribute to the thinking and discussion of the overall problem. In the belief that in a society of freemen, the pooling and exchange of ideas and thoughts are the sources of democratic decision and constructive action, I offer this proposal for the consideration of my fellow Americans.

When the crisis is so great, and so much is at stake, each of us I feel has an obligation to speak out the faith that is in him. This I have tried to do in this proposal.

WALTER P. REUTHER.

DETROIT, MICH., July 15, 1950.

A LETTER TO PRESIDENT TRUMAN

JULY 15, 1950.

The Honorable HARRY S. TRUMAN,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Your prompt and decisive action to stop Communist aggression in Korea has given renewed hope and strengthened determination to the people of the world.

As you indicated in your historic statement before the American Newspaper Guild convention on June 28, we must defeat the Communist combination of force, propaganda promises, and systematic confusion by democratic performance. This is democracy's propaganda of the deed against which all the weapons in the Politburo's arsenal are futile. We know this to be a fact because it has worked in our union. We beat the Communists, not with propaganda, but by performance, by hard work and progress toward the objectives for which our union was formed. Other unions have done and are doing the same job.

We support your determination and your plan of action because, instead of mere defensive, negative anticommunism, you have defined the necessity for a positive three-way hitch of military defense, economic cooperation, and political cooperation.

Addressing the guild convention in your first statement after setting in motion the free world's answer to Communist aggression in Korea, you said:

"We must not be misled into thinking that our only task is to create defenses against aggression. Our whole purpose in creating a strong defense is to permit us to carry on the great constructive tasks of peace. Behind the shield of a strong defense we must continue to work to bring about better living conditions in the free nations.

"Particularly in the underdeveloped areas of the world we must work cooperatively with local governments which are seeking to improve the welfare of their people. We must help them to help themselves. We must aid them to make progress in agriculture, in industry, in health, and in the education of their children. Such progress will increase their strength and their independence.

"The growing strength of these countries is important to the defense of all free nations against Communist aggression. It is important to the economic progress of the free world. And these things are good for us as well as good for them."

I share your conviction.

Later in the same statement, you said:

"If we fail to carry out a vigorous point 4 program we run the risk of losing to communism, by default, hundreds of millions of people who now look to us for help in their struggle against hunger and disease."

Your view of the future as we can make it, lighted as it is by a steady optimism based on courage and clear thinking, should give confidence and inspiration to every American and to other peoples. I refer particularly to these words in your guild statement:

"Point 4 is a successor to the old colonialism idea, the exploiting idea of the middle seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth centuries. We want to have a prosperous world that will be interested in buying the immense amount of surplus things that we are going to have to sell. And now to do that they have got to have something to give back to us in order that they can buy our goods. I want to keep this factory organization of ours going at full tilt. In order to do that we must help these people help themselves.

"Point 4 is an investment in a peaceful and prosperous world. It is a program which will bring increasing results over the years. It will bring about a chain reaction in economic development. It will serve to create economic health where poverty existed, and to equip the people of underdeveloped areas to carry forward their economic gains and preserve their independence."

With this, Mr. President, I most wholeheartedly agree.

In full support of your policy and as a contribution to its earliest possible application, I have attempted to draft a proposal equal in scope and force to the Communist challenge that must be dealt with everywhere in the world.

I present it herewith in the hope it will receive your consideration.

Sincerely yours,

WALTER P. REUTHER,
President, UAW-CIO.

THE INITIATIVE FOR PEACE CAN BE OURS

The North Korean puppet army acting for the Kremlin must be pushed back to the thirty-eighth parallel. At a cost no one can now predict, this will be done. The price, high though it may be in lives and money, will be less than the cost of appeasement of Soviet aggression.

How many aggressions, manned by peoples of puppet states equipped and trained by Russian Communist commissars and generals, can be resisted and thrown back before one explodes into full scale international warfare?

Can we do nothing more than turn back today's aggression; drain our economy in wholly military preparation for tomorrow's aggressions; wait, hopelessly and helplessly, for the ultimate explosion of world-wide conflict?

Must the initiative for peace or war be left to the members of the Russian Politburo who, themselves, are prisoners of the very power they use to rule the people of Russia and other peoples inside the churning concentration camp of misery which they have put together out of the wreckage of World War II?

Positive action for peace is needed now

The world still staggers, stunned by the impact of violence, death and destruction of the last war. Hundreds of millions of people everywhere, of every faith, nationality and race, pray for peace while the world again prepares for war.

The race to produce the H-bomb creates a great emptiness in the world, blasting man's hope for peace and filling his heart with hollow uncertainty and fear.

The moral vacuum created in the world by the H-bomb must be filled. The United States has and must accept the major responsibility for filling this moral vacuum with positive, human, democratic values that, in practice, will reestablish the worth and dignity of the individual human being.

The war in Korea has finally awakened us to the creeping Pearl Harbor of aggression that is being engineered by the men in the Kremlin. American democracy must and, I believe, can demonstrate the moral strength and economic and practical know-how necessary to develop and present to the world a tangible and comprehensive plan of action to achieve economic and social justice which will win for the cause of freedom the loyalties of hundreds of millions of people whose poverty and misery are now exploited by the Communists.

Even at this late hour and perhaps because of the very lateness of the hour, such a program will mobilize a positive spiritual and material force in the world greater than the negative power of the H-bomb. It will release the pent-up powers stored in every man's hidden reservoir of hopes and aspirations everywhere in the world. It will provide hope against despair and promote revolt against rule by terror.

Only the United States has the material resources for the bold, constructive action needed to banish the fear that holds the world paralyzed on dead center, hypnotized by negative values based on men's fears and hatreds.

The compelling necessity for quick, positive, daring action is more than a matter of high purpose; it is a matter of democratic survival. If we fail now to launch a bold, tangible, practical program for peace, we will surrender the world to the apostles of fear, hatred, and hysteria. The negative values in which they trade will contribute further to world panic and will make war inevitable.

More than military victory in Korea is needed

The Korean situation is not an isolated development. It is part of total Communist strategy. The dictators in the Kremlin will repeat the technique employed in Korea with varied patterns of infiltration, subversion, and aggression whenever and wherever they find a soft spot. We may push the Communist aggressors back in Korea only to find a repeat performance in Indochina, Burma, Iran, Turkey, Berlin, or in any one of a dozen other spots.

This pattern of aggression is now clear. The prompt and decisive action of President Truman and the United Nations has united and inspired the free peoples of the world with new hope and determination. And the Politburo was no doubt startled to find that the free world has at last profited by the tragic lessons of the appeasement at Munich.

The experts generally agree that the rulers of the Soviet Union are not yet ready for total war and that therefore the Korean situation will remain limited in scope. American forces, supported by forces of other nations acting through the United Nations, will be successful in pushing back the Communists and in reestablishing the political status quo in Korea based on the thirty-eighth parallel. While this task must be pursued with the full strength and united determination of free peoples acting through the United Nations, we must not delude ourselves into believing that, having achieved this military objective, we have brought about any fundamental change in the basic circumstances out of which the Korean aggression developed.

The Communists have perfected the technique of exploiting poverty and human insecurity and are forging human misery into a political weapon of aggression. They did this in Greece and in Italy. They have done it in China, in Korea. They are doing it in southeast Asia, in south Africa, and in Latin America. In terms of the cold war invented and launched by the politburo, this political and propaganda weapon, now in use around the globe, can be as devastating as a stockpile of H-bombs.

Eight hundred million people now under Communist domination

Since 1945 the number of people under Soviet domination has increased from 180,000,000 to 800,000,000. This vast reservoir of humanity is being tapped for slave labor and military manpower to meet the requirements of Communist aggression. The engineers of Soviet aggression have shown that they can recruit by propaganda and pressure vast numbers of satellite troops, thereby holding in reserve the entire Russian Army, Navy, and Air Force. They need commit little more than equipment and military advisers while we must throw our own men into battle. This means that our manpower and the manpower of the few nations that can supply troops for the United Nation's armies may be bled white whenever and wherever the Kremlin decides to launch a new aggression.

This danger was recognized by Walter Lippmann when he recently stated:

"Unless our present position in the Asiatic Far East can be held in large measure by the will and the native force of Asiatic peoples, even larger bodies of American troops will become frozen there. Then the advantages of holding these positions will—in view of our global interests—have to be weighed against the heavy liabilities."

Only by a combination of fully adequate military measures and prompt bold action to wipe out human misery and desperation can we be successful in winning the loyalty and support of hundreds of millions of people and strip the Kremlin of its power to exploit them and sacrifice them in battles of aggression. Only by such a combination can we mobilize the will and the force of peoples to defeat the Politburo's plan for world conquest.

Freedom's fight for Asia must be won in the rice fields

The cold war is essentially a struggle for men's minds and hearts and their loyalties. The propaganda of the Communists is based on deceit, distortion, and outright falsehood. We must meet the challenge of communism, not by pious slogans about democracy's virtues, but by a positive program of social action that can and does win a fuller measure of economic and social justice for people everywhere.

The current Korean situation is a by-product of our failure in China. Communism did not succeed in China; we failed in China. Our failure in China was typical of the general failure of the west to understand or pay heed to the social dynamics and ferment that stir the exploited and oppressed Asiatic peoples. Western powers too often have attempted to sit on the lid and at best to treat the people of these countries as children, entitled only to second-class economic and political citizenship. Even the most enlightened type of colonial policy will not satisfy people who aspire to full independence.

We made the tragic mistake of believing that freedom's fight in China could be won on the battlefields alone, when all the time we should have known that basically freedom's fight had to be won in the rice fields. When hundreds of millions of people are hungry, when they are struggling to get the bare necessities to keep body and soul together while their officials are living in luxury, we cannot fill their empty bellies with pious slogans about the virtues of democracy. The Communists have not conquered China; they have merely moved in to fill the vacuum created by our failure.

The loss of China and the resulting developments in Korea should make us understand the method in the madness of the men who sit in the Kremlin and plan to rule the world. They are carrying out a planned program of provocation designed to throw the United States and our allies off guard and off balance. First, Greece, then Berlin, then Indochina, and now Korea. On the Kremlin's world-wide checkerboard there are still many more power moves to be attempted.

The Politburo strategy is to promote panic

The Politburo strategy is to create a series of crises, each serious in its proportion and potential, in order to condition and influence American policy in the direction of relying more and more on military power as the sole means of meeting the power of communism. The Kremlin dictators seek to divert us entirely from the pursuit of a positive program of social action which is the key—the only key—to winning the loyalty and support of the hundreds of millions of people who are living in a state of dire poverty and who are being denied the smallest element of economic security and human dignity. The unceasing fury of the Communist attack upon the Marshall plan is proof of the power of positive programs which help people help themselves to win a better life.

The Communists can and in many areas are now outmaneuvering us. They provoke and force us into greater military expenditures while, posing as the liberators of enslaved people fighting for bread, peace, and freedom, they circulate throughout the world their dishonest petitions for peace.

The success of the Kremlin strategy in throwing us off balance is sharply illustrated in the United States Senate. In the face of the Korean situation, while the Senate voted unanimously for the necessary $2,000,000,000 increase in military funds, it cut ECA funds by $250,000,000. The Senate Appropriations Committee then cut President Truman's recommendation for $45,000,000 for point 4 aid to $10,000,000. A day or so later Governor Dewey proposed that the United States go on a hardship economy, not for the purpose of stepping up both military strangth and constructive aid to other nations, but solely for the purpose of increasing military strength. Ex-President Hoover followed through by stating that all we need to do about communism is to oppose military aggression and trust to time for this evil to abate.

Such proposals to place sole reliance upon military strength in the world struggle against Soviet aggression would commit us to a policy of sending more and more American troops to fight throughout the world against more and more troops recruited from the increasing millions of people who would fall under expanding Soviet domination. Under such a policy of sole reliance on military power there would have been no Marshall plan and the Communists would now dominate western Europe.

Poverty and human insecurity the source of Communist power

We shall not make effective lasting progress against the Communists, we shall not win the millions of democratic allies needed to convert the negative defense against the Kremlin into a positive building of the peace until we understand and do something practical about the basic unsolved economic and social problems that are the source of Communist power. Until we understand why deeply religious peasants attend mass in the morning and Communist rallies in the afternoon, we have not grasped the fundamentals of Communist power.

It is not an historic accident that in the countries of Europe, such as the Scandinavian nations, England, and Switzerland, where there is an acceptance of social responsibilities with strong free democratic labor unions and where the average person enjoys a measure of economic security and human dignity, the Communists are without any appreciable strength or influence.

The propaganda of the deed will win for democracy

It is not enough merely to make the Voice of America louder and stronger so that democratic slogans may be carried to more people. Slogans and phrases ring hollowly in the ears of hungry men without concrete action to give the words meaning. Without the proof of performance they are ignored, rejected, and, if shouted too often and too loudly, are resented and become ammunition for the enemy.

We cannot win in a battle of words. There is no ceiling on promises except men's respect for the truth. The agents of the Kremlin, therefore, find it easy to outpromise use. They have in many countries a wealth of real grievances to denounce; in two many instances they have the mistakes and failures of anti-Communist nations to exploit.

But communism cannot compete in performance. The Voice of America will be able to rekindle hope for peace and belief in freedom and justice in the hearts of men when it can answer totalitarian promises with democratic performance.

Our propaganda must be the propaganda of the deed. We must prove in action that bread and freedom can live together in the same house.

We must launch a total peace offensive.

A PROPOSAL FOR A TOTAL PEACE OFFENSIVE

It is proposed that along with the building of adequate military defense we further strengthen our position in the world by launching total war against poverty and human insecurity, thereby striking at the heart of Communist power and influence.

We can seize the initiative for peace by putting into effect a greatly expanded foreign aid program geared to the economic and social needs of people throughout the world while promoting a practical program of economic and social justice at home. This direct attempt to destroy the sources of Communist power will have to be supported by an adequate system of defense based on joint planning and pooling of strength with our democratic allies.

It is proposed in effect that we take the price tag off peace. It is proposed that we agree to win peace with freedom and justice with whatever it takes to win it. It is proposed that we mobilize our people morally, spiritually, economically, and politically in a total effort for peace.

A nine-point program for building lasting peace

It is proposed that the American people, through their Government, express concretely their devotion to peace, justice, and humanity by making a fixed commitment to the peoples of the world as follows:

1. For the next hundred years (1950-2050) the people of the United States through their Government pledge themselves to make available through the United Nations an annual sum of $13,000,000,000. (This, over the hundred-year period, will equal the final money cost—$1,300,000,000,000—of the last war to the American people.)

Other nations will be asked to make similar investments in peace according to their ability, but the United States investment will not be conditional upon payments by other nations.

2. The annual sum of $13,000,000,000 made available by the people of the United States through their Government shall be deposited in a special United Nations Fund for Economic and Social Construction. This fund shall be used solely to help people in other nations to help themselves by developing and expanding the economic resources and facilities of the participating nations and for other purposes that will contribute to improvement of living standards, including nutrition, housing, health, and education of their people. An annual report will be made to the people of the world listing expenditures and specific results achieved.

3. The annual sum of $13,000,000,000 shall be made available to the peoples of all nations including the Soviet Union and its satellite nations on equal terms, subject to the conditions set forth below, and shall be allocated among the participating peoples according to a formula based on objective measures of their respective economic and social needs.

4. This proposal, upon adoption by the Congress of the United States, shall be submitted to the peoples of the world by the President of the United States through the United Nations.

5. Upon acceptance of this proposal by a majority of its member nations, the United Nations shall convene an international conference for the purposes of achieving total disarmament, establishing universal inspection and other appropriate security controls and creating an international police force. The refusal of one or more nations to cooperate in disarmament shall not affect the commitment of the people of the United States who shall nevertheless through their Government make the $13,000,000,000 annual payment into the United Nations Fund for Economic and Social Construction. Aid from the fund shall, in that case, be made available to those remaining nations which agree to cooperate in a program of mutual defense until such time as a disarmament program is universally accepted. Such mutual defense program shall be developed by the United Nations; and all participating shall agree not to employ their armed forces outside their boundaries except at the direction of the United Nations.

6. After acceptance of this proposal in principle by all or a majority of its member nations, the United Nations shall convene a Peoples' World Assembly for Peace to discuss the proposal in detail and to make recommendations to the United Nations concerning its implementation.

Each member nation of the United Nations shall be entitled to be represented in the Peoples' World Assembly for Peace by 18 delegates in all, composed of 2 each from the organization or organizations most representative of the following groups in its population: dirt farmers, industrial workers, housewives, youth, veterans, educators, scientists, professional persons, businessmen, and religious leaders.

The Peoples' World Assembly for Peace shall present its recommendations to the Secretary General of the United Nations who shall forward them to the governments of all member nations for official action by the UN Assembly. The Peoples' World Assembly for Peace shall be reconvened annually to hear reports on expenditures, projects, and achievement and to discuss and make recommendations concerning future operation and projects of the peace program.

7. The United Nations shall be requested to expand its existing agencies and to create such new agencies as may be needed to administer the world-wide program of economic and social construction made possible and financed by the funds made available by the people of the United States through their Government and by other peoples through their governments.

8. The United Nations shall create a special agency which shall be authorized to employ scientists and technicians to develop programs and techniques for the development and application of atomic power and energy for peacetime use within the limits permitted by security measures made necessary by the refusal of one or more nations to agree to universal disarmament and inspection. Such atomic project shall be financed out of the United Nations Fund for Economic and Social Construction and the services of this agency shall be made available to assist the peoples of all participating nations to build a richer life for themselves and the world community.

9. The United Nations and its member nations who accept and pledge cooperation in carrying forward this peace proposal shall take effective steps to expand and strengthen the means of mass communication and to use them to familiarize the peoples of all nations with the commitment of the peoples of the United States and of other nations and with the provisions, possibilities, and concrete economic and social achievements of this peace proposal.

A POSITIVE PROGRAM WILL WIN THE LOYALTY OF PEOPLES

The facts of performance can penetrate the iron curtain. People now in the free nations who came originally from any nation rejecting this proposal should be asked to make direct appeals to the peoples of those nations. Such appeals, based on personal knowledge and experience, are more effective than professionally written statements as was proved in the letter-writing that preceded the Italian elections in the spring of 1948. They, plus United States action on the Marshall plan, did much to defeat the Communist drive for power in Italy.

We must develop the techniques to penetrate the iron curtain so that people in any country which might reject this peace proposal will realize the magnitude of their losses because of inability to share in the United Nations Fund for Economic and Social Construction and because of being forced to continue to hear the crushing burden and anxieties of armament for aggression.

The cost of armaments must be spelled out in bread and butter terms. The Russian people must be made aware, for example, that in 1947 their expenditures on national defense came to 56,700,000,000 rubles, an amount equivalent to 51 percent of the 130,000,000,000 ruble total value of their entire industrial output. They must be helped to realize what their own industries could provide in shoes for their feet, in shirts, dresses and coats for their backs, in chairs and tables for their homes, in scarce drugs for their sick children, in all the necessities and comforts that they now lack, if only their government could be gotten to agree to join with others in universal disarmament and inspection.

Spell it out to the victims of Communist domination

The victims of Communist domination must be told how much more they could have in food, in clothing, in improved shelter, in comfort and convenience, in machinery to lighten their toil and to enable them to produce more with less effort if their governments would permit them to share in the $13,000,000,000 a year that the people of the United States are putting up on behalf of peace in the world and a better tomorrow for all peoples.

Day by day, the Voice of America must be enabled to reach the farthest corners of the vast totalitarian prison behind the iron curtain with reports of factories built in other countries to produce the things that make life richer; of stoves, radios, refrigerators, washing machines and automobiles made available to new millions; of lands cleared of malarial mosquitos; of new dams preventing floods, irrigating arid lands and producing vast supplies of energy; of crop yields rising; of empty bellies filled and of deficiency diseases banished; of infant mortality declining and literacy rising; of thousands of new homes, hospitals, and schools; of labor eased; hours of toil shortened and real wages and living standards rising everywhere on the face of the earth where governments have responded to their peoples' yearnings for peace and plenty in place of war and weapons and the costs of war.

We must create the realities, the factual conditions that will make such reports possible. With the people in Communist dominated satellite countries fully conscious of the cost in bread and butter terms of the refusal by their governments to join with other nations on the basis of this peace proposal, the internal pressures would be such that no police state could for long continue to defy the will of the people by refusing to participate in the program for universal disarmament and peace.

Faced with the loss of their satellite nations, and the weakening of their ability to further exploit poverty and misery as political weapons for the expansion of their sphere of domination, the Commissars in the Kremlin may recognize that they cannot conquer and enslave the world.

The strategists of the Politburo are schooled in the politics of power. They respect only superior power. If they are forced to recognize that they can neither win nor hold the loyalty of other peoples throughout the world, they may yield to the facts of superior strength possessed by aroused and united peoples. Thus the world may be saved from the catastrophe of total war. But even if worst comes to worst and the power-drunk men in the Kremlin decide to stake all on victory in total war, we shall have taken millions of potential allies away from them; we shall have won these people to our side by having made a supreme effort to avoid war by the launching of a positive peace offensive.

Whichever decision the men in the Kremlin make, we must intensify the fight against Soviet enslavement in the field of economic and social action where the weight of our advanced technology and developed productive resources gives us an overwhelming margin of superiority in power which the Communists cannot ignore.

We must do more than fight defensively in the Kremlin's cold war, and do more to win the peace our way, the way of ECA and point 4, with the fire power of our peace offensive stepped up at least four times its present intensity.

Politburo steals wealth and conscripts manpower

A total peace offensive will expose, by contrast, in all its cynical and coldly calculated brutality, the Kremlin's exploitation and enslavement of the people under its control. Once it has established domination and installed its rule by force and terror, the Politburo systematically drains wealth out of the nations governed by its puppet dictators. In eastern Germany and throughout its sphere in eastern Europe it has already dragged living standards down toward the appalling low levels of the Russian people.

The manpower and the wealth of Soviet satellite nations are conscripted to feed the insatiable Communist war machine. Millions of Poles, Germans, Czechs, and other eastern Europeans now serve as slave labor. To these are to be added uncounted millions of the peoples of China and Asia drawn into the Soviet war machine as slave laborers and as expendable front-line troops.

Winning partners in peace and allies if total war comes

Instead of taking, we propose to give.

Instead of reducing the living standards of other people, we propose to help them raise their living standards.

Instead of confiscating their crops, we propose to help them modernize their agriculture for the production of more food.

Instead of drafting men and women for forced labor in the service of the Soviet war machine, we propose to free them and assist them in the building of a richer life.

Instead of draining their countries of mineral wealth and other natural resources, we propose to help them develop and use these resources for the fulfillment of their own needs.

Instead of driving their bodies in speeded-up production for the Soviet war machine, we propose to assist them in achieving decent wages, hours, working conditions, and the right of collective bargaining, and obtaining medicine, hospitals, and schools for them and their families.

This is an offer understandable in any language because it talks in terms of tools, jobs, food, housing, health, education, security, and freedom.

It is on this front that we can achieve our greatest success in winning the loyalty of millions of people as partners in the positive job of building the peace or, in the event of war, as fighting allies in the defense of freedom.

Blessings of peace and disarmament at home

The achievement of universal disarmament would bring the blessings of lasting peace to America in terms of intangible human values on which no price can be set. In addition, it would make it possible for the American people to make substantial social progress in the form of higher living standards, greater security, increased social services and a fuller and richer life in educational and cultural values.

The heavy financial burden of war is reflected in the current Federal budget of over $40,000,000,000 of which approximately 75 percent is earmarked to meet the cost of past and possible future wars.

We are currently spending approximately $15,000,000,000 annually out of the Federal budget for military purposes and this will no doubt be sharply increased if the world situation continues to deteriorate.

The achievement of universal disarmament would permit America to divert the billions of dollars now being spent for military requirements and national security to the task of meeting the unlimited peacetime needs of our people.

WE MUST PRACTICE AT HOME WHAT WE PREACH ABROAD

Nowhere is the gap between our promises and our performance as great as in the field of civil rights. Among peoples in underdeveloped countries, greatest doubt about our high moral statements on democracy, freedom and the worth of the individual is caused by our continued practice of a double standard of citizenship here at home. The United States cannot provide unassailable moral leadership in the world in this time of crisis and panic until we end that double standard.

The serious gap between what American democracy preaches and what it practices in the field of civil rights has provided and daily continues to provide the Communists with one of their most effective weapons in winning ground among the Asiatic and other peoples.

The daily propaganda broadcast beamed out of Moscow and released in other centers of Communist propaganda and agitation, eploits to the fullest the ugly facts of racial discrimination and violation of civil rights practiced in America and tolerated even in the Capital of our Nation.

Enactment of the President's civil rights program is more than a matter of justice and decency. In the world struggle for survival it is a must on democracy's agenda of unfinished business if we are to provide moral leadership along with material aid and guidance in the building of the peace.

THE WORK TO BE DONE

There is no lack of work to be done in the world with the $13,000,000,000 a year which it is proposed that we invest through the United Nations in the cooperative job of building peace for people.

In fact, to attain within the measurable future a standard of living approximating the level now to be found in the more highly developed nations, substantial supplementation of our investment in peace will be required.

Some indications of the need

The needs are shocking. They explain the hatred of colonialism and its postwar variations. They explain the initial success of Communist promises, infiltration, and aggression. Hundreds of millions of human beings have literally nothing to lose but hunger, disease, and the prospect of early death. Even the threat of forced labor and rule by terror will not always outweigh Communist promises of food, shelter, and clothing.

For example, of the one and a quarter billion population of Asia, 875,000,000, or 70 percent, depend for their livelihood upon agriculture.

For every member of its population living on the land, Asia produces little more than one-twelfth as much as North and Central America.

As against our infant mortality rate of 31 per thousand live births, Ceylon has 101, Korea has 116, Formosa has 125, India has 151, Burma has 204.

As against our life expectancy of 65 years for white men, life expectancy for Chinese men is 41; for Siamese, 37; for the men of India, 27.

As against our illiteracy rate of 2.7 percent, Ceylon has 42 percent; Korea, 69 percent; Turkey, 79 percent; India, 91 percent.

Modernized agriculture in Asia can release millions of workers

The living standards of the Asiatic peoples can be materially raised by producing more food per man, thus freeing tens of millions to work in industries. But bellies must be filled first, and, where men on the land can grow barely enough to feed themselves and their families, workers cannot be spared from the land to produce necessities and comforts beyond the primary necessity of food to keep body and soul together.

Even when billions are actually invested in Asia for river development, for fertilizers, for agricultural machinery and implements and insecticides, the job will be only begun. If we help Asia, with technical advice and equipment, to restore its eroded land and to use dams and related projects to prevent floods, to irrigate arid land, to produce fertilizers, and to generate power for its farms, transportation facilities, and industries, the major job will still remain. Only the first stage of the greatest pioneering job of the twentieth century will have been completed.

Of the 700,000,000 persons who would be displaced from the land in such a change over a period of years, possibly 150,000,000 to 200,000,000 would be workers, after allowance is made for women needed in the home, for children, and for other nonworking dependents. Here is a labor force as large as the total population of the United States. Its energies could be employed in the filling of human needs and wants beyond the basic need for food.

If we assume, as does the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations, that it requires $1,000 investment per worker to provide capital facilities (a place to work and tools to work with) for each worker added to the industrial labor force in underdeveloped countries, there is an investment need for industrial purposes in Asia alone of $150,000,000,000 to $200,000,000,000 on top of other billions to improve agricultural efficiency and increase food production.

PEOPLE MUST BE HELPED TO DO VAST JOB THEMSELVES

If it were intended to do a job of this magnitude on a world-wide scale with nothing more than $13,000,000,000 a year, generations would elapse before all peoples would be brought to a parity with our own standards, which would continue to rise in the meantime.

It is not proposed that we underwrite the entire job curselves. This is not a proposal for an unending international relief program, but a program to help other peoples help themselves.

Our job is to provide the hope and the material impetus. Men who live by plowing exhausted land with sticks to make it yield a few grains of rice are too occupied with the business of keeping alive from day to day—and too poor—to hope, plan, and invest for a better tomorrow.

We have the opportunity and the resources to provide the hope and the seed capital for investment and the know-how for production. As the first investments, provided by us through the United Nations, begin to bear fruit, hope will come to life. Out of the proceeds of the first investment it will be possible both to increase living standards immediately and to conserve part for further investment for still higher living standards tomorrow. Each new investment from savings at home and from the United Nations fund financed by the people of the United States and perhaps other nations will yield a larger surplus above bare necessities out of which savings can be made for still further investment in expanded production facilities.

CAN WE AFFORD THE COST OF THIS INVESTMENT IN PEACE?

The United States can afford the cost of peace. We must stand up and demonstrate that we have the courage to remove the price tag from our efforts to lead the world to honorable and lasting peace. Whatever such a peace may cost it is infinitely less than the cost of war.

We can afford the cost of the total peace offensive outlined herein, including adequate armed defense, short of total war, $13,000,000,000 annually in foreign aid, and social progress at home. If worst comes to worst and circumstances compel us to fight total war, the American people will be willing to make whatever sacrifices will be needed to put our total resources and maximum effort into winning that war. However, by waging an all-out peace offensive we shall have the best prospect of avoiding the infinitely greater costs and sacrifices of total war.

World War II lasted 44 months, and according to ECA Administrator Paul Hoffman, its total final cost to the American people will be $1,300,000,000,000.

It cost $29,500,000,000 per month.

It cost $985,000,000 per day.

It cost $41,000,000 per hour.

The above figures make no allowance for the incalculably greater cost of war in human lives and human values.

HOW BIG IS $13,000,000,000?

The sum of $13,000,000,000 a year seems big standing by itself. But it is insignificant when measured against our alternatives and our capacities.

Thirteen billion dollars is one one-hundredth of the cost of World War II.

Thirteen billion dollars is less than 5 percent of our current yearly output. Within 5 years it will be less than 4 percent.

Thirteen billion dollars is less than the increase that we can normally expect in a 2-year period in the total output of the American economy.

Full employment will meet the cost of building lasting peace

The last depression cost the American people $500,000,000,000 in lost production. This is nearly double the value of our gross national product in 1948, the highest in history.

At present there are about 3,500,000 unemployed persons in the United States able to work and actively looking for work. There are an additional 2,000,000 or so working part time who want and are available for full-time work. The full or partial idleness of these two groups alone represents the equivalent of perhaps four and one-half to five million full time workers whose output is being lost. Since our gross national product last year approximated $4,400 per civilian employee, it would take the equivalent of only 3,000,000 additional full-time jobs to produce the $13,000,000,000 a year required to cover the cost of the program for a total offensive for peace as outlined herein.

When we decide to wage peace with the same vigor and determination with which we wage war we can enlist the labor of millions of people not now in the labor market who would be glad to participate in the creative job of building the peace. With the increase in production made possible by the full employment of this expanded labor force we can meet the cost of a total peace offensive, build adequate military defenses, short of total war, and provide further social and economic progress for the American people.

The proof that we can do this job by mobilizing our full productive potential was furnished by the unprecedented production achievements during World War II. Faced with the challenge of war, millions of women left their kitchens and old folks came out of retirement to help produce the needed goods and services to back up our fighting men.

If we achieve comparable mobilization of our 1950 manpower potential in the same ratio as we achieved in 1944, we can increase our working force to 71,000,000 with which to meet civilian and military manpower requirements. This will permit doubling our present number of men under arms and still make available approximately 8,000,000 additional workers for civilian employment.

"Where's the money coming from?"—new tax sources

The $13,000,000,000 annual investment in peace which is here proposed represents an increase of only about $9,000,000,000 over the foreign economic aid we have been providing.

Part of the additional funds could be obtained by restoring wartime tax rates on corporations and upper-income taxpayers. Corporations paid taxes of approximately 57 percent on their profits during the war.

At present profit levels, a 60-percent average rate of tax on corporate profits would provide $7,000,000,000 of increased taxes. If, in addition, taxes on individuals with gross incomes of $15,000 or more were restored to wartime rates, a substantial part of the additional $9,000,000,000 in tax revenue would be obtained.

But large increases in revenues would flow from the proposal without raising tax rates. By putting enough people to work to produce $13,000,000,000 in additional wealth the entire tax base is broadened. At least $2,000,000,000 in additional Government revenue would be provided at present tax rates from the increase in personal incomes. Corporation tax payments would increase by perhaps another $2,000,000,000 due to the increased profits resulting from increased production.

This total peace offensive is proposed in the belief that in the cause of total peace as in total war we must step up production to the limits of our resources. Therefore, with the wartime rate of taxation restored on corporation profits and on incomes of the well-to-do, it would be possible to increase Government revenue toward meeting the increased cost of foreign aid and stepped-up military expenditures.

This is no time for men of little faith

With our human and material resources fully mobilized for peace, we can do the job before us. Our ability to do so will be challenged by the men of little vision and no faith who have dedicated their lives to a perpetual losing struggle against every next step in mankind's progress.

These same little men were without courage or vision when we faced the challenge of Hitlerism and Nazi aggression. Until June 22, 1941, they joined Communists, Nazis, and Fascists in announcing that "the Yanks aren't coming." They dragged their feet and clung to the policy of too little and too late both before and after Pearl Harbor. They challenged President Roosevelt and said that the production goals he set for the United States were fantastic and could not be met. The record of achievement on the production front proved these little men to be wrong and President Roosevelt to be right, for his production goals were met and doubled. By their cries now for sole reliance on military force to save the world from Communist aggression they are again demonstrating the same lack of faith in the strength and capacity of America to meet the challenge of peace.

We must free ourselves from the paralyzing effect of the campaign of moral and political intimidation that is being waged among us by these men of little faith who would sell America short and leave the world with no hope for peace.

WE MUST BREAK PRODUCTION BOTTLENECKS

The steel industry currently operating at full capacity cannot meet our present needs. We must take positive steps to expand our basic steel production capacity to meet both our expanding military and civilian requirements. We are faced now with a situation comparable to that faced in the period immediately before and after Pearl Harbor. The owners of the steel industry, wedded to a program of planned economic scarcity with low volume and high prices, said then as they say now that the steel industry's capacity is adequate. They failed then as they fail now to take steps to expand capacity. It was not until the then Senator Harry S. Truman, chairman of the Senate War Investigating Committee, exposed their willful negligence that the Government took steps to assure the expansion of steel production facilities necessary to win the war.

Steel production must be expanded

At the end of the war the monopoly interest in the steel industry rushed back to normalcy and again reinstituted the policy of planned scarcity with low production and high prices. Three years ago when this matter was raised before the Senate Committee on Small Business, conclusive evidence was developed clearly indicating the need for further expansion of steel production facilities to meet America's growing needs. Again the forces of monopoly and scarcity who control the steel industry, represented by the American Iron and Steel Institute, denied the need for further expansion, claiming that America's needs were temporary and that excess steel capacity would soon develop.

Their stubborn refusal to recognize requirements and to expand capacity to meet our needs jeopardized our national security in the period before and after Pearl Harbor and now again jeopardize our future. Failure of the steel industry to take immediate practical steps to expand steel production capacity will compel the Government again to take action to break this production bottleneck now as it was compelled to do in the war.

Idle war plants must be put to work

Production bottlenecks in other basic industries must be dealt with in a like manner where the owners and managers of such industries continue in their refusal to expand production capacity to meet our military and civilian needs. Until these bottlenecks are broken, basic materials in short supply must be allocated with priority given to essential military and civilian requirements.

Idle Government-built war plants of all types, which stand today as monuments to our failure to plan for the future, must be immediately and fully mobilized as functioning production units. Fully manned with a highly trained working force these plants could be producing both military and civilian goods and would be acceptable of quick shift to all-out war production when needed.

YOUTH HAS A STAKE IN THIS PROPOSAL

Each year our high schools, colleges, and universities add approximately 1,000,000 new workers to our potential wealth producers. These youths look to us to provide the opportunity for use of their training and talents. This peace proposal will provide opportunities for them to help in the creative and positive job of building the peace. It suggests an all-out effort to avoid the necessity of giving these young Americans the job of fighting an all-out war.

This proposal offers our sons and daughters an opportunity to participate directly in the constructive work that must be done at home and in the world. It opens up new frontiers in the valleys of the Yellow, the Yangtze, the Ganges, the Jordan, and other great rivers where young American engineers, agricultural specialists, doctors, nurses, and teachers can use their energies, training, and creative ingenuity to assist and train the people of underdeveloped countries to restore and increase the productivity of their land and to improve their health and living standards.

Our young doctors, engineers, and teachers of the years to come can be offered opportunities to travel voluntarily to the ends of the earth with medicines, slide rules, and books in their hands, or they can be drafted for shipment to the same areas with rifles slung to their backs.

From their earliest years of consciousness our young people have found inspiration in the adventurous years at the beginning of our history when pioneers year after year moved forward the advance posts of civilization. This proposal for peace offers opportunity for adventure and pioneering on new social and economic frontiers.

This is pioneering for peace and freedom, which can be made secure in the world only if they rest upon a broad foundation of social and economic justice. We in America must dedicate ourselves and give leadership in the building of that foundation for a lasting peace.

Freed from the crushing burdens of armaments and war, equipped with the tools of modern technology and science, all peoples can cooperate in creating a world of abundance in which man can enjoy peace, economic security, the fullest measure of political and spiritual freedom and human dignity.

THE TIME FOR ACTION IS NOW

Prompt and decisive action by President Truman and the United Nations in resisting military attack on South Korea has undoubtedly forced some revision in the Communist timetable of aggression. We cannot know whether total war will come, or if so, when. We owe it to ourselves and to the people of the world to make an all-out effort for peace in the hope of avoiding total war. This proposal is suggested in the sincere belief that our best prospect of avoiding war and winning the peace lies in a plan of action that combines fully adequate military defense with a positive peace offensive.

We are at the place in world history where we must recognize that the best hope of saving freedom and achieving a just and lasting peace is in action—action so challenging, so vast in scope, so practical in design, and so sincere in purpose that it will fill the moral vacuum in the world with reborn hope and a renewed spirit of cooperation among the people of all nations.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I think the gentleman is rendering a service in introducing the Reuther plan for our information. I have not had the pleasure of reading it, but I shall read it. I agree that there is wisdom in emphasizing positively the peace aspects of the present American policy. Mr. Symington was before our Committee on Banking and Currency today, and in response to one question; that is, that the proposal of the President for enlarged powers was based upon the assumption that war is ahead, he replied in the negative; that actually the prospects for peace are brighter because of the alerted attitude of the people of America as a result of the Korean invasion. I think that the observation made by the gentleman's colleague from Ohio recently [Mr. McSWEENEY], when he pointed out that in some respects the Russians had excelled us in the propaganda field, is a correct observation. The time has come for us to make our position clear before the world that our goal is the goal of peace and justice. There is no reason in the world for allowing the Russians to seize the symbols of peace, to misuse the words democracy and peace, but the necessity is upon us for emphasizing the positive and constructive goal of the American people.

I think the gentleman has done us a service, whether we agree with Mr. Reuther or not, in the specific proposals that he advances, in pointing out that thoughtful people are willing to implement our peaceful purposes in the world.

Mr. BURKE. I thank the gentleman from Arkansas. I believe Mr. Reuther's statement carries out that idea that of course it is not necessary to agree in toto with the proposal, but it is a basis for some constructive thought and decision.

I yield back the remainder of my time, Mr. Speaker.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 10 minutes on Wednesday and Thursday next, after the conclusion of the legislative business of the day and any other special orders heretofore entered.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, we in the House of Representatives, and especially the members of the Ways and Means Committee, were careful when considering H. R. 6000, to amend the Social Security Act, to restrict the bill to old-age insurance and related warfare programs and to avoid unrelated issues. We did not want to change our unemployment insurance system by a rider.

When the Senate passed the bill, however, it added the so-called Knowland amendment to H. R. 6000. This amendment has absolutely nothing to do with old-age insurance. It is totally irrelevant to public assistance for the needy and the aged. It is about as far removed as I can imagine from the child welfare program of the Federal Government. And yet this amendment was spliced to H. R. 6000, a measure solely concerned with these three phases of Federal activity.

No hearings have ever been held on the Knowland amendment. The matter has never been discussed in committee on its merits. I very much fear, therefore, that proper consideration has never been given to the broad implications of this amendment. The purpose seems to be to delay the requirement of conformity of State law with the standards set by Congress until the interpretation of the particular State unemployment compensation law has been passed upon by the highest State court.

I submit, however, that the amendment actually would do much more than this. Under the present law, certification of a State law is denied to any State which has so "changed its law" that it no longer meets the congressional standards. This can, under present law, be either by legislative action or by administrative or judicial interpretation. But under the Knowland amendment, certification would be denied only if a State has "amended its law" by action of the legislature so that it no longer meets the congressional standards. This means that no matter how the original law is interpreted by the administrative officials or the courts—even where the State interpretation is at complete variance with the congressional standards—no question of conformity with such standards could be raised. The Federal Government would be required to use Federal funds in support of such a system without any adequate recourse. I think the whole amendment is completely out of line with anything this House wants to consider in a social security bill.

One aspect of this whole matter has been given very little attention, and that is the serious implications of this proposal as to other Federal-State programs involving the grant of Federal funds. I very much fear that the Knowland amendment could become a precedent for all of these programs. These other programs typically provide for the submission by a State of a plan which meets standards enacted by the Congress. The Federal Administrator is directed to approve any plan which meets these standards and to deny continued certification if any plan is so changed that it no longer contains the required provisions or if in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply with those requirements in a substantial number of cases.

These directives of the Congress expressed in other Federal-State programs are substantially similar in purpose and effect to the requirements in the unemployment compensation system to which the Knowland amendment relates. The pattern is the same and similar problems arise. I want to cite a few examples to show exactly what I have in mind.

Under the public assistance program there was recently a State administrative decision denying old-age assistance benefits to all Indians in contravention of standards set by the Congress. The law of the State had not been amended by the legislature to achieve this result and the legality of this exclusion had not been passed upon by the supreme court of the State. It was nevertheless readily apparent that benefits were being denied contrary to the congressional standards. The question was immediately raised with the State and the matter was adjusted as a condition of any further grants of Federal money to the State. Now if the Knowland amendment were to apply in this situation, the ability to maintain the minimum standards would be greatly curtailed. Although the law of the State had been changed by an administrative interpretation of general effect still no question could be raised if a provision like the Knowland amendment applied. This is because there was no legislative change in the State plan. Moreover, the question had not been decided by the highest State court, which is another requirement of the Knowland amendment. Years would probably have elapsed before the matter would have been decided by the highest State court even if the needy claimants had enough money to appeal to the courts. Meanwhile benefits would be denied perhaps to many hundreds of penniless and aged Indians.

The same situation arises under other provisions of the Social Security Act. It could arise as to aid to dependent children, as to maternal and child welfare, and as to aid to the blind. The unemployed, the aged, the blind, the ill, and our dependent children are all in urgent need of the benefits to which they are entitled. When they are deprived of these benefits whether by administrative action or by the lower courts, their suffering is as great as it is when the legislature acts or when the highest State court speaks. And any of these agents of the State can equally place into general effect a State rule which is contrary to the standards set by the Congress.

Federal standards, together with provisions to insure that those standards will be complied with, are contained in almost every grant-in-aid statute passed by Congress. They are found in grants for hospital construction, grants for prevention, control, and treatment of venereal diseases, grants for agricultural research, reforestation, for agricultural experiment stations, grants for maternal and child welfare, and various other statutes. Although the Knowland amendment to H. R. 6000 is applicable only to the unemployment-compensation program, its principles could as easily be used to jeopardize many other programs which provide for grants-in-aid to the States.

The Ways and Means Committee has just authorized a subcommittee to take up an immediate study of our unemployment-compensation system with a view to revision and improvement. Questions such as these very serious ones raised by the Knowland amendment will be part of the business of the subcommittee. It is only in this way that these matters can receive the full deliberation which they deserve. This would represent the orderly legislative process—the only way to secure sound legislation. I therefore earnestly urge our conferees on the social-security bill to oppose this ill-considered Knowland amendment and to await the results of the subcommittee's hearings and deliberations.

WAR AND ECONOMY

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Speaker, since the war in Korea, there has been a tendency on the part of everyone in the Nation to disregard Government spending. The general attitude seems to be: "We cannot talk about money now that there is a war."

I think that attitude overlooks the most important point of all: namely, that we can spend ourselves into disaster if we are not careful. In fact, there is a great deal of evidence to show that our main potential enemy has planned a campaign to force us to do just that.

In the situation in which we find ourselves today, our military and nonmilitary expenditures are closely related. We can spend more for one only if we have been able to save from the other. We must have a generous hand for expenditures relating to the security of the Nation. We must have a miserly hand for all other expenditures.

Since the war in Korea, the tendency has been to disregard anything that has to do with money on the theory of "Let's talk about the war, not economy." Too many people are forgetting that the two go hand in hand. We cannot make every possible effort to achieve security unless we are also making every possible effort to achieve economy. We must save every possible penny on nondefense spending so we may have it to spend for defense.

If we are in doubt about any dollar being spent for defense, we must of course resolve that doubt in favor of defense. But if we are in doubt about any dollar being spent for any nondefense item, we must, of course, resolve that doubt in favor of economy. We must not spend ourselves out of security.

Such a course necessarily means the immediate abandonment of every project—worth while or not—that is not directly related to national defense and security.

In practical application, what does that mean? To illustrate by an example from my own district: I have a bill in calling for a Connecticut Valley Authority—similar to the TVA—if a survey shows it is practical and worth while. Assuming that it might be the most beneficial project in the world for the people in my area, but further assuming that the National Defense Establishment says it has nothing to do with security, then of course such a project must be postponed. I use that illustration merely to point out that I am not just talking about economy in somebody else's district.

Another quick and easy illustration is about every single governmental publication I can think of that is being printed for the people of the Nation. They are good and valuable publications, for the most part—I do not include the nonsensical ones in that observation—but, if the country can get along without any of them during this emergency, printing of them should be stopped for the time being.

If the agencies having them printed do not abandon such projects immediately, this Congress should take steps right now to enact legislation having that effect. We must make a choice right now between bullets and bulletins and determine which is more necessary for the security of the Nation.

There are dozens of other obvious illustrations, of course, but they all boil down to what I think we should adopt as the yardstick for every expenditure at this time: Is it necessary for security? If it is not, it does not measure up at this time and must be postponed.

I again want to call the attention of the people of the Nation to remarks I made on June 29—see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 9513—pointing out that since 1940 the Senate voted to spend over $18,000,000,000 more than the House thought was necessary. The figures I gave show that the Senate has consistently voted to spend about $2,000,000,000 a year more than the House believed was necessary for the identical projects in every year from 1940 to the present time. I think it doubly imperative at this time that the people demand that the Senate, particularly, analyze every expenditure it wishes to make. I hope the people of the Nation will watch all expenditures very closely to make sure that we do not spend ourselves into disaster.

The world situation is going to call for increased expenditures for security for this Nation. It is imperative that we cut down and eliminate the nonessential spending not only for the protection of the taxpayer, but also for the protection of our national security. It will call for the full and complete cooperation of every Congressman and Senator, and also of the people of the Nation.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKINNON] is recognized for 10 minutes.

AMERICA'S REAL OBJECTIVE, WORLD PEACE

Mr. MCKINNON. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio, who preceded me, because I, too, am very much interested in world peace. That is the reason for my taking this time this afternoon.

There are two groups of people in the United States who are supposed to know more than any other groups in this country what the American people want. One of those groups is ourselves, the Members of both of these Houses. We are supposed to know what our constituents want and indeed supposed to keep our jobs at least in part by that knowledge. Yet there seems to be no clear agreement among us as to just what it is that the American people want most. Some of us seem to believe that the American people want tax reduction. Some of us seem to think that the American people want most of all an extension of ECA. Some of us behave as if the American people wanted nothing quite so much as a shiny new post office.

The other group which should know at least as much as we know about what the American people want is the group made up of the editors of the great newspapers in America. As a former publisher myself, I would say that a newspaper editor who does not have a clear sense of what his readers want would find himself without a paper not long after his next edition went to press.

A few months ago, a national magazine, Argosy, published the result of an interesting survey. The editors of Argosy approached the editors of the 51 greatest newspapers in the United States—from the New York Herald Tribune to the Chicago News to the Denver Post to the Washington Star and the Los Angeles Times—and asked each of them a simple question:

> Assume tomorrow's news is such that you could write any headline you want for tomorrow's paper. What would that headline say?

Now, obviously—for the best circulation reasons in the world—the headline that any newspaper editor would most like to run is the headline which would attract and please the most readers. For instance, the editor of the Boston Post, remembering the little episode at Briggs some months ago, picked as his favorite headline "Million-dollar bandits caught." But, strangely enough, that was the only editor who selected even so important a local issue as a million-dollar hold-up. Indeed, 80 percent of all the editors replying were in complete agreement as to what would be the most attractive and important headline they could run. Because editors are individualistic, they found various ways of saying it, but what their headlines added up to was "World peace assured; cold war ended; Russia and United States reach complete agreement for peace." Eighty percent of all the editors representing the greatest newspapers in this country and their millions of readers were expressing their desire for peace—something which the rest of the world does not seem to think we stand for. Many people in Europe and Asia have been led by clever propaganda to believe that peace is the exclusive property of the Communists. We Americans have said "cold war" so often—and have said "peace" so little—that what we really want and what the world thinks we want are very different.

That is why the dream headlines which the editors of Argosy assembled are so significant. They tell the world what Americans really want. They want peace.

But once a newspaper editor has written his favorite headline there is not much that he can do except file it away and hope that some day he will have a chance to run it. That is where we in this Chamber have an opportunity which no editor has. We have the opportunity of writing at least the first word of that headline. We have the opportunity of taking some action in the direction of permanent world security.

The Korean situation has made it especially clear that nothing but a strong international federation, backed by a strong international police force, can give us real security in our homes, our country, and our world.

If the UN had been strengthened before this time, the Communist armies in Korea would never have dared to wage their war of aggression.

The forthright and direct action which President Truman took in the Korean crisis greatly strengthened the prestige and the effectiveness of the UN. The UN stood where the League of Nations stood when Japanese troops crossed into Manchuria. The League failed to meet that test. The UN has not failed to meet the test of Korea.

But we must remember that the Security Council was able to act only because of the fact that Russia had walked out. Had Russian representatives been present, they could have exercised their veto. The effectiveness of the UN cannot safely depend in the future upon such accidents. We must regularize its procedures, we must strengthen its powers, we must make it a body truly capable of preventing aggression, and of eliminating war.

In advocating such a strengthened UN, I do not advocate giving away our national sovereignty. On the contrary, a strong UN would provide us with true security, would add to the sovereign powers of the United States. For in our present anarchic world, this country does not decide when it shall fight—it is forced to fight when aggressors attack—the aggressors decide whether we shall have war or peace. Under a strengthened United Nations we would participate in that decision—it would not be thrust upon us.

I do not advocate a federation which would impinge in any way upon the sovereign powers of the United States. Under the loose federation which I contemplate, every nation would retain its full power and its complete jurisdiction over its territories and its people. The member nations would give up only one thing—the right if I may so call it—of making aggressive war.

I urge all of my colleagues to give the most serious consideration to House Concurrent Resolution 64, which is jointly sponsored by some 111 Members of this House. I believe its passage would be a great first step in the realization of the dream headline which so many of our editors, and so many of our people, hope to see in print in their lifetime.

Another matter that I—as a former newspaper publisher—would like to touch on is the value and contribution of advertising toward world peace.

As we sell a way of government to the world in the form of a strengthened United Nations, we must also sell a way of living.

A coolie in the rice fields of China cares little about who rules his country. He wants the opportunity to raise his rice without interference and to eat it in peace. He might wish for a government that would teach him how to get a bigger yield—if he could conceive of such an idea—he'd like a government that would allow him to keep more of the rice he grows. But I imagine, if we ran a survey like the advertising agencies do in America, that we would find him unconcerned about his right to vote and whether his type of government was communistic or democratic. He is for whatever system that can make life a little more bearable and one which will keep him in the rice fields and out of the army.

In all likelihood, you will find the same thing true in Germany, in the Near East, in Africa, in nearly all the world—yes, even in Russia.

But we cannot expect these people to buy our way of life when the only thing they hear are the malicious lies from our competition in Moscow.

All my business life I have watched advertising, the blood brother to newspapering, achieve miracles. The meticulous details a first-class advertising agency goes to in selling a client's products is amazing. As a small example, they know that families in mild-summered Los Angeles eat 43 percent more cold cereals for breakfast than do the families in heat-suffering New York. Except for corn cereals, that is, and there they know that New York families eat more corn cereals than do the Los Angeles families—by 12 percent. They know that in Cleveland white families buy relatively more synthetic detergents, that colored families buy more bar soap, and that foreign families buy more packaged soaps. They can tell you why and can tip you off that the same facts are not true in New Orleans. They leave no detail to chance in an effective selling job.

How do corn flakes and soap apply to peace and democracy? Only as an indication of how to do an effective job.

Procter & Gamble spends more than $30,000,000 a year to advertise and to influence the soap purchases of this country. They are highly successful. And yet the United States, with more than 500 times the income, spends $34,000,000 for Voice of America. Relatively speaking, we spend only one five-hundredth as much for free enterprise as Procter & Gamble does for soap.

Let me also note that the amount of money we spend is no more important than the way we spend it.

I happen to be one that has deep respect and sympathy for the hard-working members of the State Department. I am convinced of the integrity and ableness of our Secretary of State, Dean Acheson. Yet, I imagine that the sincere Secretary would say that the analogy between business and diplomacy is an oversimplification.

Perhaps so, but I would rather err on the side of using our merchandising ingenuity than in sticking completely to a method that obviously is proving its ineffectiveness.

We have tapped the brain power of our scientists in industry and in colleges to give us atomic weapons. We have used the industrial might of our factories to produce the world's most efficient fighting machine. Both the Atomic Energy Commission and the Defense Establishment have wisely used private initiative.

It is high time that we mobilize the brains of our advertising and merchandising profession to sell the idea of a peaceful world. We cannot be content to use horse-and-buggy methods any longer when our competitor from Moscow is using every selling device he knows to sell an inferior product. And he is alarmingly successful, while we, the land of successful selling, are losing our shirts. Drew Pearson's suggestion some time ago to bomb Russia—not with atoms, but with wrist watches—imposes some of the ingenuity which has made our country successful. There are many ways of doing the unusual to convince the world that they need the peace plans of America.

If it pays to go from door to door to find out about corn flakes in New York and Los Angeles, would not it be smart to adopt some of that ingenuity in selling the idea of peace?

With the biggest idea the world has ever known—peace—and with the largest potential market a product has ever had—2,264,543,771 persons—we must use all the tools that modern advertising and selling employ to get consumer acceptance.

I think it is time that we, the Members of this House, start using our leadership toward perfecting a world organization—such as proposed in House Concurrent Resolution 64—that can prevent aggressive warfare—and toward the full mobilization of the brain power of the advertising profession to sell what America stands for.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNON. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. The gentleman has made a timely statement, and I am happy to have these references made in the House today to the cause of peace. I remember being in the home city of the gentleman from California last November. I attended a meeting with him in which speeches were made in behalf of the cause of peace, and yet it was obvious that the emphasis was upon peace without appeasement, peace with justice under world law. There is no reason in the world why those of us who are fearful of the developments in Korea and who are determined that our country shall be strong if a general war comes should not, nevertheless, at the same time insist that our energies be devoted to saving the peace and perfecting a means for settling international disputes by judicial means.

I am glad that the gentleman referred to House Concurrent Resolution 64. It was my honor to be one of the sponsors, and I share his enthusiasm for it. Whether we call it a federation or a league or an association or organization, or whatever we call it, the fact remains, and I am sure the gentleman would agree with this, that the world's need is an international means for settling disputes on a judicial basis, that is, by the application of the principles of law, and to preventing aggression through united action and not by the action of a single nation, even though it be our own beloved country.

Now, I am wondering if the gentleman would not also agree with me that while some of our hopes are not realized, that is, in the form of legislative declarations, such as House Concurrent Resolution 64, we have within the last month seen events of tremendous historic significance. The Congress has, at least unofficially, approved the President's declarations, and shortly we will enact laws that give our official sanction to the steps he has taken to commit our Nation to multilateral action, to action through the United Nations, to save the peace, to prevent aggressions, and to stabilize world conditions.

I want to commend the gentleman again for what he has said about the purposes of this Nation and about the supreme need of perfecting international tribunals so that they become effective agencies for keeping the peace and preventing aggressors from overrunning the world.

If the gentleman will yield further, I might add another thought.

Mr. McKINNON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. We have sometimes been taunted by the Communists in recent years insisting that we are the war nation, and because we are preparing for war if it should come they have charged that we have abandoned our peace policy. Of course it is absurd, and does not conform to the facts, but at times we have appeared apologetic about the military defense of our liberty and of our moral purposes in the world. We have sometimes failed to claim credit for our peaceful aims and acquaint the world with our policies.

I should like to invoke the words of a great moral leader, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the late William Temple, who was dealing with this very problem as to whether those who want peace nevertheless have to resort to force sometimes. That is not a contradiction, it is a fact. He used this expression, that we cannot renounce force, those of us who love justice and liberty, and we moderns of the West would betray our principles if we did. He said, "We should not renounce force, we should consecrate it." That, it seems to me, is what the peaceful nations, the democratic nations of the West are undertaking to do through the United Nations, to consecrate our force, the material and industrial power we possess. We will commit it for the defense of our independence, the integrity of each nation, as in Korea under the United Nations and the principles upon which western civilization rests.

I have been stirred by the things the gentleman has said. It is an inspiring statement that he has presented to the House. He has done it with his usual skill. He has spoken out of his rich experience as a newspaper man and a student of propaganda measures. The thing we need to demonstrate now to the peoples of other nations, is that as one of the leaders of peace-loving peoples of the world, we propose to stand by them.

Mr. McKINNON. I wish to thank the gentleman from Arkansas for his fine contribution. May I add that when the gentleman from Arkansas was out in San Diego he talked to a number of groups on world peace, the United Nations, and World Federation. He was a great inspiration to many of our people in San Diego. He gave a new thought, a new insight, into how we can achieve peace and what it means to us. I appreciate very much the gentleman's kind comments and also his very helpful spirit and his cooperative attitude since I have been a Member of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JACKSON] is recognized for 10 minutes.

DR. PAUL J. RAVER

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, there is today in the hands of several million Americans the August issue of the Reader's Digest—a pocket-sized magazine which has, in recent years, become extremely influential. In that issue of the Reader's Digest there appears an article, entitled "What Does CVA Mean to You?", written by Mr. Leslie A. Miller, former Governor of Wyoming. While I do not agree with Mr. Miller's views, I will certainly defend his right to state them, as well as the right of the Reader's Digest to print his views.

But I do not defend—on the contrary, I attack—an example of dishonest journalism involved in the printing of this article, and it is to this that I would like to direct the attention of the Members of this House today.

In the article reference is made to one of our foremost Northwest citizens, Dr. Paul J. Raver, Administrator of the Bonneville Power Administration. In the course of expressing opinion as to the effect of the public power development in the Pacific Northwest, the article refers to Dr. Raver as another Socialist. Now this false use of the Socialist label as a scare word is not unusual nor terribly surprising in these days of the smear technique which last week received so much discussion in the Senate.

What is of consequence is that these words were not written by the author, Mr. Miller, but by the editors of the Reader's Digest.

In two telephone conversations with Dr. Raver, Mr. Miller has consistently said he did not write that part of the article, and that those words personally attacking Dr. Raver were inserted by the Reader's Digest. They appear however, not as the editorial opinion of the Reader's Digest, but under the name of Leslie A. Miller.

A story by the Portland Oregonian, dated July 21, 1950, also confirms this and I quote from their story:

> When reached by telephone at his Cheyenne, Wyo., home Thursday night, Miller asserted "I most certainly did write the story but not that part which calls Dr. Raver a Socialist. The editors cut it down and made some revisions."

The Portland paper the next day printed a further story as a result of an interview with the Reader's Digest about this article. The Digest admitted having written the phrase into the story, but defended that action as a common practice and stated that it was intended as a summarizing phrase.

This is indeed a highly arbitrary and capricious treatment of a responsible public official who has devoted a lifetime to the best interests of his country and who is completely respected in the Pacific Northwest.

Mr. Miller is a man of integrity and honesty, with a long and honorable record in public life. He is not a man to use loose terms, or to resort to these methods of character assassination.

Mr. Speaker, one of the great strengths of this country lies in the freedom it has always accorded the press. But with freedom goes responsibility—a responsibility for frankness, openness, and honesty. I submit that the Reader's Digest is guilty of dishonest journalism—for they have misrepresented their own views as the views of an independent author—without his knowledge or consent. In my opinion, they have abused the responsibility that accompanies the freedom which they enjoy.

This is a serious matter—serious to former Governor Miller, a man of fine reputation—serious to Dr. Raver, a man who enjoys the confidence of the entire Northwest—and very serious to the American people. For it is they who really lose when it is discovered that our free press is not free or honest and that it is being used for nefarious purposes.

The line taken in this attack and the methods employed too closely resemble the methods and propagranda of another organization for their similarity to go unnoticed. Some weeks ago the National Association of Electric Light and Power Companies had a national survey performed by Public Opinion Surveys, Inc. The results of that survey are not widely known but I have seen a digest of it which shows that the people of this country strongly and overwhelmingly favor our present policies in the development of Federal and public power. In the same survey it was found that the people do not favor socialism. The conclusion expressed by the private power companies, in the digest they have issued to their membership, is that since the people favor public power development they should not openly oppose it but should instead oppose "socialism" and try to convince the people that public power development is socialism. I quote from their own instructions to their member companies:

> From the preceding charts, it is apparent that to link our fight to the TVA question would run us into a lot of opposition, most of it based on lack of knowledge. But to link our fight to socialism is something else again. The people do not want socialism. We're on favorable ground there. The electric companies' advertising program in magazines and on the radio will stress the fight against the socialistic state more in the future. It should be stressed, too, on the local level—in speeches, radio talks, interviews, and other public expressions of management opinion.

Obviously the electric companies' advertising program is beginning to show results—or maybe it is just their slip showing in the instant case. In any event we can expect to see more of this sort of smear as this huge, well financed and not too subtle propaganda campaign gets under way. Let us hope that no other of our great national publications or our newspapers attempt by such crude and obvious methods to dupe an intelligent public—for upon the faith of that public in their editorial honesty rests the very foundations of our free American press.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I had intended to ask for a special order today to discuss this particular subject, but I would like to make a few remarks at this time, if I may.

I am indeed glad that my colleague from Washington has brought out into the open the vicious attack on a responsible public official and has indicated the irresponsible nature of its source. I too have read the article in the Reader's Digest of August to which he has referred and find in it some striking errors of fact as well as the smear to which Mr. JACKSON refers. I know that one statement particularly referring to Dr. Raver "He has refused to let private companies have long-term contracts for any part of the power produced by Bonneville Dams," is false. I presume that this statement intends to refer to the power under the jurisdiction of the Bonneville Power Administration. I can from my own direct knowledge refute this statement. The Bonneville Power Administration will sell the power generated at Hungry Horse dam in Montana on a tributary of the Columbia River; that power will be available in 1952. Dr. Raver has already made a long-term 5-year contract with the Montana Power Co. for a substantial block of power from this project. The officials of the Montana Power Co. have indicated to me their complete satisfaction with this contract. Incidentally, this is the first contract signed for power from this project. Dr. Raver has told me that he hopes that this can become a pattern for future contracts with other private utilities in the Northwest, as additional supplies of power from dams under construction become available. I have no idea of the source for the kind of statement which Governor Miller has supposedly made, but on the face of it, it is erroneous and misleading. I also know that Dr. Raver has made unceasing attempts to reach agreements with other power companies in the Northwest; thus far these companies have not agreed to terms and conditions which would permit him to carry out the terms of the statutes under which the agency is operated. However, these problems have been no barrier to the companies obtaining power from the Bonneville system during the past fiscal year as well as during preceding years. They have received 28 percent of Bonneville's entire output—more than the public agencies have received. Certainly these facts do not indicate that the Administrator is discriminating against private power companies as is implied by this article.

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. I wish to thank the gentleman for his comment in connection with the remarks I have made.

Those of us who have had an opportunity to work with Dr. Raver on the many problems in the Pacific Northwest are aware of his fine character, his honesty, and his devotion to the public interest. I happen to serve on the Subcommittee on Appropriations where Dr. Raver appears every year on the appropriations for the Department of the Interior, Bonneville Power Administration. I know that he has made a very fine impression on our committee. I am sure that view is shared by other Members of this body who are familiar with his outstanding record. I might add that the newspapers of the Pacific Northwest, conservative to the extent of 99 percent, by and large have a very high regard for Dr. Raver.

Mr. MANSFIELD. If the gentleman will yield further, I think that statement could also go for the delegations from the Northwestern States, regardless of whether they are Democrats or Republicans. I think it should be said in Dr. Raver's favor that he has had a life of real public service; that he is a Purple Heart veteran of the First World War, in which he served in the artillery, and that he has done everything within his power to carry out the act which he has sworn to uphold and which this Congress by a majority of both Houses passed in the late thirties.

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

BUREAUCRATIC BUNGLING IN FOOD

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes, to revise and extend my remarks, and to include certain excerpts and statements, also certain tabulations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, at long last Secretary of Agriculture Brannan has admitted in a statement today before the House Committee on Agriculture that the problem of disposing of surplus foods is increasingly serious. He recommends to the committee that authority be given the department at once "to donate surplus commodities, through the direct distribution type of programs, to needy persons both in this country and abroad" and that this legislation provide for the payment of transportation costs and authority to repackage the commodities.

In his statement he asserts that last April he suggested this legislation. It is encouraging that he now is forced to face up to this problem. However, in view of the intimation in his statement that he foresaw these difficulties and recommended a solution to Congress in April, I think it is important that the record be made accurate. This is even more necessary because of the power he wishes to be given to the department at this late date.

The truth as to the gigantic hoardings of food commodities at completely indefensible waste of the taxpayers' money was well known to the American public last January.

On February 1, Secretary Brannan appeared before the Senate Agriculture Committee to discuss the disposition of 50,000,000 bushels of surplus edible potatoes. During that meeting, former Secretary of Agriculture, and now the junior Senator from New Mexico, made the statement that the 1949 act gave the Secretary discretion to make the surplus commodities available to school-lunch programs, the Bureau of Indian Affairs and to welfare and charitable institutions. This statement was borne out by the interpretation of the law expressed by the Associate Solicitor of the Department, Mr. Edward M. Schulman, before the Senate committee.

However, because the Secretary expressed some doubt as to his authority, on February 2 companion bills were filed in the House by the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CORBETT], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR.] and myself, which made that distribution mandatory upon the Secretary and broadened existing authority. It also provided for payment of handling and transportation costs up to the equivalent of 6 months' storage costs. These bills were H. R. 7135, H. R. 7136, H. R. 7137, and H. R. 7138.

At the same time 24 Republican Members of the House issued a joint statement bearing definitely upon the serious nature of the problem and urging the enactment of this legislation. That statement read, as follows:

> In the 4½ years that have passed since the Japanese surrender, the United States has generously helped our friends and former enemies in all quarters of the world. The hungry were fed, the war damage repaired and financial assistance given to strengthen their economies. This country can be proud of the results obtained through our unselfish efforts.
> As expected, the need and demand for assistance has materially eased. This is particularly true of food. American food exports have declined sharply with the result that we have accumulated in a short period of time large surpluses of food, now valued at over $2,000,000,000. The Secretary of Agriculture has announced acreage allotments for this year on our major crops that will reduce their acreage by approximately 30,000,000 acres. Further slashes may be expected in 1951 unless prompt steps are taken to move the accumulating food surpluses.
> It is time that we should give thought and consideration to our own problems and the problems of our own people. We are, therefore, sponsoring a bill to make available to our own deserving people the surplus food owned by the Commodity Credit Corporation. This was clearly the intent of Congress when at the last session the Agricultural Act of 1949 was passed. Legalistic interpretations and regulations have succeeded in almost completely nullifying this congressional directive and making necessary this clarifying bill.
> The legislation we propose will authorize the Secretary of Agriculture and the Commodity Credit Corporation to make surplus food commodities available to Federal, State, and local welfare agencies, private welfare agencies, and the school-lunch program. To expedite the program of assistance, the Secretary of Agriculture would be authorized to advance up to 6 months' storage costs to apply against handling and transportation costs.
> It is the intention of the sponsors of this legislation that it be considered entirely non-political. It is believed to be in keeping with the best American traditions to help one's own and those deserving and in need of help.

According to the latest figures, there are 2,715,751 persons receiving old-age pensions, 1,486,404 receiving dependents and children benefits, 92,000 blind receiving help, and 543,000 on State and local relief rolls.

The Commodity Credit Corporation on December 31, 1949, had in inventory over 23,000,000 pounds of cheese, over 215,000,000 pounds of dried milk, nearly 50,000,000 pounds of prunes, 23,000,000 pounds of raisins, over 9,000,000 hundredweight of dried beans, 1,600,000 hundredweight of rice, over 70,000,000 pounds of dried eggs, 725,000 pounds of turkeys, and is committed to buy over 50,000,000 bushels of potatoes.

Why not bring these two sets of statistics together, for they are more than statistics? They are people and food. Better to get the food to the deserving people than to pay storage, and ultimately hire more people to destroy the food.

HUGH D. SCOTT, Jr., Pennsylvania; JOHN PHILLIPS, California; JESSE P. WOLCOTT, Michigan; RICHARD M. NIXON, California; HARDIE SCOTT, Pennsylvania; WILLIAM L. PFEIFFER, New York; JOHN W. HESELTON, Massachusetts; KENNETH B. KEATING, New York; J. GLENN BEALL, Maryland; DONALD JACKSON, California; ROBERT J. CORBETT, Pennsylvania; EDWIN ARTHUR HALL, New York; R. WALTER RIEHLMAN, New York; THOMAS A. JENKINS, Ohio; ALBERT M. COLE, Kansas; HENRY O. TALLE, Iowa; ANTONI N. SADLAK, Connecticut; HENRY J. LATHAM, New York; WILLIAM S. HILL, Colorado; CHARLES B. HOEVEN, Iowa; AUGUST H. ANDRESEN, Minnesota; PAUL B. DAGUE, Pennsylvania; GERALD R. FORD, Jr., Michigan; HAROLD O. LOVRE, South Dakota.

From that date until March 22, I repeatedly and almost daily brought these proposals and the developing facts to the attention of the President and the Department, but with no results, except a reported statement by the President at a press conference that he was filing all such communications in the round file under his desk.

I also repeatedly urged the Secretary to see that favorable reports on these bills be filed immediately.

On March 17, the House Committee on Agriculture issued notices of a full committee hearing on March 22 for the consideration of these bills and others dealing with the same subject.

On March 21, Secretary Brannan sent a letter to the chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture. I want the full text of that letter to be in the RECORD, but first I want to emphasize the following sentence: "We do not believe, however, that it would be administratively feasible for this Department or the States to operate the program under the cost provisions proposed under H. R. 7135." I urge that you read particularly the full paragraph, raising then the enormous objections to the proposal which now has, in effect, the full endorsement of the Secretary. The letter follows:

MARCH 21, 1950.

Hon. HAROLD D. COOLEY,
House Committee on Agriculture,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. COOLEY: This is in reply to your request for a report on the following bills to amend the Agricultural Act of 1949 with respect to authority to dispose of surplus foods through donations: H. R. 7125, H. R. 7135, H. R. 7139, and H. R. 7327.

H. R. 7125 would authorize the Department to operate a stamp plan to "facilitate the disposal of accumulated surplus commodities under the support program." The stamp plan for disposition of Government-owned surplus foods to domestic recipients would appear to be a more cumbersome and more costly method of disposing of surpluses of price-support commodities than the present program of direct distribution. The former food stamp plan, operated by the Department from 1939 to 1943, did not attempt to dispose of surpluses already acquired by the Government; its purpose was to prevent the accumulation of surpluses by increasing the food purchases of low-income groups out of regular market supplies.

The other bills seek to increase the volume of surplus commodities that may be disposed of through donations to needy groups by authorizing the Federal Government to pay some part of the handling and transportation costs now borne by recipient agencies. H. R. 7135 would authorize the donation of those foods of which the Commodity Credit Corporation has excess supplies to groups now eligible under section 416, with the Federal Government advancing funds for the payment of handling and transportation costs, up to an amount equivalent to 6 months' storage costs. H. R. 7139 would permit the Department to pay transportation costs incurred in the delivery of potatoes to local administrative officers or private welfare agencies in areas affected by industrial work stoppages for distribution to needy groups. H. R. 7327 would authorize the Department to pay delivery costs on surpluses not disposed of under section 416 when offered to any officer or agency, public or private, to relieve hardships caused by unemployment within the United States.

With respect to both H. R. 7139 and H. R. 7327, we believe that any legislation concerning donations to needy families should clearly direct the Department to work in cooperation with public and private welfare agencies for the assistance of needy persons. These are the agencies in the best position to determine the need of applicant families. At the same time it will tend to prevent duplicate distribution that would inevitably occur if several agencies were authorized to act as agents for the needy in any one city or local area.

The payment by the Federal Government of transportation costs to a central receiving point within the various States would undoubtedly tend to increase the volume of surplus food moving to eligible groups, particularly to schools and institutions. The extent to which distribution to welfare groups would increase would depend, in large part, upon the facilities available within the various States to make food deliveries to a larger number of welfare families. State-wide distribution on a family basis requires more elaborate delivery facilities than does distribution to schools and institutions where wholesale packaging can be used and deliveries made on a monthly or bimonthly basis.

We do not believe, however, that it would be administratively feasible for this Department or the State to operate the program under the cost provisions proposed in H. R. 7135. The portion of the costs to be borne by various recipients would be subject to so much variation—depending upon the commodity involved, its place of storage, and the distance of the various recipients from the points of storage—that a much more complicated order and delivery procedure would be needed. It would be particularly difficult to develop a satisfactory system for the payment of railroad or trucking-company charges when the Government would be responsible for varying portions of the costs of each shipment. We feel certain that any such system of apportioning costs between the Federal Government and recipients would tend to impede rather than to facilitate program operations.

If the cost provisions of section 416 are to be amended, we would recommend that the Federal Government be given authority to pay the cost of transporting, to central receiving points within the States, all commodities offered eligible domestic recipients.

The Bureau of the Budget advises as follows: "* * * While the objectives of the legislation appear to be meritorious, the deficiencies in the bills, which are delineated in your reports, are so serious that we believe none of the bills would be acceptable to the President unless amended along lines suggested by you. Further, section 2 of H. R. 7125 presents questions of policy which are now under study and concerning which no commitment can be made at this time. You are therefore advised that enactment of this bill would not be in accord with the program of the President at the present time."

Sincerely,

CHARLES F. BRANNAN,
Secretary.

It is through this letter, filed nearly 7 weeks after the bills were filed, that the Secretary now wishes it to be understood that he recommended action. Certainly, I did not understand, and I do not see how anyone could expect the members of the committee to understand, that the Secretary was as seriously concerned as he now asserts he is and was urging Congress to take prompt and affirmative action.

In any event, in the period of 18 weeks since that time, there has been precious little evidence that anyone in the Department of Agriculture or in the executive department has been particularly concerned about this problem, or has done anything constructive toward its solution. I do have letters from the Department in the last few weeks reporting generally upon the program of distribution, but there is absolutely nothing in this correspondence which led me to believe that the Department was at all concerned about having additional means of disposing of these food commodities before they spoiled or were destroyed.

Perhaps the key to this current expression of concern lies in the amazing developments of the last few weeks.

The latest official report of the Commodity Credit Corporation covers the fiscal year up to May 31, 1950. The figures showing the increases in four of these commodities alone for the month of May are revealing. The following tabulation shows the ending inventories in pounds on April 30, 1949, April 30, 1950, May 31, 1949, and May 31, 1950:

	Apr. 30, 1949	Apr. 30, 1950	May 31, 1949	May 31, 1950
Butter	702,381	98,695,046	2,427,928	117,497,963
Dried eggs	45,983,259	88,444,915	56,581,257	87,891,563
Dried milk	None	315,913,638	21,652,464	311,065,022
Cheese	None	21,352,133	None	29,475,919

The following tabulation showing the increase in holding during the month of May is significant.

Increase in inventory, month of May 1950

	Pounds
Butter	22,377,266
Dried eggs	12,909,978
Dried milk	51,292,060
Cheese	10,698,223

I have repeatedly tried to get current information as to the situation at the end of the fiscal year on June 30, 1950, but until the Secretary's statement this morning I had received only an informal report indicating that there was now in storage some 180,000,000 pounds of butter. The Secretary states that the present holdings in butter are 192,000,000 pounds. Consequently, more than 74,000,000 pounds of butter must have been purchased between May 31 and July 17, the date given by the Secretary.

The figures given by the Secretary show that on July 17 there were in storage 107,000,000 pounds of dried eggs. This means that there was a purchase between May 31 and July 17 of over 19,000,000 pounds.

The figures given by the Secretary show that on July 17 there were in storage 322,000,000 pounds of dried milk. This means that there were purchased between May 31 and July 17, over 11,000,000 pounds.

The figures given by the Secretary show that on July 17 there were in storage 80,000,000 pounds of cheese. This means that there were purchased between May 31 and July 17, over 50,000,000 pounds.

That is not all, because the Secretary stated that the Federal Government is currently accumulating more butter, at the average rate of about 9,000,000 pounds per week, which means probably about 50,000,000 pounds a month; more dried milk, at the rate of approximately 45,000,000 pounds per month; more cheese, at the rate of 23,000,00 pounds per month; and more dried eggs, at the rate of about 15,000,000 pounds per month.

During the hearing this morning the question was raised as to why the Department had not, through its numerous personnel, worked out some constructive solution to this problem long before now. The Secretary defended the Department by insisting that its technical and scientific personnel were doing a remarkable piece of work in the unusual phases of the research and marketing activities. This still leaves the question open for a department which, in the last fiscal year, had an appropriation of $2,671,000,000 and a full-time staff of 59,556 employees and 12,274 part-time employees, or a total, exclusive of the State and county committeemen, of 71,830 employees. Here, and also to make the record clear, I wish to quote from a letter addressed to the Secretary, dated March 11, 1950, and signed by 32 of our colleagues who have the responsibility of representing the largest part of the agricultural area of this country.

Members of Congress are elected to enact laws which members of the executive department, including you as Secretary of Agriculture, are supposed to administer. A Member of Congress does well to have an average of three people employed in his office. A Member of Congress naturally has many sources of information, but the staff of the entire Congress is no more than a fraction of the staff that you have at your disposal.

Naturally there should be close cooperation between the executive and legislative branches of our Government, but under the policy of passing the buck to Congress which you are following, the line between cooperation and "buck-passing" is becoming far too thin in Government today.

Another significant portion of the statement made by the Secretary to the House Committee on Agriculture is as follows:

Potatoes are also being supported under a mandatory provision of the law. They are now supported at approximately $1.01 per bushel. Not much difficulty was experienced with the early 1950 crop, but we have recently been purchasing potatoes at the rate of 150,000 to 200,000 bushels per day from farmers in North Carolina and Virginia who are unable to dispose of their production in the normal channels of trade.

The next foreseeable area of appreciable purchase will be in New Jersey, and then, of course, the Maine crop later in the marketing year. Purchase may also be expected in other States, such as Idaho, Oregon, and Washington. There is a good deal of reason to believe that the price-support operation for potatoes may cost the Commodity Credit Corporation as much as $75,000,000 for the 1950 crop.

It is possible that this development, particularly in terms of reports and large-scale dumping in the mid-South, is a reason for this sudden interest in the seriousness of this problem.

Again the Secretary points out that this disposal program, although it included approximately 8,000,000 school children, 1,000,000 inmates of institutions, and about 1,000,000 welfare recipients, has not been able to reach several scores of millions who are just as much in need of food commodities but who are unable to obtain them because of the cost factor. I have pointed out repeatedly to the President and to the Secretary, the unfairness of any such program, and I am glad that the Secretary has at this late date recognized that principle.

I want to call particular attention to the fact that at the outset of his statement this morning, the Secretary said:

Increasing uncertainties brought on by the Korean situation have changed the appraisal somewhat with regard to our reserves of storable crops. Our substantial holdings of wheat and corn and cotton—always sound assets—are now more clearly than ever an important factor in our national strength.

With regard to some of the heavy inventories of perishables, however, fundamental disposal problems have not been changed materially. In fact, the world situation makes it all the more important that these food supplies be used for human consumption to the fullest extent possible. The growing defense effort may open outlets for some of these stocks, especially those in more concentrated form. But on the basis of the best information currently available, and under our present authorizations, we will still have to dispose of millions of bushels of potatoes on the farms where they are produced, for livestock feed or fertilizer. We will still have extreme difficulty in finding outlets for surplus butter, and then only at appreciable financial loss. The problem of immediate concern to us today is the efficient disposal of these perishable holdings.

One point was not mentioned by the Secretary in his statement this morning. I am sure we can all understand his reluctance to discuss it. I refer to the tremendous amount involved in storage charges on these commodities during all these weeks.

I brought this particular point to the attention of the President and to the Secretary's attention early in February. I confined my report to accumulating storage charges on 16 food commodities which could and would be eaten by people who need them but who cannot afford them. I have in my file copies of many messages on this point. The last letter I sent to the President is as follows:

JUNE 17, 1950.

THE PRESIDENT,
The White House,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: For over 3 months I called your attention repeatedly to the tragic, inexcusable waste of the taxpayers' money through paying carrying charges on 16 surplus food commodities. I urged that these funds could be spent much more wisely for transporting these foods to people who could and would eat them but could not afford to buy them. I stated that this waste was continuing at an estimated rate of at least $60,000 daily.

The report of the Commodity Credit Corporation of April 30 shows that this estimate of daily waste was too low. Actually, the total amount spent for this purpose for the first 10 months of the current fiscal year was $24,760,056.10. This was at the rate of $81,447.55 a day. There is no possible reason for continued failure to take immediate, constructive action to remedy this condition. Will you please order such action at once?

Respectfully yours,

JOHN W. HESELTON.

If the daily rate continued from June 17 in the amount of $81,447.55, and surely in terms of the terrific increases in purchases between May 31 and July 17 it must have been substantially more, then at least $27,773,615.45 has been expended for this purpose. That would have paid for the transporting of practically all these foods and obviously the daily waste of the taxpayers' money would have ended. I wonder if some of our Federal officials really think that the American public will not or cannot understand such facts.

When we consider the following tabulation as to the amazing increase in carrying charges in the month of May, it can be easily imagined that the report on the increases between May 31 and July 17 will be shocking in the extreme. It is possible that this last minute realization of the impact of these figures upon the American taxpaying public is the most significant single reason for the Secretary's statement and recommendation of this morning.

Carrying charges

	Apr. 30, 1950	May 31, 1950	Increase in May 1950
Dried milk	$2,998,955.85	$3,622,697.65	$623,741.80
Butter	1,474,284.30	1,739,132.78	264,848.48
Dried eggs	1,885,889.13	2,210,758.57	324,869.44
Cheese	311,653.44	363,150.25	51,496.81
Total	6,670,782.72	7,935,739.25	1,264,956.53

Therefore, we have this problem before us in a form which some of us clearly anticipated over 4½ months ago. On two occasions in the House efforts to provide solutions along these lines have been rejected. It is late, but not too late. It is unfortunate that the Congress has not had the full cooperation of the Executive Department in trying to prevent these developments. But that will not relieve Congress of its individual responsibility to legislate promptly, now that the Secretary has admitted the seriousness of the situation and has conceded that the solutions suggested months ago are in fact both sound and imperative, even though he ignored them during all these weeks while he was permitting millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money to be wasted in unnecessary and indefensible storage charges.

I believe that all Members should have available the full text of the Secretary's statement and I am including it at this point.

STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE CHARLES F. BRANNAN BEFORE THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE, MONDAY, JULY 24, 1950

As indicated in a letter which I addressed to the chairman of your committee on June 29, I have been seriously concerned about mounting Commodity Credit Corporation inventories of dairy products and eggs and about continuing price-support trouble with potatoes. Current high levels of supply and production are among the best guaranties against food price inflation, but the Corporation is nevertheless confronted with serious disposal problems for these perishable commodities.

Increasing uncertainties brought on by the Korean situation have changed the appraisal somewhat with regard to our reserves of storable crops. Our substantial holdings of wheat and corn and cotton—always sound assets—are now more clearly than ever an important factor in our national strength.

With regard to some of the heavy inventories of perishables, however, fundamental disposal problems have not been changed materially. In fact, the world situation makes it all the more important that these food supplies be used for human consumption to the fullest extent possible. The growing defense effort may open outlets for some of these stocks, especially those in more concentrated form. But on the basis of the best information currently available, and under our present authorization, we will still have to dispose of millions of bushels of potatoes on the farms where they are produced, for livestock feed or fertilizer. We will still have extreme difficulty in finding outlets for surplus butter, and then only at appreciable financial loss. The problem of immediate concern to us today is the efficient disposal of these perishable holdings.

I am discussing these problems with you again today as part of my obligation to keep the Congress fully advised of important developments in the agricultural area. I am not submitting this current information as an argument in favor of the recommendations for handling price-support programs which we submitted to the Congress in April of last year. You will recall that those proposals were designed to prevent the accumulation of excessive food stocks in the hands of the Government and to direct the movement and distribution of maximum quantities of food through the normal channels of trade. Today we are faced with the fact that heavy surplus stocks are on hand. The problem now is how to utilize them most efficiently.

In order to get a better perspective on the whole price-support question, I think it advisable to summarize briefly the situation with regard to some of the more important storable commodities before going into more detail about acute disposal problems for the perishable groups.

This country has about 450,000,000 bushels of wheat from last year's crop in our reserves as the 1950 crop comes to harvest. Present estimates are that about 950,000,000 bushels of wheat will be produced this year, in spite of a good deal of adverse weather and insect damage. This gives us a total supply of around 1,400,000,000 bushels of wheat for the marketing year ahead. This is a strong position, with an abundant supply to meet domestic needs, exports, and carry-over reserves next year.

Corn is our most important feed grain. Maintenance of high-level livestock production depends largely on this crop. There is therefore a good deal of satisfaction in knowing that the carry-over of old-crop corn this fall is expected to be well over 900,000,000 bushels. Preliminary estimates for 1950 production have been placed at about 3,175,000,000 bushels. This would give us a total supply of more than 4,000,000,000 bushels for the 1950–51 year. It should make it possible for us to continue, or even expand, our very important production of livestock products.

Cotton stocks on August 1 are expected to total about 7,000,000 bales, the largest carry-over stocks since 1946. Acreage this year is around 19,000,000. Assuming the average yields of recent years, the 1950 crop would be somewhere between ten and eleven million bales. Total supply for the year ahead—carry-over plus this year's production—will probably be between seventeen and eighteen million bales. Assuming normal domestic consumption and generous exports, we will have a carry-over of between three and five million bales at the end of the next marketing year.

The substantial reserves of these major food and fiber crops are reassuring. They have been built up under the loan provisions of the price-support program. As of July 17, Commodity Credit Corporation inventories of these crops—as part of the total reserve supplies—were as follows: Wheat, 325,000,000 bushels; corn, 315,000,000 bushels; cotton, 3,300,000 bales. These inventory totals do not, of course, include stocks of these three crops which are held by CCC as security against price-support loans, but to which farmers still hold title.

In addition to the inventories of these three basic crops, CCC also holds substantial stocks of a number of other storable commodities. These include feed grains, rice, dried beans, linseed oil, and several others. These holdings are also valuable assets and, in general, they do not involve special disposal problems.

We find our serious current problems in the perishable group to which I have already referred. Dairy products are of first concern. As you know, milk and butterfat have mandatory price support at a level ranging from 75 to 90 percent of parity. The law further requires that these commodities be supported by loans on, or purchases of, dairy products. In carrying out the law, cheese, butter, and dry milk are being purchased at prices reflecting approximately 79 percent of the parity equivalent for manufacturing milk and approximately 86 percent of the parity for butterfat. The specific purchase prices for the commodities are:

	Cents per pound
Cheddar cheese, U. S. Grade A or higher	31
Butter:
U. S. Grade A or higher	60
U. S. Grade B	58
Nonfat dry milk solids, U. S. extra:
Spray type	12½
Roller type	10½
Evaporated milk—per case	$3.95

Whenever the volume of supply depresses the market price below the support-price level, the commodities are purchased and withdrawn from the market. At the present time, the Commodity Credit Corporation owns approximately 192,000,000 pounds of butter and is currently accumulating more at the average rate of about 9,000,000 pounds per week. There is also in inventory 322,000,000 pounds of dried milk. Dried milk is now being accumulated by the Corporation at the rate of approximately 45,000,000 pounds per month. The stocks of cheese on hand amount to approximately 80,000,000 pounds, and they have recently been accumulated at the rate of 23,000,000 pounds per month.

In endeavoring to dispose of these dairy commodities, full utilization has been made of school lunch and institutional feeding outlets. Also, some butter and cheese have been sold back into normal channels of trade. Domestic sales must be handled with great care, of course, to avoid interfering with normal marketing of these products or adversely affecting the price structure.

The world market price for butter at the present time is approximately 32 cents. Therefore, a discount of more than 50 percent of the Government's investment would be required to accomplish foreign sales. Moreover, implications of "dumping" on the world market, as a violation of our foreign trade policy and commitments, must be considered carefully. Even if we ignored the question of dumping and attempted to sell our butter in the world market at a 50-percent reduction, it is not likely that we could move much butter. The limiting factor is the availability of American dollars with which to make purchases of this type of commodity.

Some limited sales of dry milk for foreign relief uses have been made. In addition, all of these dairy products are being offered free at the point of storage to welfare organizations for relief distribution domestically and in foreign countries, in accordance with legislative provisions.

We are also concerned about eggs. The Commodity Credit Corporation's current inventory is about 107,000,000 pounds of dried eggs. Each pound of dried eggs represents approximately 3 dozen eggs in shell form. There are therefore now in the Corporation's possession about 321,000,000 dozens of shell eggs in dried form. The Corporation is paying 96 cents per pound for these dried eggs, and they have been accumulating at the rate of about 15,000,000 pounds per month.

The price-support program for eggs is not mandatory under present legislation. However, it seems to me that sound egg-price support is in the interest of the general economy, as well as in the interest of the producers of poultry and eggs and the producers of feed grain. The need is to find a feasible mechanism for handling support and disposal operations.

Dried eggs have a limited use. A diligent effort has been made to sell them in the world market and to supply them for domestic consumption. Dried eggs have been made available to welfare organizations free of charge at the point of storage for domestic and foreign relief distribution. Here, again, the potential foreign outlets are very materially limited by the availability of American dollars.

I want to emphasize a point which I mentioned at the start of this statement. These holdings have been built up under price-support operations, and they represent serious disposal problems for the Commodity Credit Corporation. At the same time, however, it is recognized that price supports have been largely responsible for the current high production levels for these crops. And these production and supply levels are a very positive factor in holding down food-price inflation.

Potatoes are also being supported under a mandatory provision of the law. They are now supported at approximately $1.01 per bushel. Not much difficulty was experienced with the early 1950 crop, but we have recently been purchasing potatoes at the rate of one hundred and fifty to two hundred thousand bushels per day from farmers in North Carolina and Virginia who are unable to dispose of their production in the normal channels of trade.

The next foreseeable area of appreciable purchase will be in New Jersey, and then, of course, the Maine crop later in the marketing year. Purchase may also be expected in other States, such as Idaho, Oregon, and Washington. There is a good deal of reason to believe that the price-support operation for potaoes may cost the Commodity Credit Corporation as much as $75,000,000 for the 1950 crop.

At the present time, no funds are being used to move these potatoes into nonhuman uses, and disposal charges have been reduced to a minimum. Very careful attention has been given to the provisions of section 416 of the Agricultural Act of 1949, and the potatoes are being offered to all takers at the country shipping point. After supplying institutions, welfare organizations, school lunch and all other practicable diversion outlets, the remainder is then sold back to farmers for livestock feed or fertilizer at 1 cent per hundredweight.

I want to make it clear that every effort has been made to move these surplus holdings, using all of the programs and authorizations which are available to us.

In the first place, we try to hold down our price-support purchases by encouraging the fullest possible distribution through normal channels of trade. One specific operation is known as the plentiful-foods program, under which we take steps to increase the consumption of surplus commodities. This program is carried out in full cooperation with the food industry. Merchandising support is put behind a number of foods which are selected by the Production and Marketing Administration each month on the basis of the abundance of supply. We also take steps to encourage exports in normal trade channels, through subsidies, and to divert commodities into other than normal uses. These activities are financed principally with our so-called section 32 funds, with first priority going to diversion for human consumption.

In spite of these efforts to increase sales and diversion before direct price support becomes necessary, the Commodity Credit Corporation must take over substantial commodity stocks in carrying out price support obligations. Several authorities and programs are available to facilitate disposal of these inventory stocks. CCC holdings are sold whenever possible, if this can be done without interfering with price-support objectives. To encourage sales through normal trade channels, we announce each month price lists of commodities which will be available for both domestic and export sale, with full information on price, quality, and quantity of the commodities which are available.

The Commodity Credit Corporation is authorized to exchange agricultural commodities for strategic and critical materials produced abroad. The Corporation is also authorized to make commodities available to the Munitions Board and other Federal agencies for use in making payments for commodities not produced in the United States. Under present conditions, there are major limitations on the opportunities to dispose of surplus commodities under these authorities, and very few transactions have been completed.

The most important single program for moving perishable commodities out of inventory is known as the direct-distribution program. In this operation commodities are distributed through school lunch and similar outlets. In previous years distribution through these channels was financed largely by section 32 funds. Beginning in January 1950 the bulk of this type of distribution has been handled under section 416 of the Agricultural Act of 1949. Section 416 authorizes the donation of surplus holdings, on a priority basis, to school-lunch programs, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, public and private domestic welfare agencies, and private welfare agencies for the relief of needy persons abroad.

Donations under the authority of section 416 are made available at storage points without charge. However, with one exception, the recipients must assume all transportation costs from these storage points. The exception, approved by Congress last spring, authorized CCC to pay transportation on 1949-crop potato donations.

The fact that CCC cannot pay transportation costs under section 416 has had a limiting effect upon the total distribution of surplus commodities for welfare use.

A brief review of the quantities of dairy products and eggs which have been distributed since major price support operations were started for these commodities will indicate the extent to which we have been successful in moving our surplus holdings. It will at the same time throw light on the extremely difficult nature of the disposal problems.

Dried egg price support purchases were started in April 1947. Through July 17 of this year, CCC had brought 208,000,000 pounds in carrying out price support obligations. During this entire period, 101,000,000 pounds have been disposed of through the various sale and distribution channels, leaving 107,000,000 pounds in the present inventory.

First purchases of butter under the price support program were made in February 1949. Since then, through July 17 of this year, 228 million pounds have been bought by CCC. Total disposition of holdings during this same period has reached about 36 million pounds, leaving the present inventory of 192 million pounds.

Dried milk purchases for price support began in March 1949. Since then 609 million pounds have been bought by the Corporation. During this same period, up to July 17, 287 million pounds have been distributed, leaving 322 million pounds in the present inventory.

Cheese price support purchases were started in July 1949. From then until July 17 of this year, CCC bought a total of 94 million pounds. During the same period, 14 million pounds have been moved, leaving the current 80-million-pound inventory.

While these distribution totals are substantial, the fact that CCC inventories of the commodities involved have increased steadily shows definitely that the presently available outlets are not adequate. As I have mentioned before, our men have worked steadily and aggressively in an effort to develop and utilize every opportunity to move these surplus commodities out of inventory, within the limits of practicability and our authority.

The problem before us is how to distribute holdings or perishable commodities with greater speed and in larger volume, in order to avoid the deterioration and loss that would eventually be certain if we tried to hold stocks too long. None of these commodities has been allowed to spoil as yet, and there is no immediate threat of spoilage. The problem, however becomes increasingly serious.

Because of the importance of this outlet the record of what we have been able to distribute through domestic donation in recent months is important. Since last January, when section 416 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 became effective for domestic donation, the following quantities have been ordered by and shipped to recipients under this authority. Approximately 9,500,000 pounds of butter, 5,000,000 pounds of cheese, 2,200,000 pounds of dried eggs, and 5,000,000 pounds of dried milk. This rate of distribution is far too low to provide the solution for our inventory problems.

Under the present authorities for distribution of surplus commodities we have reached during the past year approximately 8,000,000 school children, 1,000,000 inmates of institutions, and about 1,000,000 welfare clients. It is obvious that we are not getting surplus foods to anywhere near all of the relief or public assistance people who could use it to advantage, or to half of our school children. There are opportunities for expanded distribution and use of surplus holdings in this general field of direct distribution. Our food-distribution specialists estimate that the rate of distribution to schools, institutions, and welfare groups could be stepped up by many millions of pounds of butter, cheese, dried milk, and dried eggs if the Commodity Credit Corporation were granted the necessary authority.

There are a number of reasons why we are not reaching more of the people in these groups who are eligible to receive commodities under section 416. As I have already pointed out, the fact that we cannot pay transportation costs is a definite limitation. Further, our surplus holdings are in bulk units which make it very difficult, if not impossible, for school-lunch or welfare recipients to use them without repackaging. The CCC inventory of butter is in 60- to 64-pound cubes; the cheese is in 70- to 75-pound wheels; the dried eggs and dried milk are packaged principally in barrels of 175 to 200 pounds. This is the efficient and practical way to buy these commodities in carrying out price support, but it requires additional operations in preparation for welfare distribution.

State and local agencies in general do not have the funds and facilities, or are not willing to provide the funds and facilities needed to meet transportation, repackaging, and distribution costs. They must have some way of getting the supplies with freight charges and other special handling costs taken care of, if there is to be a material increase in the use of surplus foods by these groups.

We have continued to give a good deal of study to the possibility of using some sort of "food stamp" or "food allotment" program to meet some of our price-support problems. Programs of this type, however, are designed to move greater volumes through normal channels of trade. They would not serve to move commodities out of the Government inventories directly. Programs of this type were developed for use in a period of heavy unemployment. Such a situation does not exist today. Further, as I pointed out a year ago last April when discussing general price-support proposals, such a program might be administratively expensive and difficult.

Last April, at the request of this committee, I suggested legislation which would broaden the authority of the Department to donate surplus commodities, through the direct distribution type of programs, to needy persons both in this country and abroad. The suggested legislation would make it possible for the Corporation to pay transportation costs on the surplus commodities from their present points of storage to central receiving points within the States, and for foreign relief. Further, we would be able to repackage these commodities in suitable containers for distribution to the various welfare and related outlets in this country, as well as for foreign relief uses. If such legislation were enacted, I believe the great majority of the States would be able and willing to assume the responsibility for expanding distribution within the States—to the school-lunch programs, to institutions, and to welfare groups.

It is recognized that expanded donations of this kind will not serve to remove all of the existing surplus stocks, neither will it prevent the future accumulation of additional surplus holdings. Even though increasing the distribution for human consumption by these groups would be only a partial answer to our current problem, I nevertheless feel that it would be a very important step and one which should be taken now. I therefore urge your committee to consider the enactment of authorizing legislation in line with the general recommendations I suggested to the committee on April 27 of this year.

SENATE

TUESDAY, JULY 25, 1950

(Legislative day of Thursday, July 20, 1950)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God our Father, in hours of confusion and anxiety we are sure of no light but Thine, no refuge but in Thee. In these hard bestead and dangerous days we would find peace in the midst of the storm and cleansing for the baseness of our own hearts. In this hour of the Nation's peril, sober us with a solemn sense of personal responsibility, with the realization that Thy call to every man is to contribute to the world's good his own life, strong and clean, honest, trustworthy, and serviceable.

As the bugles sound for the defense of precious things that are dearer than life, out of the depths we cry unto Thee, Thou Kindly Light. Our anguished hearts leap the seas to that far-away land where this very hour our own are contending so gallantly against the pagan powers of darkness. We pray that a sense of Thy presence may gird them as today they face unnumbered foes and in the tomorrows, when the gathering might of freemen shall push back the flood of ruthless aggression. We ask this in the calming assurance that conquer we must,

"For our cause it is just;
And this be our motto:
In God do we trust."

We ask it in the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. MCFARLAND, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, July 24, 1950, was dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILL

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, and he announced that on July 24, 1950, the President had approved and signed the act (S. 2079) for the relief of Mrs. Lydia L. Smith.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 6240. An act to authorize the appointment of a district judge for the northern and southern districts of Indiana; and

H. R. 6454. An act to authorize the appointment of two additional district judges for the northern district of Illinois.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

On his own request, and by unanimous consent, Mr. MILLIKIN was excused from attendance on the sessions of the Senate until Wednesday of next week.

COMMITTEE MEETINGS DURING SENATE SESSION

On request of Mr. MCFARLAND, and by unanimous consent, the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Labor and Public Works were authorized to meet this afternoon during the session of the Senate.

ORDER FOR CALL OF THE CALENDAR TOMORROW

Mr. MCFARLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate convenes tomorrow at 12 o'clock noon the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the call of the calendar for the consideration of measures to which there is no objection, beginning where we left off on the last call, and including certain bills, the objection to which I understand has been withdrawn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the list of additional bills will be printed in the RECORD at this point, indicating the calendar number and the bill number.

The list is as follows:

Calendar No. 1817, S. 1800.
Calendar No. 1829, H. R. 1697.
Calendar No. 1833, S. 3245.
Calendar No. 1834, S. 2484.
Calendar No. 1835, S. 2786.
Calendar No. 1837, S. 3109.
Calendar No. 1838, S. 3244.
Calendar No. 1839, S. 3246.
Calendar No. 1840, S. 3687.
Calendar No. 1843, S. 3682.
Calendar No. 1844, H. R. 7265.
Calendar No. 1845, H. R. 4390.
Calendar No. 747, S. 1837.
Calendar No. 795, S. 2294.
Calendar No. 956, S. 17.
Calendar No. 968, H. R. 5647.
Calendar No. 1272, H. R. 1056.
Calendar No. 1596, H. R. 4653.
Calendar No. 1813, S. 1260.
Calendar No. 1744, H. R. 5372.
Calendar No. 1106, H. R. 4815.
Calendar No. 1696, S. 858.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, there is no objection on the part of the minority to adding these bills to the call of measures to be called, to which there is no objection. Of course, any Senator has the right to object to the consideration of any bill. However, I wish to ask the acting majority leader whether it is his intention to resist or object to the consideration of any bill which was called and objected to previously, or am I to understand that no bills other than those to which there is no objection, including the list furnished this morning, may be considered?

Mr. MCFARLAND. I have only asked for unanimous consent for a call of the calendar from where we left off the last time, and to include in the call this list of additional bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator refers to bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. MCFARLAND. Yes. Of course, any Senator may request unanimous consent at any time to take up other bills, to which any Senator, of course, may object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Arizona? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

By unanimous consent, the following routine business was transacted:

REPORT OF NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL ON INTERNATIONAL MONETARY AND FINANCIAL PROBLEMS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 658)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a Report of the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems covering its operations from October 1, 1949, to March 31, 1950, and describing in accordance with section 4 (b) (5) of the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, the participation of the United States in the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development for the above period.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 25, 1950.

REPORT ON STOCKPILING PROGRAM

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Chairman of the Munitions Board, Washington, D. C., transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the stockpiling program, and a confidential statistical supplement, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

PETITIONS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Washington; to the Committee on Public Works:

"House Joint Memorial 3

"To the Honorable Harry S. Truman, President of the United States of America, and to the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

"We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Washington, in legislative session assembled, most respectfully represent and petition as follows:

"Whereas the war emergency has placed an undue amount of wear and burden upon the highways of the State of Washington because of the movement of army matériel and equipment; and

"Whereas Fort Lewis and other military reservations and airfields are situated in the State of Washington; and

"Whereas Fort Lewis is so situated that the movement of matériel and equipment to and from Fort Lewis results in an especially heavy amount of wear and strain upon the highways of the State of Washington; and

"Whereas much of such movement is in the form of excess weights over and beyond the legal weights established by law and have caused, are causing, and will continue to cause an undue amount of damage to the highways of the State of Washington; and

"Whereas the United States Government has in the past recognized such excess use and deterioration of the highways by making suitable allowances to compensate the State of Washington for such use and deterioration.

"Now, therefore, your memorialists respectfully pray that the Congress of the United States speedily take appropriate action to recompense the State of Washington for such wear and deterioration of its highways; and be it

"Resolved, That copies of this memorial be immediately transmitted to the Honorable Harry S. Truman, President of the United States, the Secretary of the United States Senate, the Clerk of the United States House of Representatives, and to each Member of Congress from the State of Washington.

"Passed the house July 20, 1950.

"CHAS. W. HODDE,
"Speaker of the House.

"Passed the senate July 21, 1950.

"VICTOR A. MEYERS,
"President of the Senate.

A resolution adopted by the Associated Townsend Clubs of Pinellas County, at St. Petersburg, Fla., favoring the enactment of the so-called Townsend plan, providing old-age assistance; to the Committee on Finance.

The petition of Mrs. Oda B. Thompson, of Collingdale, Pa., relating to her claim for compensation for certain inventions; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

TARIFF DUTY ON MOTORCYCLES AND PARTS—LETTER FROM WILLIAM H. BEYER

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, cooperation and unity must be the order of the day at home and abroad in this present Korean crisis. Certainly never before has it been more essential that we coordinate our efforts with the British Commonwealth of Nations, and with our other western allies.

At the same time, however, it would be most unrealistic if we failed to appreciate the fact that the British are continuing to look after their interests insofar as domestic and foreign trade are concerned; and it is incumbent upon us to do likewise. Naturally, we want to promote world commerce; but at the same time, we must consider American living standards. I have in my hand a letter received from one of the many Wisconsin unions which have contacted me regarding the issue of reasonable protection of their jobs from further arbitrary slashes in tariff duties. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the letter which came from William H. Beyer, recording secretary of the Metal Polishers Union in Racine, Wis., be appropriately referred and printed at this point in the RECORD, because I think it is a typical "grass roots" expression on the tariff situation.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

METAL POLISHERS, BUFFERS,
PLATERS AND HELPERS INTERNATIONAL UNION, LOCAL NO. 89,
Racine, Wis., July 12, 1950.

Senator ALEXANDER WILEY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: It has come to the attention of our union that the present import duty on British motorcycles and parts is and has been much too low, and hence may have serious effects upon our future wage scale and working conditions.

Our standard of living must be maintained. Our wage scale must remain high and since there is a very small possibility of the costs of material coming down, it is with deep concern that we urge you to exert all possible pressure on the Tariff Commission and the State Department so that the present tariffs will be raised.

Competition is, of course, an American tradition, but since the standards of living here and in England are so vastly different, it is absolutely necessary that something be done.

Excessive imports at low rates of duty and based on devaluated currencies may jeopardize our jobs.

Any action you may take on this will be greatly appreciated by all the members of this union.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM H. BEYER,
Recording Secretary.

FEDERAL AID TO HIGHWAYS—TELEGRAM AND RESOLUTIONS FROM NORTHEASTERN REGION OFFICIALS

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference, and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, a telegram from Frank D. Merrill, commissioner, department of public works and highways, Concord, N. H., and five resolutions adopted by the conference of Northeastern Region Highway Officials, at New York City, relating to Federal aid to highways.

There being no objection, the telegram and resolutions were referred to the Committee on Public Works, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONCORD, N. H., July 18, 1950.

Senator CHARLES W. TOBEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Am air mailing you resolutions special meeting Northeast Region State Highway Officials which are in effect a protest against further control by Federal Government on local matters pertaining to highways, as indicated by revised Senate highway bill. Resolutions 1 and 4 are more of interest to New Hampshire than others. Our feeling is basically we are concerned with all matters presented by Senate bill and concur on many points, but feel they are State problems which we can solve without supervision. New Hampshire last year paid in over $4,000,000 in highway-user taxes and received back slightly over $2,000,000. Cost of benevolent supervision seems rather high, and we can struggle along without more of it.

FRANK D. MERRILL,
Commissioner, Department of Public Works and Highways.

Resolution 1

Whereas the pending Federal aid highway legislation has established tentative formulas for the allocation of funds appropriated for highway purposes; and

Whereas it is to the interest of better Nation-wide highway transportation that such allocations be established in respect to predominant needs: Be it therefore

Resolved, That in the authorization of Federal aid highway funds, and in the allocation of such funds to the various States that the Congress of the United States give full consideration to the needs of the more populous States where the need for such highways is the greatest, the cost of construction is the highest, and where the traffic load is the heaviest; and be it further

Resolved, That the amendments proposed by the Senate of the United States, Committee of Public Works, to the Federal Aid Highway Act of 1950, are utterly contrary to the transportation and highway needs of the Nation.

Resolution 2

Whereas lines 3 to 10 on page 20 of Senate committee print H. R. 7941, dated June 29, 1950, beginning with the words "In the use of funds," relates to matters which can only be resolved by engineering studies; and

Whereas the inclusion of such provisions in Federal aid highway legislation would result in endless red tape, confusion, and would improperly interfere in the States' rights to determine the best methods of meeting and providing for their respective traffic problems: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this section be not included in any Federal aid highway legislation to be considered and adopted by the Congress of the United States.

Resolution 3

Whereas the pending Federal-aid highway legislation contains a section referring to the construction of bypass routes and public hearings thereon; and

Whereas the matter of the construction of bypass highways is a problem which can only be resolved after traffic investigation, together with engineering and economic studies, which could, if subjected to mandated public hearings, become adversely colored because of nontechnical considerations: Be it therefore

Resolved, That no Federal-aid highway legislation adopted by the Congress of the United States should mandate any State or Federal agency to hold public hearings in connection with the location, design, and construction of Federal-aid highways.

Resolution 4

Whereas legislative provisions for the authorization, allocation, and expenditure of Federal-aid funds for the improvement of secondary highways are of extreme importance to all States; and

Whereas the northeastern-region States highway officials have studied this matter diligently and have reached a unified conclusion as to the needs of their respective States in particular: Be it

Resolved, That the authorization, allocation, and expenditure of Federal-aid secondary-highway funds should be as provided in the Federal Aid Highway Act of 1944, as amended in 1948, and as set forth in H. R. 7941, and approved by the House of Representatives.

Resolution 5

Whereas Federal-aid highway legislation pending in the Senate contains provisions which if enacted would require the entry of Federal agencies into the organization and administration of State departments; and

Whereas such procedure would be an unwarranted interference with the inherent right of the various States to establish the internal workings of their own governmental agencies; and

Whereas it is impractical and undemocratic for the Federal Government, by Federal-aid legislation, to dictate the type of bureau or other agency that a State must establish within its highway or public-works department in order to become eligible for Federal aid: Be it

Resolved, That any provision, directly or indirectly giving the Federal Government additional controls over and above those already provided should be deleted from pending Federal-aid highway legislation.

NATIONAL MINERALS ACT OF 1950—REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, I report an original bill, to stimulate exploration for and conservation of strategic and critical ores, metals, and minerals, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 2164) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received, and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

The bill (S. 3972) to stimulate exploration for and conservation of strategic and critical ores, metals, and minerals, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and ordered to be placed on the calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado:

S. 3963. A bill for the relief of Emma Pomeroy Von Lewinski; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado (for himself and Mr. MILLIKIN):

S. 3964. A bill to amend the authority given the Secretary of the Interior by the act of June 25, 1947, to construct the Paonia reclamation project, Colorado, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. CORDON:

S. 3965. A bill to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Lamm Lumber Co.;

S. 3966. A bill to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Forest Lumber Co.; and

S. 3967. A bill to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Algoma Lumber Co. and its successors in interest, George R. Birkelund and Charles E. Siddall, of Chicago, Ill., and Kenyon T. Fay, of Los Angeles, Calif., trustees of the Algoma Lumber Liquidation Trust; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KEFAUVER:

S. 3968. A bill to provide for the abatement of tax of certain trusts, the income and corpus of which are equitably owned by members of the Armed Forces who died on or after December 7, 1941, while in active service as a member of the military or naval forces of the United States or of any of the other United Nations and prior to January 1, 1948; to the Committee on Finance.

S. 3969. A bill for the relief of William Hoyt Brown; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PEPPER:

S. 3970. A bill for the relief of John S. Muratis; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TYDINGS (by request):

S. 3971. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize certain administrative expenses in the Government service, and for other purposes," approved August 2, 1946 (60 Stat. 806), and for other purposes; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

(Mr. O'MAHONEY, from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, reported an original bill (S. 3972) to stimulate exploration for and conservation of strategic and critical ores, metals, and minerals, and for other purposes, which was ordered to be placed on the calendar, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. SALTONSTALL (by request):

S. 3973. A bill for the relief of Giovanni Pepe; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SCHOEPPEL:

S. 3974. A bill for the relief of Betty Minoru Kawachi; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRINTING OF BULLETIN ENTITLED "MOBILIZATION PLANNING AND THE NATIONAL SECURITY"

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, because of the world situation and the great interest in economic mobilization, it is extremely fortunate that the Library of Congress has completed studies on Mobilization Planning. Dr. William Y. Elliott, of Harvard, has headed a group making the study. It is a document which should be widely distributed and will prove of great value in our present situation. I therefore submit at this time a Senate resolution to authorize the printing as a Senate document of Public Affairs Bulletin No. 81 entitled "Mobilization Planning and the National Security" prepared by the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress.

The resolution (S. Res. 319) was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

Resolved, That Public Affairs Bulletin No. 81, entitled "Mobilization Planning and the National Security," prepared by the Legislative Reference Service, Library of Congress, be printed as a Senate document.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED OR PLACED ON CALENDAR

The following bills were each read twice by their titles, and referred, or placed on the calendar, as indicated:

H. R. 6240. An act to authorize the appointment of a district judge for the northern and southern districts of Indiana; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 6454. An act to authorize the appointment of two additional district judges for the northern district of Illinois; ordered to be placed on the calendar.

GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS BILL—AMENDMENT

Mr. KEFAUVER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7786) making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

CANADIAN RIVER RECLAMATION PROJECT, TEXAS—AMENDMENTS

Mr. CHAVEZ submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2733) to authorize the construction, operation, and maintenance by the Secretary of the Interior of the Canadian River reclamation project, Texas, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

REFERENCE OF SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 98

On request of Mr. MCFARLAND, Senate Concurrent Resolution 98, to print additional copies of hearings in the investigation of disloyalty in the State Department, submitted by Mr. WHERRY (for himself and Mr. FERGUSON) on July 24, 1950, was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

INVESTIGATION OF EXCLUSION OF JOSEPH KRIPS AND WALTER GIESEKING FROM THE UNITED STATES

Mr. LANGER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 320), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation of the action of the Immigration and Naturalization Service in excluding Joseph Krips and Walter Gieseking from the United States. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations as it may deem advisable.

YOUNG AMERICAN MEDAL FOR BRAVERY—AMENDMENT

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I send to the desk for appropriate reference an amendment to House bill 157, authorizing the Attorney General of the United States to recognize and to award to outstanding courageous young Americans a medal for heroism known as the Young American Medal for Bravery, which is on the calendar, and will be reached when the calendar is called tomorrow. I ask unanimous consent that a statement prepared by me concerning the amendment may be printed in the RECORD. In the statement I have also commented on Senate Concurrent Resolution 35, requiring committee reports to include estimates of the probable cost of proposed legislation, which I submitted on behalf of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], and myself, and which is now on the calendar. My statement applies to both those matters.

I also ask unanimous consent that a copy of the concurrent resolution, as reported, be printed in the RECORD following the statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table, and, without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from Michigan, together with a copy of the concurrent resolution, will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The statement presented by Mr. FERGUSON is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR FERGUSON

Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to H. R. 157, a bill pending on the Senate Calendar, and ask that the amendment be read and lie on the table.

This amendment, Mr. President, may appear on the surface to be of minor consequence. But I think it is of tremendous importance to the Congress and to the Nation because of its basis in principle.

H. R. 157 is a bill authorizing the Department of Justice to recognize and award to courageous young Americans a medal for heroism known as the Young American Medal for Bravery. It comes from the Judiciary Committee, and as a member of that committee it received my attention there.

I have absolutely no lack of sympathy for the purposes of this bill. I would not wish to retard its progress except for this one fact: It is a perfect example of the Congress of the United States bestowing a new function upon an executive department without any knowledge whatsoever of that function's prospective cost.

It so happens that an investigation of this particular function's cost reveals that the principal items of expense attached to it are not expected to involve more than $3,900 a year. Accordingly, my amendment proposes to limit the sums authorized for expenditure to $5,000 a year. Incidentally, the investigation of cost was made by Congressman FRANK CHELF, of Kentucky, who is the author of the bill. I deeply appreciate the fact that he has recognized the basis of my previous reservations to the measure and has borne with me and in fact endorses my amendment.

In a budget of billions the amount involved in this bill is of minor consequence. But I wish to repeat, Mr. President, that for Congress to enact any legislation without knowing its cost is to invite a fiscal fate for this Nation that is inexcusable.

I happen to be one of those who has preached governmental economy ever since I came to the Senate, and I have honestly sought to practice it. I have studied the problem of effectuating economy at considerable length. I have been a party to all of the budget-trimming devices of recent years. There may be recalled the 5- and 10-percent reduction amendments I offered to each appropriation bill in the last Congress. I joined in drafting and introducing the proposed 10-percent reduction on the pending appropriation bill.

In common with every other student of the subject that I know, however, I have come to the conclusion that it is impossible to reduce the cost of Government in anything like the measure desired by the people of this country simply by whittling at appropriations.

It is all very well to talk about cutting the deadwood out of Government offices. That needs to be done. But a flat 10-percent reduction in all Government civilian employment would realize an annual saving of only about $646,000,000, or about 1½ percent of the entire Federal budget.

As a member of the Appropriations Committee I am keenly aware of this problem. Each year I sit in those committee sessions, and I and other members search and probe for means to reduce appropriations. We are sometimes successful, for there is a great deal of padding that goes into budget estimates. But the fat which we can trim is small in proportion to the whole. And each time that we run head-on into that dead end we are told just this: "Well, Mr. Senator, you authorized the program. We are only carrying out the law, and that costs money."

Right there, Mr. President, is the core of the whole problem. Inefficiency adds to the cost of Government, but the main cost comes from the scope and size of Government and its functions.

I suggest, Mr. President, that one of the most constructive things that Congress could do would be to review all legislation on the statute books which authorizes or requires expenditures and to start from there to weed out some of the things that are absolutely unessential or least essential.

I have in mind such things as surveys whose results are published years after the period of any real usefulness, the rafts of Government publications that serve only limited demands and specialized interests, and the host of information activities that merely propagandize some governmental project.

I do not propose that Government revert to merely maintaining post roads and customs services. There are a lot of things in which Government is engaged that I object to. But realities are to be faced, and Government rarely retraces its steps. In recent years Government has assumed a vast range of functions, some of which were sought by people who had a purpose in building up a powerful, centralized authority, and others which were imposed by citizens and groups of citizens for whom Government meant a relief to some burden they were carrying.

What I am appealing for is that in designating the functions which Government is to pursue we should also weigh the fiscal consequences of those programs. I am completely satisfied that many functions authorized by Congress and otherwise considered worth while would never have been approved had their cost been made known. I am sure that the President's legislative program for this Congress was retarded in no small measure by the revelation of Senator MCCLELLAN that were it to be enacted it would saddle this Nation with a future annual expenditure of $25,000,000,000.

Congress is constantly being berated for its failure to exercise greater control over the fiscal policies of this country. The defense is sometimes made that Congress is a captive, in fiscal matters, of the executive department, which prepares the budgets. But the ultimate responsibility must be shared by Congress itself, which authorizes the activities upon which the budget estimates merely place a dollar sign.

Let me illustrate why the cost of Government increases year after year. I have here a table showing the "Increases in 1951 budget estimates for the Department of Agriculture pursuant to new legislation enacted by the first session of the Eight-first Congress." This is not to single out the Department of Agriculture as exceptional. It is just that a highly informative table was supplied by that Department to the Senate Appropriations Committee. I will ask that the table be printed at the end of my remarks. The summary shows that legislation which we enacted last year has increased Department of Agriculture appropriation requirements by almost $75,000,000.

Going further into that subject, I want to analyze the cost of the farm housing program which Congress authorized last year as a chapter of the Housing Act of 1949.

I knew that it provided for repayable loans and grants for improvement of farm housing in an amount of about $55,000,000 a year. What I did not know, and what I am sure no other Senator knew, was that the program would call for various agencies of the Government to come in this year and ask for $6,224,435 to administer the program. Here is just how that happened.

The Farmers Home Administration, which administers the loans and grants that were authorized, requested $4,637,000 for salaries and expenses.

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics asked for $40,000 "for economic research on methods of reducing costs of farm construction, the size of housing investment which can be supported by farms of different sizes, types, and income potentialities, and effect of farmers' circumstances and preferences with respect to types of housing," and $185,000 "for surveys to determine farm housing needs and progress being made to meet these needs." That is a total of $225,000 for that Bureau.

The extension services of the Department of Agriculture wanted $775,000 "for technical advice and assistance in farm housing and other farm buildings."

The Bureau of Plant Industry, Soils, and Agricultural Engineering wanted $25,000 for "studies to determine methods of safeguarding farm buildings from decay," and $195,900 for "development of plans and specifications and research on methods of reducing costs of construction," a total of $220,900.

The Bureau of Human Nutrition and Home Economics wanted $51,000 for "development in cooperation with BPISAE (that is the Bureau of Plant Industry, Soils, and Agricultural Engineering) of suitable house plans and studies of minimum requirements for space and efficient arrangement for carrying on household activities."

Then, of course, the Office of the Solicitor in the Department of Agriculture had to be in the act. He wanted $320,000 "for legal services."

And finally, there was the inevitable request of the Office of Information "for publications and informational services," $15,535.

Mr. President, when we pass a piece of legislation without knowing the cost it will entail we are in effect issuing a blank check, to be cashed at a later date wtih the figures written in. I object strenuously to that procedure. When I write a personal check I want to know what will be deducted from my bank account. The American people are also entitled to know what will be deducted from their bank accounts when we write checks in the form of legislation authorizing new governmental activities.

One positive way of telling them that amount is to place the figure itself in the authorizing legislation as a maximum amount. That is what I have proposed to do with H. R. 157 as an illustration of a paramount necessity.

It may not always be practicable to write a precise limitation into the bill itself. In my opinion that does not excuse the Congress from making every effort to inform itself of the expected cost of any piece of legislation. For that reason I have introduced Senate Concurrent Resolution 35, which is now pending on the calendar. I earnestly hope we can get action on it in this session.

That measure would require that every bill reported out of a legislative committee be accompanied by a statement of the proposed legislation's cost over a 5-year period of operation.

Considering the fiscal problems with which this Government is confronted, that cost information is vital to the evaluation of any piece of legislation.

Without knowledge of the cost of the legislation upon which it is passing, Congress cannot exercise the fiscal control which is its constitutional responsibility, and it can never hope to see the day when government economy is a reality, and not a promise.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 35) is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That section 133 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) All bills and joint resolutions reported from committees of the Senate or the House of Representatives shall be accompanied by reports in writing, which shall be printed; and there shall be included in each such report or in an accompanying document an estimate from the department or other agency of the legislative, executive, or judicial branch of the Government primarily concerned with the expenditure of any funds required to meet the probable cost of carrying out the legislation proposed in such bill or resolution over the first 5-year period of its operation or over the period of its operation if such legislation will be effective for less than 5 years.

"(2) Estimates received from departments or agencies under this subsection may be submitted by the committees to the Bureau of the Budget for review, and such reviews, when practicable, shall be included within the accompanying documents before said bills and joint resolutions are reported.

"(3) The Appropriations Committees of both Houses shall maintain compilations of all such estimates, and semiannually shall print those compilation (together with any comment of the Bureau of the Budget) in the form of anticipated legislative budgets for each of the ensuing 5 fiscal years for the information of the Congress."

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, July 25, 1950, he presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 1027. An act for the relief of the Merit Co.;

S. 1049. An act for the relief of Amy Alexandrovna Taylor and Myrna Taylor;

S. 1792. An act for the relief of Thomas Nicholas Epiphaniades and Wanda Julia Epiphaniades;

S. 2243. An act for the relief of Tevfik Kamil Kutay;

S. 2864. An act to authorize certain administrative expenses for the Department of Justice, and for other purposes; and

S. 3937. An act to authorize the President to extend enlistments in the Armed Forces of the United States.

GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS—AMENDMENT

Mr. PEPPER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7786) making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ADDRESS BY GOVERNOR WARREN, OF FLORIDA, BEFORE THE INVESTMENT BANKERS ASSOCIATION

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION—ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSE AUTHORIZATIONS

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, signed by Mr. Harley Hise, Chairman of the Board, relating to the appropriation for the administrative expenses of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION,
Washington, July 21, 1950.

HON. BURNET R. MAYBANK,
Chairman, Treasury-Post Office Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MAYBANK: In the Senate debate on H. R. 7786, as reported on pages 10166 and 10167 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 14, 1950, there appeared to be some misunderstanding on the part of certain Senators speaking in opposition to the proposed amendment restoring $700,000 of the House reduction of $1,100,000 in the administrative expense authorization of the RFC for the current fiscal year. I am writing to clarify some of the points raised, with the thought that this information will be helpful to you in the forthcoming joint conference on H. R. 7786 with members of the House Committee on Appropriations.

First, I should like to discuss the budgetary implications of Reorganization Plan 22, which provides for the transfer of FNMA to the Housing and Home Finance Agency on September 7, 1950. As you know, funds for administrative expenses of the RFC are not appropriated by the Congress. Instead, the annual appropriation bills authorize the Corporation to make necessary expenditures for this purpose, subject to specific limitation, out of corporate funds. This same authority extends to FNMA, as a subsidiary of the Corporation, and the dollar limitation established by the Congress covers the administrative expenses of both the RFC and FNMA. When FNMA is transferred, the administrative expense limitation will be apportioned between the RFC and HHFA by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, and RFC will have left only the amount necessary to carry on its remaining programs. I point this out to emphasize that the transfer of FNMA under Reorganization Plan 22 will not effect a reduction in the combined budget of RFC and FNMA, and it is the combined budget which the Congress is presently considering, rather than the budget of only the RFC.

We are not in a position at this time to provide you with the exact dollar amount which will be transferred to HHFA for the FNMA program. As you know, mortgage activities of FNMA are integrated with the loan operations of the RFC, and an extensive analysis of expenses and assignment of personnel will be necessary before an equitable segregation of administrative funds can be accomplished. Tentatively, however, we estimate that approximately $4,000,000 will be transferred, of which $3,200,000 will provide for salaries of some 750 employees to be transferred to HHFA. You will note that this is less than the amount shown in the budget document, and it is also approximately $1,500,000 less than the current rate of expenditure of the FNMA program. As I stated before, FNMA activities are integrated with other lending activities of the Corporation, and in our organization are administered by the same supervisory personnel responsible for the proper administration of other RFC programs. In the allocation of administrative costs as stated in the budget document and other reports, this overhead expense is properly prorated between RFC and FNMA. Obviously, however, the Corporation could not transfer any appreciable number of its management group or top supervisors to another agency without seriously endangering the administration of its loan activities. An analysis of our administrative costs indicates that approximately 30 percent of the total represents nontransferable overhead, which accounts for the difference between our estimate of $4,000,000 to be transferred to HHFA and the current rate of expenditure of FNMA amounting to approximately $5,500,000.

Next, I should like to comment briefly on the Senate's restoration of $700,000 of the $1,100,000 reduction in our authorization recommended by the House. The major item to be considered in this connection is the cost of custodial and fiscal services performed for the Corporation by the Federal Reserve banks. Our budget originally provided $650,000 for this purpose. The House reduced that amount by $600,000 on the basis that these services should be discontinued immediately and the work transferred to the field offices of the Corporation. As we stated during the hearings before your subcommittee, we are in complete accord with the House recommendation that custody of the security documents of the Corporation should be taken over from the Federal Reserve banks, but because of the thousands of documents involved, transfer cannot be accomplished immediately. The Senate has restored $300,000, or one-half of the $600,000 reduction recommended by the House. I believe that this will provide the Corporation with sufficient funds to reimburse the Federal Reserve banks until an orderly transfer can be accomplished, probably by December 31, 1950. There has been a recent development in this take-over of the custody function which may alter our plans somewhat. Representatives of HHFA have requested that we do not transfer the custody of mortgages from the Federal Reserve banks to our field offices until they have had an opportunity to investigate thoroughly the type and cost of services performed by the banks. This request does not, I am sure, represent any basic disagreement on their part with the recommendation of the House Committee on Appropriations, but is made rather for the purpose of deferring any procedural changes until they have had an opportunity to evaluate all phases of the FNMA operations and have concluded their planning with respect to the FNMA organization and procedures for transfer to their agency.

The remaining $400,000 of the $700,000 increase passed by the Senate represents a partial restoration of House reductions in personnel and related expenses. In view of the continuing heavy workload on loan applications and mortgages, I consider the restoration of this $400,000 of primary importance. Our original estimate provided for an increase of 90 man-years, and while the $400,000 will provide for only a part of that increase, it will help materially in eliminating backlogs of work in our field offices.

I should like to express my gratitude for your eminently fair and impartial consideration of the Corporation's budget requirements, and I sincerely hope that the authorization of $26,700,000 as passed by the Senate will stand in the bill as finally enacted. Any lesser amount will certainly have an adverse effect on the proper administration of the Corporation's programs.

Sincerely yours,

HARLEY HISE,
Chairman.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. McCARTHY obtained the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so I may address an inquiry to the acting majority leader?

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask the acting majority leader whether he intends to have a quorum call. Several Senators have requested that a quorum call be had when the Senator from Wisconsin took the floor. I would rather have the acting majority leader suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. McFARLAND. Does the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin desire a quorum call?

Mr. McCARTHY. It would be well to have one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield for that purpose?

Mr. McCARTHY. I shall be very glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. McFARLAND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Kem	Neely
Darby	Langer	Schoeppel
Donnell	McCarthy	Thomas, Utah.
Gillette	McFarland	Wherry
Hayden	McKellar	Williams
Hendrickson	Martin
Humphrey	Mundt

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

After a little delay Mr. HOEY, Mr. WATKINS, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. MYERS, Mr. THYE, Mr. MCMAHON, Mr. FREAR, Mr. SMITH of New Jersey, Mr. TAFT, Mr. MAYBANK, Mr. ROBERTSON, Mr. SPARKMAN, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. IVES, Mr. MILLIKIN, Mr. FLANDERS, Mr. CAPEHART, Mr. BREWSTER, Mr. DOUGLAS, Mr. BRICKER, Mr. STENNIS, Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, Mr. BENTON, Mr. ANDERSON, Mrs. SMITH of Maine, Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. HICKENLOOPER, Mr. O'CONOR, Mr. KERR, and Mr. JENNER entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. BYRD, Mr. CHAPMAN, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. CORDON, Mr. EASTLAND, Mr. ECTON, Mr. FERGUSON, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. GREEN, Mr. GURNEY, Mr. HILL, Mr. HOLLAND, Mr. HUNT, Mr. JOHNSON of Texas, Mr. KEFAUVER, Mr. KILGORE, Mr. KNOWLAND, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. LEHMAN, Mr. LODGE, Mr. MALONE, Mr. MCCARRAN, Mr. MCCLELLAN, Mr. MORSE, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. PEPPER, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. SALTONSTALL, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. TOBEY, Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. WILEY, and Mr. YOUNG also entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. MCFARLAND. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULERIGHT], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WITHERS] are absent by leave of the Senate.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK] is absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present.

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

Mr. MCCARTHY. Mr. President, I am about to do today what I had hoped it would not be necessary to do, namely, to use those portions of the State Department loyalty files which were developed by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. I picked out what I think is a typical case of the 81 examined by the Tydings-McMahon committee. I feel that the Senate and the country should know what is in a typical case which has been given a clean bill of health by the Tydings-McMahon committee. I dislike doing this, Mr. President, I decided not to do it until after the committee finished its work. I hoped the committee would go into the matter in some detail. My principal reason for not wanting to do it is that I feared it might in some way embarrass the Federal Bureau of Investigation in future investigations; that it might in some way hamper them. However, I have stricken from the secret file the names of all informants and any other information which might in any way indicate who they are.

While I did not discuss this matter with Mr. Hoover or any of his chief aides, or the heads of any other intelligence agencies, I did have in my office a man from one of the intelligence agencies and went over this matter with him in some detail. He assured me that sufficient material had been deleted from the report so as in no way to hamper any future investigation.

Mr. President, while I have deleted the name of this individual, so that there will be no question that he is today working in the State Department in a very important job, I shall hand the complete file, with nothing deleted from it, to the Senator on my right, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL]. I shall also hand him the State Department telephone directory for 1950 containing the name of this individual. While the telephone directory does not indicate his importance, perhaps the Senator can get some idea of how he rates in the Department by the number of telephones he has. Incidentally, I had my staff call the Department yesterday, and call this man's office. He is still in the State Department. This is not one of the marginal cases, nor is it one of the worst cases. I tried to pick out a typical case from the 81 cases that were given to the committee.

The Senate will recall that more than 5 months ago I stated that I had the names of 57 individuals who either are or recently had been working in the State Department, and who were either members of the Communist Party or certainly loyal thereto and doing the work of the party. At various times I referred to them as Communists or card-carrying Communists. I want to make it clear that when I refer to a card-carrying member I do not necessarily mean a man who has a little slip of cardboard in his pocket indicating that he has paid his dues. By a card-carrying member I mean the type of individual described in this FBI secret report which I hold in my hand.

We find that the FBI placed in the Communist Party in 1937 one of their undercover agents. This man remained in the Communist Party until 1948. At that time he was expelled because, I assume, they suspected his being an agent for one of the intelligence agencies. The FBI lists this man as responsible and reliable. He is not listed as such by the Tydings committee or by me, but by the FBI.

It will be noted on page 2 of the photostat, in the third paragraph, that this agent's record was one of complete reliability. We find in this report that this FBI undercover agent, the man who was employed by the FBI and placed in the Communist Party, in his statement under oath states that this official in the State Department was a member of the party and was active in it. He states that this individual's wife also was a member of the party and was a member of and active in the Young Communist League. So when I refer to a card-carrying Communist, that is the kind of individual I refer to, even though there is nothing to show that he actually has a card in his pocket.

After notifying the President and the Senate that I had the names of 57 individuals, I supplied the committee with a résumé not only of the 57 cases but of a total of 81 cases.

As I stated at the time, some of the 81 cases were marginal cases of individuals who might well prove that they were completely loyal and that they were not members of the Communist Party, but there was evidence against them indicating the opposite.

I notified the Senate at that time that it would be impossible for me personally to present sufficient evidence, separate and apart from the information contained in the Government files, to convict them of being Communists in a court of law. In other words, in order to prove them to be Communists, the files would have to be used, because for example, for me to reproduce the information in the file I hold in my hand would cost tens of thousands of dollars. This work was done by many agents. It was done by an agent in Minnesota, one in Michigan, one in New York, one in New Haven, one in San Francisco, one whose location is not indicated, one in Chicago, one in Virginia, and one in Washington, D. C. The name of the agent who did the work in Washington, D. C., is Thomas A. Conroy, who I understand is one of the top FBI agents. As I told the Senate, it would be impossible for me to reproduce that information. If the committee was to do a good job they would have to take advantage of the millions of man-hours of the men who worked for the FBI, the Central Intelligence Agency, Army Intelligence, Navy Intelligence, and other agencies.

Apparently the Senate agreed with me at that time that it would be impossible for me to try to reproduce the evidence in these files. The Senate voted unanimously that the committee should do the job, and the Senate voted the committee almost unlimited funds and gave the committee authority to subpena not merely the raped or denuded State Department loyalty files but all the files in the intelligence agencies.

The Senate felt that this job should be done honestly and above board. There is no reason why the committee should not have all the information about all the individuals accused of being Communists, and no reason why the committee should not have all the files including those of Central Intelligence, Army Intelligence, ONI, and Secret Service.

Mr. President, after the committee had been given this task and unlimited funds and authority with which to perform it, I gathered that my task would end at that point. However, when the President decided to give the committee only the rifled State Department files I felt it necessary to try to produce independently of the files some of the extremely dangerous evidence against certain individuals which is contained in the complete files. That was done with some degree of success, but with great difficulty and at considerable expense. While the committee was examining the 81 files I did not feel justified in publicly using the evidence in them. I felt it was necessary first to find the extent of the committee's investigation of the files, the extent to which they were rifled, and so forth. In view of the fact that the committee has now finished its work and has now been discharged, and in view of the majority report that none of the 81 individuals named by me on the floor were found to be Communist or pro-Communist, I feel I have no choice but to make public the contents of a typical file of one of the 81 individuals named by me, so the Senate and the country may know what the committee had before it and upon which its decision was based. In doing so, I am mindful of the fact that I pointed out that the files were thoroughly rifled prior to the committee's examination. However, the three majority members of the committee were unanimous in stating that the files had not been touched and that they were complete; and that all FBI material which had been furnished the State Department was reviewed by them. If such was the case, the material which I am giving the Senate and the country today was before the Senators and examined by them.

Incidentally, Mr. President, in connection with the Tydings-McMahon committee's statement that they found no evidence on any of the 81 individuals indicating they were Communists or pro-Communists, and in view of the fact that they gave all the 81 individuals a clean bill of health, I think it should be noted that case No. 19 of the 81 was the case of Mr. William Remington. The Senate will recall that at the time the committee took this action, Mr. Remington was working in the Department of Commerce with Mr. Lee. The Senate will recall that the Commerce Department and the State Department did quite a job of keeping from Korea and Formosa, and that area, the materials the Congress voted for them. At that time Mr. Remington was over there, secure in his job. I urged the staff of the committee that they give priority to the case of Remington. I felt he was a dangerous man, as was the other one exposed in the Commerce Department, Michael Lee. While Mr. Remington was not technically on the payroll of the State Department, his name was included, because he was working so closely with the State Department there there was no way of knowing whether he was under the orders of the State Department or the Commerce Department, unless one checked the payroll.

Mr. President, the Tydings-McMahon committee took no action whatsoever on Remington. They said, "You go ahead and give us the proof." I stated to them that they would find in his file the statements of men who were in the Communist movement with him, showing that he also was a member of the Communist Party. This, of course, was given the same treatment as all the evidence I gave the committee. However, the House Committee on Un-American Activities, on its own, took this matter up and did an excellent job. It furnished the grand jury with information, with the end result that Mr. Remington was indicted for perjury in connection with his communistic activities.

Mr. President, it seems rather unusual, therefore—if we even take that one case alone, it is rather unusual—that the Tydings-McMahon committee could say that in the 81 cases, which included Remington, "We found no evidence of either communism or of anyone being pro-Communist," even after the grand jury had indicted a man in connection with his communistic activities.

Mr. President, I shall now read a typical file of one of the individuals named by me. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this FBI report shows that an FBI agent, an under-cover agent, joined the Communist Party in 1937 at the suggestion of the FBI; that he remained a party member until he was expelled in 1948; that during that time he was found to be absolutely reliable. He testified that this State Department official, whom we shall call Mr. X, was personally known to him to be a member of the Communist Party, and that X had told him that he had been a member of the party before coming to this country. The State Department official, incidentally, was born in Moscow. It will be noted also that this FBI undercover agent made the unqualified statement that X's wife was also a member of the party both before and after her marriage to X, and that she was a member and active in the Young Communist League.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GILLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Where was this testimony adduced by the FBI agent?

Mr. McCARTHY. The testimony in the first three pages of the report was produced by Special Agent Thomas A. Conroy. Senators will note that in some cases I have stricken out the information indicating where a witness may reside. I did that purposely, so that I would not in any way endanger any FBI informant. Senators will notice this was received by the Civil Service Commission on September 10 or 16—I cannot tell by the stamp which is the correct date—1948. The distribution was "To the Department of State, three copies." So this was sent to the Department of State.

I feel that in frankness I should have announced, as I have, that I do not think this material was in the file at the time of the examination. The Senators say it was, so we will take their word for that for the time being.

I am sure the Senator from Nebraska will understand my reason for not trying to indicate exactly in what city some of this information was produced. I might say that at the time of the Coplon trial I felt that when the court ordered that the files be made available to the public, it was a great mistake to the court yes, but to the public, no. I felt that to divulge the names of the informants, the methods of operation, the method the FBI used in getting its men into the movement, may have set the Bureau back years. I have tried to avoid doing that in my presentation.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand the Senator to say now that the members of the investigating committee state that all this material was in the files when they examined the case.

Mr. McCARTHY. The Senators repeatedly said that the material was in the file when they examined the case. Senators will remember that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] went to the White House, looked at the 81 files—he said there were 81—some of them 4 or 5 or 6 inches thick. He came away in half an hour and said, "The files are complete. Everything is there." I questioned that before, and I still question it.

I produced the statements of four witnesses who worked in the State Department, who were part of a group of eight who worked for 6 months cleaning out the files. We have their signed statements to that effect. So far as I know, there is no reason why these individuals would lie about it.

I frankly do not think this material was before the Senators; but it was a part of the files. This file I have shows it was received by the Civil Service Commission, and forwarded to the State Department. It should have been there. I might say, in connection with whether the files were complete or not, that the Senate will recall that on the twentieth day of June the Senator from Maryland called a press interview. At that time he said that the FBI had made an investigation, a complete investigation, of all the files, and that all the files were complete in every detail. I of course knew that was not so, so I wrote to J. Edgar Hoover asking whether it was true, whether his bureau had made an investigation of these files and had stated everything was in them. I have here a copy of J. Edgar Hoover's letter in reply.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me finish this. I have a copy of J. Edgar Hoover's letter, which was written about 20 days after the Senator from Maryland stated the FBI had examined the files. Let me read one paragraph from the letter. Mr. Hoover said:

> The Federal Bureau of Investigation has made no such examination and therefore is not in a position to make any statement concerning the completeness or incompleteness of the State Department files.

I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. The stamp on the paper the Senator has presented shows, does it not, that the United States Civil Service Commission received this report on September 14, 1948?

Mr. McCARTHY. It is September 10 or 14 or 16, 1948. I cannot make out very well from the photostat the exact date.

Mr. LANGER. A moment ago the Senator spoke about the four affidavits with which he supplied the Senate some time ago. As I remember those affidavits, the affiants said they were working in the State Department in 1945.

Mr. McCARTHY. No; it was 1946. They were working there at the time the plans were being made for the President's loyalty program. They were working there from July or August until December 31, 1946. So the rifling job they did would not have gotten this part of the file, which is dated 1948. But, as I told the Senate, there was a great housecleaning job going on, a second one, before the Senate committee started examining the files, and I hope to have the affidavits on that, too.

In connection with the first rifling job, the Senator will recall the President sent the loyalty order on the 27th of October, or November—it was October, as I recall, before election. That was not to go into effect until the Senate appropriated money to put the program into effect. So that it would seem that the first rifling job that was done, the first housecleaning job, was either in preparation for the President's own loyalty program or perhaps in anticipation of the new Congress, which was taking over on January 1, 1947. The statements, it will be noted, refer to personnel files. At that time that was what they were known as, because there was no loyalty program, so there was no such thing then as a loyalty file.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Is the Senator from Wisconsin now referring to the observations the Senator from Wisconsin made that the files were rifled and that there were four affidavits signed to that effect?

Mr. McCARTHY. That is correct, though they were not affidavits. My investigators do not have the right to administer the oath.

Mr. WHERRY. They were signed statements?

Mr. McCARTHY. They were signed statements.

Mr. WHERRY. Is that the same incident the Senator from Maryland referred to, that there were no signed statements to that effect, and even if they were, the men who were employed to do this job, did not know what they were doing, and did not know that the files were being rifled?

Mr. McCARTHY. That is correct. The Senator from Maryland said the other day that the statements were all unsigned. I might say that when I gave the Senate the photostats of those statements, the signatures appeared on three of them. One of them was a Mr. Threadgill, who is now an agent for the Federal Bureau of Investigation. He, incidentally, did not take part in the rifling task. He was in one of the adjoining rooms. The clean files were brought to him and he made out new cards. His statement was to the effect, however, that State Department employees came over and participated in cleaning out their own files.

When the Senator from Maryland or anyone else says that these young men did not know what they were doing, I would suggest that the Senator call up Mr. Threadgill and have him come over to his office and sit down with him. He is a fine intelligent young man. He is a competent and trusted FBI agent. There is no reason on earth why he should come over to my office and lie to me. The same is true in regard to another young man, a Mr. Sullivan. He is a third year student at Georgetown in the Foreign Service School. He is a very intelligent young man. There is no reason why he should lie. The same can be said of the other two who signed statements.

One of the individuals is a man who now works in the State Department. When I presented his statement to the Senate I did delete his name, because he said "If they know I signed this I will lose my job." I sent that on to the President, and I told the President that if he would assure me that this young man would not lose his job for having told the truth, then I would be glad to contact the young man and get his permission to give the President his name. Incidentally, the President has never answered that letter, which is rather surprising in view of the fact that he has suggested that "if McCARTHY has any information of wrongdoing in the State Department, if he has any information which should be brought to my attention, if he knows anything about the rifling of the files, if he knows anything about Communists, why does he not bring that information to me, the President of the United States?" So I have brought that information to him, and have been greeted by not even the courtesy of an answer.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. The next question I was about to ask has to do with that matter. The Senator has answered my first question. But now another question has arisen. Did the committee interrogate or bring in Mr. Threadgill or the other men whose names the Senator furnished the committee?

Mr. McCARTHY. Absolutely not. Just the usual State Department release saying that "McCARTHY is lying, and does not have those statements."

Mr. WHERRY. The committee could have interrogated them and found out for itself what those men were doing with the files?

Mr. McCARTHY. Absolutely. There can be no question about it.

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. JENNER. Does the Senator know that yesterday the President of the United States made an appeal to the people in this crisis to report any cases of subversion, or espionage, or treason, and so forth. Did the Senator know that?

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes; I read that.

Mr. JENNER. Then I will ask the Senator: What good would it do the people of the country to report anything to the President of the United States in connection with subversion or treason or espionage?

Mr. McCARTHY. It would appear that it would do no good, I will say to the Senator. I might say in that connection also we have here photostats of an FBI report showing they went to tremendous expense, that they went even to the point of putting men in the Communist Party, at great danger to those young men. One of the agents reported that one of the party members is a man up high in the State Department and he gave much evidence to back it up. Now, contrary to what some of our friends try to tell the country, the FBI has no power on earth to order this State Department employee discharged. They cannot even order his prosecution. Only the Justice Department can do that. For a long period of time they could not arrest him without permission of the State Department. I think that order has now been countermanded. Now they must merely get the permission of the Department of Justice. And whose permission do Senators think they must get over there? Mr. Peyton Ford's.

One of the other things in connection——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, before the Senator goes to another point will he yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me first say a word in connection with the Senator's question as to what good it will do to give this information to the President. I heard some of my friends from the other side of the aisle the other day say that if McCARTHY were honest and sincere about this, if he were not trying to practice fraud and deceit upon the Senate, then he would have brought this information to the attention of the FBI. In that connection let me point out that here we have a complete FBI case. People brought information to the attention of the FBI. The FBI did an outstanding job. But what happens? Material is thrown into a file and allowed to lie there. Let me tell the Senate what happened when this matter came to the Loyalty Board.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to read the statement which was made by the distinguished Senator from Maryland, which appears on page 10711 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, when the Senator from Maryland made his speech on last Friday. He said:

> Then the Senator from Wisconsin said they had been rifled in 1946, and he had some affidavits, which were unsigned.

That is a positive statement. What is the Senator's answer to that statement by the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. McCARTHY. I thank the Senator for raising that question. I have been answering the State Department and the Tydings-McMahon Committee largely with documentation recently, so I am going to do the same thing here. I ask if a page will call up my office and ask my clerk to send over the original signed statements. I will give the Senator the signed statements, three with the signatures on, and the fourth which a present employee of the State Department signed. I cannot give the Senator his name.

Mr. WHERRY. I think we ought to have that information. It ought to be a part of the RECORD. Either they are signed or unsigned. I should like to have the distinguished Senator give us that answer. I appreciate the fact that he is going to bring in the evidence.

Second, the Senator from Maryland proceeded to say:

It would not have made any difference if they had been signed.

What is the Senator's answer to that allegation or statement?

Mr. McCARTHY. God only knows. I do not know. Here we have four reputable witnesses who signed statements, who said, "We took out all the derogatory material." They say the State Department employees came over and they were able to pick out the bad stuff out of their own files. And the chairman of the committee, who is supposed to be conducting an investigation, and who told the Senate that none of the files were rifled, that they were complete, says it does not make any difference if four of those former State Department employees gave signed statements to the effect that they were members of the rifling squad.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. As I remember, one of the affidavits said it was a project, and it gave the name of the individual who was in charge of that project.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is correct.

Mr. LANGER. Will the Senator tell us if he knows whether or not the man in charge of the project was ever subpenaed by the subcommittee?

Mr. McCARTHY. He was not I will say to the Senator. He is working in the State Department. My investigator tried to get in contact with him, but, naturally, was unsuccessful.

Mr. LANGER. I ask the distinguished Senator if he means to tell the Senate that the man who these four witnesses said was in charge of that project is still working for the State Department today?

Mr. McCARTHY. That is correct. First, let me make this clear. I am not sure that the man in charge of the project initiated it. In fact, I am reasonably certain he did not. I assume he was assigned to that work by some of the top brass, and that it was merely a job he was given to do.

There are eight all told; and I have affidavits from four. What I have just said is also true of the four whose names are given, who did the rifling job. They were assigned to that task, and they had no way in the world of knowing whether it was right or wrong. So we cannot blame them.

As to the man in charge of the immediate project, whether he was at fault I do not know. He should have been subpenaed, and should have been asked who told him to do the job; and he should have been required to produce, under subpena, the written instructions covering what he was doing.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Is that man still employed by the State Department?

Mr. McCARTHY. He is still employed by the State Department, so far as I can determine.

Mr. LANGER. So he is available to the committee, is he?

Mr. McCARTHY. Oh, definitely.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if the file, a copy of which he has brought here, is one of the files which was made available to the committee by the FBI.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is correct; it is 1 of the 81 which the committee had made available to it.

Mr. President, I may say this is a typical file; there is nothing unusual about it. I tried to pick out a typical case, not one of the marginal cases, not one of the extremes either way.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I will say that during the 10 days or so that I was at the White House, at no time were all the files there together. The statement was made to us that the files were in use. There would be a pile of files on a large table. But at no time were all the files there.

Mr. McCARTHY. I thank the Senator very much.

Moreover, Mr. President, in connection with the question of whether or not the files were cleaned out, I think I should call attention to a letter—in view of the questions asked by the Senator from Nebraska—which the Senator from Maryland read on the floor of the Senate the other day, as appears on page 10711 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for Thursday, July 20—a letter allegedly from J. Howard McGrath, and addressed to the Senator from Maryland. The letter reads as follows:

MY DEAR SENATOR: At my request the Federal Bureau of Investigation has conducted an examination of the State Department files which the members of your committee have been reviewing. Previously Deputy Attorney General Ford advised you, under date of June 16, 1950, that the Federal Bureau of Investigation had furnished him a copy of all loyalty material which had been furnished the State Department in these cases, that a check had been made under his direction, and that it was found that all of the FBI reports and memoranda which had been furnished the State Department were contained in the file.

I requested the Federal Bureau of Investigation to make a similar investigation of these files, in view of the further question raised several days ago by Senator McCARTHY regarding their completeness. The examination, made on July 3—

That was before the Senate committee had finished its investigation—

by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, discloses that the files contain all FBI reports and memorandums furnished to the department in these cases prior to the time they were turned over to your committee—

And so forth. Mr. President, it will be noted that this letter from J. Howard McGrath says that on July 3 the FBI conducted an investigation and found them complete. Again I call attention to the second paragraph of the letter from J. Edgar Hoover, in which he says that the Federal Bureau of Investigation has made no such examination and therefore is not in a position to make any statement concerning the completeness or incompleteness of the State Department files.

In view of the fact that the date here is rathed important, I cannot believe that the Senator from Maryland purposely misread that to the Senate; I am sure he would not try to deceive the Senate and make it believe that the FBI had made an examination before he had finished viewing the files. Apparently J. Howard McGrath made a mistake—inadvertently, I am sure; but a lot of mistakes have been made.

A minute ago the Senator asked whether the statements I had gotten from the three former employees of the State Department and a fourth, who now is in the State Department, were or were not signed. I now would like to hand to the Senator a copy of the statements, one signed by Paul E. Sullivan, dated July 6, 1950, with the phone number, in his own handwriting; and witnessed by Mr. Surine, who is one of my investigators. Incidentally, Mr. Surine had been with the FBI for about 10 years, and worked on subjects having to do with disclosure of Communists a considerable part of that time.

The second one is signed by Bernie Threadgill, Jr.; and the third one is signed by Francis Eugene O'Brien, dated, and in his own handwriting. And there is a fourth one, from which I have deleted the name, because he is working in the State Department.

The Senator will notice that not only were the statements signed, but each page was signed; and whenever a correction was made, the correction was initialed. So there can be no question that these are the complete statements by these individuals.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, would the Senator say, then, that the Senator from Maryland was in error relative to whether or not the statements were unsigned?

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to permit me to ask him a further question?

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. One of these men is still with the FBI; is that correct?

Mr. McCARTHY. Oh, yes. Let me make clear that the young man who is with the FBI had not been with the FBI at the time he was doing this job.

The young man who is now with the Bureau did not take part in the actual rifling job. Senators will notice that he has drawn a diagram showing the room in which he worked, which was off of the main room in which the house-cleaning job was being done. Senators will notice that his statement is to the effect that the cleaned files were brought to him; that he did not go into the main room, and did not know what was going on there; but what those in that room told him, was that the State Department employees were coming there to help clean out their own files.

I want to make it clear that the other three individuals were members of the crew of eight who did the actual house-cleaning jobs.

Mr. WHERRY. If the Senator will yield further, let me ask once again: The signatures and names are here, and those persons could have been subpenaed and interrogated by the committee relative to the statements made in these affidavits. Is that correct?

Mr. McCARTHY. Absolutely; there is no question about it. In fact, Mr. O'Brien and the other man, the one from the Georgetown Foreign Service School, said they would be glad to come without being subpenaed, and would be glad to give the information.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator. I think he is clearing up at least that error.

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me say to the Senator that I hope to produce additional affidavits covering some of the handling of the files, at a later date.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. LONGER. As I recollect the evidence—and I have a fairly good memory—that was not a job that lasted for 1 or 2 or 3 or 4 days, but it lasted for 6 months. Is that correct?

Mr. McCARTHY. That is correct. Let me read to the Senator, if I may, a typical statement—for instance, take Mr. Sullivan's statement:

JULY 6, 1950.

The following information is given by me freely and voluntarily without any promises whatsoever. I furnish this information because it is the truth and I feel it is my patriotic duty to furnish the facts as I experienced them.

I am living at 1902 North Fifteenth Street, Arlington, Va., at the present time.

In August 1946, I was released from the United States Navy in California. I came to Washington, D. C., and while in Washington, D. C., I was looking for a job. I went into the Walker Johnson Building of State Department at Eighteenth and New York Avenue NW. I talked to a fellow in the State Department by the name of Holcombe. I got a temporary clerical job in the files at the Walker Johnson Building.

These files were the departmental personnel files located in the Walker Johnson Building. I started work in these files in September 1946. When I reported for duty I was told that I would be working on a project on these files. This project had been going on for some time before I started. There were at least eight persons who were working on this project.

I was not formally and specifically instructed as to what the purpose of the project was, but from what I was instructed by the other clerks, I and the other clerks were to go through each personnel file and pull out all derogatory material from the files. In addition to the usual personnel forms, the files contained all kinds of letters, reports, memorandum concerning the individual person. As per instructions I received, all of the clerks on this project were to pull out of the files all matters considered derogatory either morally or politically.

The project was very confused—

I assume it would be—but I and the other clerks pulled out of each personnel file any material which could be considered derogatory. This material was removed and some was thrown in wastebaskets by us and some was thrown in—

And there is a deletion, which he has initialed—

a cardboard box. I don't know what happened to the derogatory material we pulled out from the files, but I do know of my own knowledge that a good lot of it was destroyed.

I do not recall details of each personnel file I examined, but the material I pulled out of the files pertained to either the morals of the person or in some way reflected on his or her loyalty.

By "morals" this young man indicated that anything indicating sexual perversion was taken from the files. I continue:

I recall one thick report on one State Department employee who was accused of being a photographer and a member of some subversive organization which published some sort of news report. This was removed from the file and disposed of.

I worked from September 'till the end of December 1946, working on this file project pulling out and disposing of the derogatory material as per my understanding given me.

I left on December 31, 1946, and this project on the personnel files was still not finished, but my temporary appointment ran out and my employment with the State Department ended.

I can't recall who the official in charge of these files was. I met him only a very few times, but I could easily recognize him if I saw him.

I have read this statement of three pages and the facts are true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

I may say to the Senator that one of the other statements contains the name of the individual who was head of the project. His name was George Copp. This is from the affidavit of Mr. Threadgill, who says:

This project was being performed apparently on some sort of dead line date because George Copp—

At that point there are several deletions which are initialed—who was supervisor over the clerks on this project was often telling me and the others that we had to get the job done and that it had already passed the dead line * * *.

So that Mr. George Copp was head of the project.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LANGER. I am somewhat confused about whether the distinguished Senator was allowed to be present at all times while the committee was interrogating witnesses. Will the Senator be kind enough to enlighten me?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad the Senator asked that question. The answer is "No." As the Senator knows, the usual senatorial practice is that when a Senator is interested in a subject which is before a committee, he is not only allowed to be present, but also allowed to question the witnesses. As the Senator will recall, at the time of the confirmation of the head of the Atomic Energy Commission, Mr. Lilienthal, the very able Senator from Tennessee, who was not a member of the committee, was present and conducted the cross-examination for 1 or 2 weeks. It has long been the practice.

To begin with, I was denied the right to cross-examine—which I thought was a mistake, not because I felt I was more competent potentially as a cross-examiner, but I had been living with this thing for 4 or 5 or 6 months and knew all the background. I felt I could be of some benefit to the committee. For example, when Browder came before the committee, when Frederick Vanderbilt Field, a man who is a professed Communist, who has been financing communistic ventures, who to a great extent financed the publication run by the present Ambassador at Large, Mr. Jessup, I wanted to ask some questions. I wanted to ask Field, for instance, to bring down his financial records so we could see which of the other pet projects of State Department employees was being financed by Communist money. The committee said, "No," but that I could be present. The committee then went into executive session. I asked the chairman whether I would be allowed to attend the executive session. Those were the executive sessions, the Senator will understand, which were being attended by Mr. Lattimore and by his lawyer, Mr. Abe Fortas. Those were executive sessions, it will be understood, attended by a local lawyer, who had no connection with the Senate, and by Mr. Owen Lattimore.

I asked the chairman whether I could attend those sessions. First, his answer was "No," and I told him I would not produce any witnesses, that it would be impossible, that I had enough trouble getting witnesses, as it was. When I went out to see a witness and talked to him, he would at least want to know whether I was to be present to give him some semblance of protection, in view of the browbeating he had seen witnesses get before the committee. The Senator from Maryland said, "Well, yes, you can be present, but you cannot cross-examine."

So the next day, when one of my witnesses was produced—I should not say "my witness," but one of the witnesses I had named was produced—I went into the committee room, and on my way to the room I found the Republican counsel, Mr. Morris, leaving the room. I said, "Where are you going?" He said, "TYDINGS kicked me out."

I said, "Who is in the room?" He said, "Oh, Lattimore and his lawyers are there, and Mr. CONNALLY, I think—and the committee members."

So I went in. I was notified by the Senator from Maryland that I would not be allowed to remain. That was unusual, so I insisted that he put it up to the committee and get a committee vote. I did not think the chairman should take it upon himself to expel another Senator, especially in view of the fact that Mr. Owen Lattimore was there. He refused to accede to my request. He said, "No, you have got to leave." So I left the committee room.

I think that answers the Senator's question. I was not even allowed to be in the room while the witnesses whom I had requested to be present were called and examined.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield further to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield further.

Mr. LANGER. Prior to becoming United States Senator, if I may inquire, how long was the distinguished Senator judge of the district court in the State of Wisconsin?

Mr. McCARTHY. I was technically a judge for about 7 years; actually, I was only on the bench for about 3½ years, because I left the bench and went into the Marine Air Corps.

Mr. LANGER. During that time, I assume, the Senator presided as judge at the trial of a great many lawsuits, did he not?

Mr. McCARTHY. A great many, yes.

Mr. LANGER. Does the Senator believe that, had he been allowed to interrogate and to cross-examine the witnesses, a great many other facts would have been adduced?

Mr. McCARTHY. In answer to that, let me say to the Senator what I said to the committee. I told the Senator from Maryland that if I were allowed to cross-examine Mr. Owen Lattimore and Frederick Vanderbilt Field, they would either indict themselves or perjure themselves, because I had the background information from which we could either bring out the facts that they would have to admit, or else they would have to perjure themselves.

Mr. LANGER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, it will be noted from this report——

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. McFARLAND. Did the Senator furnish that background information to the minority members of the committee?

Mr. McCARTHY. Did I furnish what?

Mr. McFARLAND. The background information which the Senator said he had, and by which he could compel these men to perjure themselves. Did he furnish that same information to the minority members of the committee?

Mr. McCARTHY. I worked very closely with the counsel, Mr. Morris, and while I did not give all information directly to the Senator from Massachusetts, or to the Senator from Iowa, I did discuss all important items of evidence with Mr. Morris, which I understand he passed on to the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Iowa. But let me say that Mr. Morris was not allowed to cross-examine, but only allowed to be in the committee room. The Republican counsel was only allowed to be in the committee room, not allowed to cross-examine. I understand that, after the Senator from Massachusetts had said, and the Senator from Iowa, I believe, said the same thing—and if I am wrong in this, I hope I shall be corrected—"Either the minority counsel will be allowed to cross-examine, or we are through with this farce." Then Mr. Morris was allowed to cross-examine, but the committee hearings did not last very long after that. Mr. Morris was not allowed to cross-examine Mr. Browder. He was not allowed to cross-examine Mr. Field.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I may say that Mr. Morris, the assistant counsel, appointed on behalf of the minority, was not allowed to cross-examine either Mr. Field or Mr. Browder or Mr. Lattimore; which I thought was a very great pity, I may say to the Senator from Arizona, because it would have increased very much the amount of confidence in the committee's findings. The public could feel that the witnesses had been questioned from all viewpoints, and I think it is a great shame that that did not happen. Obviously, Members of the Senate who have their duties to attend to on the floor and in other places, cannot possibly undertake to handle the enormous amount of detail that comes into a work of this kind. They have to be able to work through counsel. One of the serious handicaps in the whole procedure was the fact that not only was the minority counsel not allowed to cross-examine witnesses, but we were denied the use of the committee staff, our own personal staff, and the technical assistance of the FBI.

I yield further to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McFARLAND. As I understand the Senator's answer, he did not furnish this background information to either the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] or the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. McCARTHY. No; that is not correct.

Mr. McFARLAND. Did he or not?

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me say to the very able Senator from Arizona that I am sure he will understand that if a lawyer is working on a case and has been preparing it for a long time, there is no way on God's earth that he can effectively call in someone else to do the job of cross-examination for him and say, "Here, you cross-examine; I will give you the necessary information." Any information that I had was passed on to the minority members through Mr. Morris. But the Senator knows that that does not equip or qualify a man to cross-examine in a case on which I had been working for months. One of the members of the committee, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], whom I consider one of the ablest Senators, has had no legal training. It takes a pretty tough lawyer to make a man like Browder or Field talk. It cannot be done through written questions. The only reason in the world why the Senator from Wisconsin was not allowed to cross-examine was because someone was afraid of the facts. If those men were going to tell the truth, they did not have to be afraid of Senator McCARTHY'S cross-examination. The only reason McCARTHY was denied the right to cross-examine was that someone was afraid of the facts.

Mr. McFARLAND. If I correctly understand the answer of the Senator, although he has not directly answered my question, he did not furnish the information personally to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] or the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER]. The Senate and the world can judge of the ability of the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Iowa. I think they are able Senators and are experienced in cross-examination; but as to that, the Senate and the country can judge. The fact remains that the Senator from Wisconsin did not furnish his background information to them.

Mr. McCARTHY. I will tell the Senator again that all information which I considered pertinent was discussed with the minority counsel. It was done in that fashion because I could not take the time of the Senators; I could not go to see them every day. All information which I considered important was passed on to them through their counsel.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Is the Senator from Wisconsin aware of the fact that while much information was acquired by Mr. Morris, who was assistant counsel, recommended by the minority members, when he attempted to go around and about this part of the country to secure witnesses to prove or to attempt to prove the information which the Senator from Wisconsin had furnished him, the majority members of the subcommittee cut out the exepnse account of Mr. Morris, refused to pay him, and ordered him to cease such activities, namely, going around to pick up witnesses to prove what he wanted to prove in attempting to bring out the facts in connection with the allegations which the Senator from Wisconsin had said could be proved if the evidence were secured? As I understand, Mr. Morris has not received his expenses since March.

Mr. McCARTHY. I understand he has never received his traveling expenses.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I cannot say just when; but the committee refused to pay his expenses, has failed to pay them since sometime last March, and has told him to stop interviewing witnesses in connection with the very evidence which the Senator from Wisconsin said would prove the general matters in connection with the allegations.

Mr. McCARTHY. There is no question about that. I want particularly to invite the attention of my very good friend from Arizona, who is in the majority leader's chair at this time, to the fact that the minority counsel, Mr. Morris, was given information by me and was also given leads, and when he went out to contact witnesses whom we felt should be brought before the committee, the majority members of the committee refused to pay the usual train fare and expenses to which any counsel is entitled, taking the position that Mr. Morris should do only what Mr. Morgan asked him to do.

I think we have all received a pretty good picture of the extent of the ability of Mr. Morgan as a whitewash artist, not only in this case but in the Pearl Harbor case.

In spite of that handicap, Mr. Morris did develop evidence under the leads which I gave him. Some he developed himself; some were given, I assume, by the minority members of the committee. He developed 25 or 30 witnesses whom he wanted called before the committee. I understand that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] asked that the hearings not be concluded and that those witnesses be called. They were important witnesses—witnesses who had valuable information on Communist infiltration in the State Department. The Tydings-McMahon half of the committee refused to permit the witnesses to be called.

May I ask the Senator from Iowa if that is not substantially correct?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. There was no formal vote of refusal, but there was a failure to call those witnesses or to pursue the list of witnesses I had offered to produce for the committee.

Mr. McCARTHY. I thank the Senator.

To answer the question of the Senator from Arizona more fully, not only were we denied the right to cross-examine witnesses but the right to call witnesses was denied. It is rather difficult to find any explanation of this action on the part of the chairman of the subcommittee when he said to the minority, "Even though there are 25 or 30 witnesses who can give valuable information as to traitors, Communists, and fellow travelers in our State Department, we shall refuse to call them, and will call only those witnesses who will tend to disprove the statements which the Senator from Wisconsin has made."

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Will the Senator tell us if he knows whether Mr. Morgan, who presumably gave orders to Mr. Morris, had any connection with the Dean Acheson firm?

Mr. McCARTHY. I frankly do not know.

Mr. LANGER. From the speech of the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], I understood Mr. Morgan had some connection, directly or indirectly, with that firm.

Mr. McCARTHY. As I recall the speech of the Senator from Indiana, I think he referred to a possible connection with the Seth Richardson-Joe Davies firm. I have not investigated anyone except the Communists and fellow travelers in the State Department. I did not take the trouble to check the background of the investigators. I know Mr. Morgan was with Seth Richardson as a member of the whitewash combine in the Pearl Harbor matter.

Mr. LANGER. In the speech of the junior Senator from Indiana he stated that the father-in-law of the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee was also a member of the firm.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think the Senator may have misunderstood.

Mr. LANGER. I mean the firm of which Mr. Davies is a member.

Mr. McCARTHY. Oh, yes. Mr. Joe Davies is the father-in-law of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. Morgan was either directly or indirectly connected with the Davies firm?

Mr. McCARTHY. I cannot express an opinion pro or con on that, because, frankly, I do not know. I have taken no time to investigate Mr. Morgan. I think he is a very good whitewash artist. He should be rewarded by the administration, and undoubtedly will be.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. In order to prove the case of the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] and the point which the Senator from Wisconsin is making, I think it is highly important to call attention to page 10818 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] inserted in the RECORD at that point several pages—I forget how many—

Mr. McCARTHY. Forty pages.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Massachusetts inserted 40 pages of the hearings before the subcommittee which had been deleted from the printed transcript of the hearings either by Mr. Morgan or the committee. Does the Senator recall reading at page 10818 the portion of the colloquy in which the Senator from Maryland is attempting to have the committee get out a report. I read as follows:

> Senator TYDINGS. That is all right. I am willing to start on my report. What I would like to do is get it here and tell you what I am going to say, and if you don't agree with it, make one of your own, but I want a report on the work. I think our work is pretty well concluded, if you want my opinion.
> Senator HICKENLOOPER. I don't think it has even started, Mr. Chairman.
> Senator TYDINGS. You disagree with me?
> Senator HICKENLOOPER. I disagree with you.
>
> Senator TYDINGS. But I disagree with you, so there we are.
> Mr. MORRIS—

Mr. Morris is the assistant counsel of the committee. He has been referred to by the distinguished Senator from Iowa and also by the Senator from Wisconsin.

> Mr. MORRIS. Senator, may I mention just once case here?
> Senator TYDINGS. Mr. Morris, we can mention cases from now until doomsday.
> Mr. MORRIS. It is in the record, Senator. May I just finish?
> Senator TYDINGS. Of course, you are not a member of the committee. When we want counsel to speak, we will ask them, but I am going to let you speak. However, that is a matter for the committee to decide.
> Senator LODGE. I would like to hear what he has to say.
>
> Mr. MORRIS. There is a case of a man named Theodore Geiger. He has been an employee of the State Department. He is now one of Paul Hoffman's top assistants. He is doing work that is quasi-State Department in character. I have gone and gotten some witnesses together who will testify that he was a member of the same Communist Party unit as they were, and I think that we would be delinquent if in the face of this evidence that is now on the record——
> Senator TYDINGS. Why didn't you tell us this? Why did you wait until this hour to tell me?
>
> Mr. MORRIS. I am not waiting Senator. One day Senator GREEN made me a witness and I put it all in the record.
> Senator TYDINGS. You haven't told me about it. This is the first I have heard about it.
>
> Mr. MORRIS. Senator, I assume that you are aware of everything in the record.
> Senator TYDINGS. No. There are some things in the record I haven't been able to read.
> Mr. MORRIS. Certainly Mr. Morgan knows it. I have mentioned it several times to him.

The Mr. Morgan referred to here is the man who is whitewashing this investigation.

I shall not read further from the colloquy, because it is unnecessary to do so in order to prove the point made by the distinguished Senator from Iowa that here was the minority counsel who had introduced testimony that should have been investigated, but was not permitted to be investigated by the chairman. The important point is that when they printed the hearings they deleted 40 pages from the record. I say to the Senator that the Senator from Iowa has proved his point that he had no cooperation from the Senator from Maryland in trying to run down evidence which the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin had furnished. Here is a case where the minority counsel went out and got evidence, it was introduced into the record, but the distinguished chairman of the committee did not even let it be brought to the attention of the members of the committee. Then he attempted to delete it from the record that comes to the Senate. It was done either by the committee or by Mr. Morgan. With the experience I have had with him, I would not put anything past Mr. Morgan. I will say that it was either Mr. Morgan or the committee, and that fact proves the point made by the Senator from Iowa.

Finally the Senator from Maryland said:

Senator TYDINGS. Turn it over to the FBI or do something else with it. I would like to get a decision here. We don't want to waste this afternoon.

That was said by the chairman of the committee, who says his work is completed and there is no need for further investigation. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin if he knows who left out the 40 pages. Was it the chairman of the committee, the committee, or Mr. Morgan?

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not know.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. Morgan?

Mr. McCARTHY. Morgan was in charge, but of course under the orders of Mr. TYDINGS.

Mr. WHERRY. At any rate, whoever left out the 40 pages is attempting to cover up evidence that was furnished by the minority counsel, who was deprived of submitting his evidence to the committee.

Mr. McCARTHY. Undoubtedly someone on the staff or on the committee thought they would be able to keep it from the eyes of the public. The attempt seems so childish, because certainly it must have been evident that the Senator from Massachusetts would find that 40 pages of important testimony had been left out of the report of the hearings.

I may say for the Senator's benefit, in connection with Mr. Geiger, that the day after the President made the statement that there were no Communists in the Government, we received a telephone call from one of the men who were in the same Communist cell as Mr. Geiger. He stated that he was rather appalled to read the statement made by the President and that he would be glad to come down to testify. One gets so many tips that one does not always place too much stock in some of them. However, I asked Mr. Morris to check into it, and he did, and found the informant reliable. Incidentally that is one of the trips for which the committee will not pay his expenses. He developed, I think, either three or four witnesses who were in Mr. Geiger's Communist cell. They said, "We will come down and testify before the committee as to Mr. Geiger's communistic activities."

Mr. President, here is something that would be humorous, if it were not so tragic. A letter was written to one of the top officials of the ECA. The letter will be produced either here or in the House of Representatives. I believe it will be produced in the House. The official was asked if he would check on this man Geiger and he was told that we had this information about Geiger. Would the Senate like to know what the official's answer was? He wrote back and said, "I called Mr. Geiger in, I looked him straight in the eye, and I said, 'Mr. Geiger, are you a Communist?' Mr. Geiger said, 'No'." That ended his investigation.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not want to belabor the point. However, the distinguished Senator from Iowa said that minority counsel had not been paid since March and that he had been told to take his orders from Mr. Morgan, which meant that he could not investigate evidence furnished by the Senator from Wisconsin. Is it not true that the committee, or Mr. Morgan, directed an investigation of the Senator from Wisconsin, and that they paid the transportation of the investigator to go to West Virginia and to Utah, trailing the Senator all around the country in an attempt to get evidence to smear the Senator from Wisconsin? I am sure that bill was paid.

Mr. McCARTHY. They sent their investigator to every hotel at which I had stayed on the trip. They got evidence as to where I stayed, and they got evidence as to the hotel room I occupied. Incidentally, they found that I had stayed alone. [Laughter.] They got affidavits from all the country. They went to Reno, and Las Vegas, Nev., Salt Lake City, and to West Virginia. The procedure followed was rather unusual. Perhaps a crowd of a thousand or so persons had heard my speech in West Virginia. The investigators went around and contacted a sizable number of the persons who had heard the speech and asked them, "Did McCARTHY say 57, or did he say 205?" If the prospective witness said I had mentioned 57, they said to him, "We don't want you." They then would go to the next person and ask him the same question. They were unable to find one person who had attended the meeting who would give them the answer they wanted. How many days and nights were spent in that investigation I do not know. If Mr. Morris had been willing to go out and investigate me, his expenses would have been paid.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LANGER. Is it not true that they were asking questions of the Senator's brothers and sister?

Mr. McCARTHY. Not a committee investigator. However, the President has had assigned to the White House—and I had not planned to go into this—for special duty two men for the purpose of trying to collate all the bad information they could get about me. Those men are paid by the taxpayers.

If they had only come to me, I could have helped them out. I know more about McCARTHY than does anyone else. I could tell them that McCARTHY does not claim to be either a great saint or a great sinner. I can give them all the information they want. But I doubt the correctness of spending public funds for an investigation of McCARTHY, unless and until the Senate directs such an investigation—not that I am worried about it.

Mr. President, it will be noted from the FBI report that this State Department official's wife lived with another woman who according to the FBI was a member of the Communist Party and who openly admitted membership in the Communist Party. It will also be noted at the Loyalty Board hearing, which I shall later discuss, Mrs. X admitted that her two roommates were probably members of the Communist Party. One roommate was Mrs. Ades, the wife of the man who ran for Governor of Maryland on the Communist ticket, and who now lives in Baltimore. I note in my prepared remarks that the other works now in the Department of Agriculture. I stand corrected on that. The other roommate of this lady, who was named as a Communist Party member, so far as I can determine, is not in the Department of Agriculture today. She was there very recently. Whether she is in some other Government department I do not know.

We therefore have a case in which the FBI files show an important State Department employee admitting to an FBI undercover agent that he was a member of the Communist Party in Europe and in this country. We also find that this agent has been found completely reliable by the FBI over a period of years; that his job was to inform the FBI of the names of the members of the Communist Party and their activities. That was his task. We find his unqualified statement that both this State Department official and his wife were long members of the party and active therein, and that the wife was also active in the Young Communist League.

I call the attention of Senators to the dates on this report. They will find the report was submitted in September 1948. This was after the Eightieth Congress had adjourned, and it was about 8 months after the investigation by the House Committee on Appropriations, which was discussed by the Senator from Maryland the other day. Senators will note from this report that none of the investigations of the individual agents was conducted earlier than July 1948.

I merely mention these dates to show that the Senator from Maryland was again rather badly mistaken when he said that all these files were old files that had been investigated by the Eightieth Congress, and that for that reason, of course, they were valueless. This part of the files was produced after the Eightieth Congress had adjourned. I do not think that is important, except in view of the Senator's statement. I do not subscribe to the theory that a man is cleared merely because he has been previously investigated. I do not subscribe to the theory that if he was a Communist in 1946, 1947, and 1948 that is not important, and that it is only important if it is proved he is a Communist in 1950. We must take his entire background, running back for years, to find out how dangerous he is. That is why the file stripping in 1946 was such a great disservice to the country.

It would seem, therefore, that there could be no question whatsoever about the fact that here we have a clear-cut case of membership in the Communist Party by both a State Department official and his wife. There is other testimony in the file, testimony gathered by a total of nine different special agents of the FBI. Much of the balance of the evidence, however, is largely opinion evidence. Some of it is favorable to Mr. X and some of it unfavorable. Most of it would be considered in a court as negative evidence, which courts and also committees, which have a working knowledge of the law, consider of little value as against positive testimony.

If one or two reputable witnesses testified that they actually saw John Brown committing a crime, it does not make much difference how many witnesses may come into court and say they did not see him commit it. I use that as an example. In this case we have a fellow member of the Communist Party working for the FBI who says, "I saw this State Department official at the Communist meetings. I know he joined." Against that there are some people who say, "We did not see him join. We do not know whether he is a member or not."

One of the other individuals named in this report as a member of the Communist Party is also working in the State Department. I have the 1950 telephone directory, and I am going to read the file I have in my hand very shortly. I see the junior Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] present. I call his attention to the full report without names deleted and to the State Department telephone directory which shows that another individual named by the FBI as a Communist was working in the State Department as of January 1 this year, and I call attention to the fact that my staff called the State Department as of yesterday, and he was still working there.

Mr. President, I am forwarding this complete file to the House Committee on Un-American Activities, in the hope that it may take note of what is disclosed. This does not indicate that I am not in sympathy with the desire of some of my colleagues to obtain the appointment of a bipartisan commission to investigate this subject further. However, I frankly do not have any hope whatsoever that there is any possibility of getting such a commission, because there would be danger that such a commission might make a fair inquiry, and if the administration wanted a fair inquiry, it could have been had. A committee could have been appointed here in the Senate which would have made such an inquiry. Therefore I am forwarding this file to the House Committee on Un-American Activities, in the hope that they may do as excellent a job on this case as they did on Mr. Remington.

Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the House Committee on Un-American Activities to the fact that we have here a clear-cut case of perjury, on several counts. Before the loyalty board, as appears on page 136 of the report of the investigation of the loyalty board, which I shall come to in a moment, this man testified that he was not then and never had been a member of the Communist Party.

I call the attention of the House committee to the fact that we have almost uncontradictable evidence that he was not only a member, but an active member. So we here have a clear-cut case of perjury, and it seems that the most effective way of getting these Communists is to get them on charges of perjury.

There is also another count of perjury upon which this man could and should be indicted. That is this: His landlord made an affidavit to the effect that he and his wife had been living for some time with one well known Communist and another suspected of being a Communist. Their names are in the files I have handed to the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND]. We find that this man lived for quite some period of time with this high State Department employee. Does the Senate note the significance of that? We have an affidavit to the effect that this State Department employee lived with a man who was a member of the Communist Party. When this State Department employee appeared before the loyalty board he testified that he knew this Communist "only recently" and "only casually."

Mr. President, let us now come to the picture of what happened when the FBI submitted this report. It was received in the Civil Service Commission in early September, and forwarded to the State Department. The State Department called for a loyalty board hearing. While the board, by a split decision, cleared him, it is rather interesting to note the reasoning followed by the members of the loyalty board. They followed the reasoning that if a Communist is clever enough so he can fool any of his coworkers, and they come in and say "We think he is loyal," then he should not be booted out. In other words, if he has been able to deceive his coworkers he should not be booted out. The board apparently operates on the theory that unless the accused wears a long beard and looks like a Communist is ordinarily painted, so that from that picture he would be labeled by everyone as being a Communist he should be cleared for Government service.

Mr. President, I have before me a letter written by a lawyer to the loyalty board. He was Dean Acheson's law partner. Dean Acheson's law firm represented this man before the loyalty board. This letter is interesting. Putting it mildly, it reveals a very disturbing situation. From this letter, it appears that the original loyalty board charge against this State Department official was that, "he acted in the interest of another government." That was the charge. In other words, that he was an espionage agent. However, after Mr. Acheson's law partner was hired, and before the hearing, this charge was dropped and a lesser charge made against him, namely, that he was a member of organizations cited by the Attorney General as coming within the purview of Executive Order No. 9825.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. So that the record may be clear, can the Senator indicate the date on which the law partner of the Acheson firm acted in behalf of this person?

Mr. McCARTHY. I shall be glad to. I may say I do not know the date he was originally retained, but I can give the dates of some letters which indicate when he was active.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Can the Senator give us approximately the date?

Mr. McCARTHY. There is a letter dated September 17, 1948, from which I will quote. He was charged, (1) with belonging to the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, later known as the Civil Rights Congress, and (2) the Communist Party of America and in Europe. In other words, after Acheson's law partner came into the picture, they dropped the charge that he was serving another country.

The board also charged him with close association with eight known Communists. Note this. The board charged him with close association with eight known Communists including his own wife. He was charged with close association with his wife, who was a well known Communist. I have heard many things about the State Department, but I thought it was still proper over there to closely associate with one's wife. Whether he disproved that or not I do not know. But that was one of the charges.

Let me quote from this lawyer's letter—he was Attorney Westwood, incidentally, of Acheson's law firm—written to the loyalty board:

I am returning to you herewith a letter preferring charges which was sent to Mr.—

Naming the individual—

by mistake. This letter is dated September 17, 1948. It contains a charge that Mr.—

Naming the State Department official—

Acted in the interest of another government. When Mr. X—

We will call him Mr. X for the time being—inquired of you concerning this matter you referred him to Mr. Moreland. Subsequently on September 22, Mr. Moreland advised Mr. X that this letter was a mistake and requested its return in order that it might be destroyed.

In other words, by mistake, it named a State Department employee as a Communist spy. They did not learn of that mistake until Acheson's law firm got into the picture. Listen to this. The attorney said in his letter:

I am sure you can appreciate our concern that the first letter be destroyed, and we would appreciate your acknowledgment that the original of that letter (returned herewith)—

That is the original letter in which the first charge is made—and we would appreciate your acknowledgment that the original of that letter (returned herewith) and all carbons have indeed been destroyed.

Mr. President, I can appreciate their concern about that. This, of course, is not the first time that the Acheson law firm has been successful in defending

State Department employees accused of communistic activities. For example, after Elizabeth Bentley had testified under oath that Lauchlin Currie was aiding her Soviet spy ring, Mr. Currie was represented before the House Committee on Un-American Activities by whom? By none other than the Red dean himself—Dean Acheson.

I might say in that connection, that while we do not have a complete list, we find that Acheson's law firm represented, and successfully in most of the cases, some 30 individuals accused of subversive activities and communistic connections. Do Senators note the significance of that? The law firm, the law partners of the boss of the State Department loyalty board, the law partners of the man who can hire and fire the members of that loyalty board, have appeared about 30 times in loyalty board hearings to defend men accused of communistic activities. And this case is one excellent example.

Alger Hiss was represented, not so successfully, before the House committee by John F. Davis. However, Davis stated to the committee that he was being assisted by Fontaine Bradley, another member of the Acheson law firm.

It is perhaps needless to comment upon the unusual circumstance of Mr. Acheson's law partner's success in having the charge against this man reduced, even though the FBI had produced a clear-cut, irrefutable, uncontradictable case against him, and as a result of the activities of Acheson's law firm that man is today, at this very moment, in the State Department in an important position.

Mr. President, as I previously stated in answer to some of my friends who have been asking when I intend to answer the committee's report, when I intend to answer the speech by the Senator from Maryland, I have no intention whatsoever of answering the committee's report or answering the Senator's speech. I am not going to indulge in a name-calling contest with them. This task is far too important for that. However, they will be answered by the production of facts from time to time.

The fact that the committee thinks this matter has been closed does not mean it has been closed. I say that so as to assure the people of the United States, the tens of thousands who have been writing to me, urging that we not succumb to the pressure being put on by the Democratic majority, but that we continue this investigation and persist in our efforts to get out of the State Department the individuals who are responsible for having American soldiers die today, if you please.

I shall have to admit that I do not think there is any great possibility of actually removing these men from the State Department, no matter how they are exposed. I assume that the man covered by this file probably will continue with the State Department, and probably will get a promotion, after the exposure. However, I feel that by means of the bright light put on their activities we have perhaps slowed them up. I think perhaps we have slowed up Mr. Lattimore, the State Department's adviser and Mr. Acheson's good friend.

The Senate will recall that up until recently the State Department was following Lattimore's advice. The Senate will recall that on June 17 of last year Mr. Lattimore became so brazen that he quit giving secret advice, and in an article in the paper Compass bragged about the fact that in China the State Department had been successful in allowing China to fall to communism, and at the same time not letting it be known that we had pushed her. Those are the words of the State Department's adviser; those are the words of the man whom Acheson last August asked to submit a secret memorandum to guide Ambassador Jessup. Lattimore goes on to say—and this is a public statement—that now our problem in Korea is to do the same thing which the State Department did so successfully in China; that we should let South Korea fall to communism and sell the South Koreans into slavery, but not let the world know that we pushed her.

DOMINANT COMMUNIST CHINA-STATE DEPARTMENT GROUP

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. MALONE. Would Mr. Lattimore be a part of the group that evidently was referred to by Mr. Dulles at a luncheon meeting with Republican Senators—according to two different columnists—when he is reported to have said that a certain group in the ascendancy in the State Department thought a dose of communism would be good for Asia?

Mr. McCARTHY. I thank the Senator for that question. I do not believe I am violating any confidence when I quote what Mr. Dulles said at that meeting. I do not recall that there was any request that it be off the record. Was there?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but I should like to say that I was not at the particular meeting the Senator attended.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am sorry.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I had attended one, 1 or 2 days previously, I think. However, it was my impression—and I merely wish to raise the point at this time—that it was an off-the-record meeting with Mr. Dulles, to discuss frankly with those on this side of the aisle some of the information which he had received as a result of his recent trip to the Far East.

Since there was no stenographic reporter present, we might not be doing a service to Mr. Dulles or to ourselves, unless we are very accurate in regard to the statements which were made. I know the Senator from Wisconsin would try to be; but I also know that we are getting into a field where there might be some misunderstanding. I merely mention that by way of general information.

Mr. McCARTHY. I thank the Senator.

I say that I have not discussed that meeting, not knowing whether it was on or off the record. However, the newspapers have carried stories as to what occurred at the meeting.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Nevada was repeating what columnists have said.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is correct.

Mr. MALONE. Which, as a matter of fact, since it has been made public both of us know to be accurate.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes.

Mr. MALONE. How the columnists got it is another story.

But inasmuch as it has been made public, I merely asked the question.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I wish to make an observation. Of course, the Senator from Wisconsin can exercise his own judgment in regard to this matter, but let me say that sometimes, as a result of meetings in the Armed Services Committee or some other committee, columnists may—by guesswork or otherwise—produce a story which may contain a part of what has taken place in the committee meeting. If by chance that should deal with security questions, information about which would be of value to the enemy, the fact that that was either officially confirmed or denied on the floor of the Senate of the United States by Senators who were there, would give other persons information which they necessarily would not have from perhaps a partially accurate report by columnists.

The Senator from Wisconsin, who has had long service for his country, both in the Marines and otherwise, of course is fully cognizant of the implications of having someone give either confirmation or denial to a speculative story.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I may say that I have no intention of discussing what was said by Mr. Dulles regarding a military situation in any area of the world.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. MALONE. In view of the fact that nothing about this has been stated on the floor of the Senate, or no report has been made here as to what happened, other than the statement by newspapermen that they thought a dose of communism would be good for China, and that since the Communists have since gained complete control of China, and also of North Korea, and in view of the fact that North Korea is on the move with the result that it requires a war on an all-out scale to remove them, it seems to me it is time that the subject is discussed on the Senate floor.

Mr. McCARTHY. I agree with the Senator, and I am inclined to discuss it.

Do I correctly understand that the Senator from California thought the meeting held on the previous day was off the record, and that Senators were not supposed to discuss it?

Mr. KNOWLAND. As I said, I did not attend the meeting the Senator from Wisconsin attended.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLAND. However, I understand that there were two meetings, and the only reason there were two was because the room would not accommodate all the Senators at the same time. The meeting to which I was invited with a large number of other Senators, and at which I understand substantially the same material was discussed, was an off-the-record meeting, so that Mr. Dulles could frankly discuss with the Members on this side of the aisle the situation in the Far East. That was certainly true so far as the meeting which I attended is concerned, which I think was 2 days ahead of the meeting which the Senator attended.

Mr. McCARTHY. I did not so understand our meeting, but in view of the further fact that the Senator feels that that was the understanding at the previous meeting, I am going to ask unanimous consent——

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator from Michigan came in late, having been at another meeting. The Senator from Michigan happened to be at both meetings. It was his understanding that only Mr. Dulles' talk was off the record, if that has any bearing. I heard the Senator from California state that he was at the first meeting, and that according to his understanding both meetings were off the record, although the Senator from Wisconsin has seen a column purporting to give a synopsis or really a statement of what took place at the meeting. But the Senator from Michigan understood it was off the record.

Mr. McCARTHY. I wish to thank the Senator. In view of the fact that it had been discussed rather freely in the press, I thought we could discuss it here, because it was such an important matter—a matter of life and death. However, under the circumstances, I ask unanimous consent to have stricken from the RECORD any remarks which tend to give a picture of what occurred at this meeting with Mr. Dulles.

Mr. McMAHON. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, regardless of what Mr. Dulles or anyone else said—I do not take any one man as my final authority on this subject—there is no doubt, there can be no possible doubt, that there was and still is within the State Department a group who feel that a dose of communism—that is, of Communist Government—would be a good thing for Asia. We followed Lattimore's advice in China; we followed Lattimore's advice in Korea, until a very, very late date. As the Senate knows, we voted a total of $75,000,000, more than a year ago, in connection with the arms implementation program, to provide military assistance to the anti-Communist forces in Asia. Even though such assistance was voted almost unanimously, as I recall, by the Senate and House, and although the law was signed by the President without a word of protest, the State Department under that group of untouchables, that group who think that a dose of communism or Communist Government is good for some countries, have succeeded in making sure that not one ounce of gunpowder, not one bullet would reach the only major anti-Communist arm in the east, which is the army of Chiang Kai-shek.

Then, later, the Senate voted the sum of $27,600,000 for Korea, Iran and the Philippines. $10,300,000, as I recall, was set aside for military aid to South Korea. That was done last year. As the Senate will recall, that action again was almost unanimous. The President signed the law without a word of protest. Then what happened? Why did not South Korea get tanks? Why did she not get guns? Why did she not get airplanes? Why, after $10,000,000 was appropriated by the Senate, do we find that only $200 was actually spent? That was spent in connection with some wire which has not arrived in Korea yet.

SEVENTH FLEET ORDERED TO STOP NATIONALIST CHINA'S INTERFERENCE WITH ENGLAND'S SHIPPING WAR SUPPLIES TO COMMUNIST CHINA

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MALONE. Does the Senator connect the order given to the Seventh Fleet of the United States to prevent Nationalist China from interfering with the commerce or in any way interfering with the Communist Government on the mainland of China, with the fact that that would prevent the Nationalist Government from interfering with or stopping or attempting to stop the normal trade relations between England and Communist China, to which England admittedly, until a few days ago, was shipping petroleum?

Finally, under great pressure of public sentiment here and elsewhere, the shipment of petroleum was stopped—at least, it was so stated—but England is still continuing to send fabricated and manufactured goods into Communist China, which action is in reality keeping the Communists supplied with material which they can send, as they undoubtedly are doing, to North Korea, which material can be used in the war against American boys and girls now in Korea. This commerce is continuing, and our Seventh Fleet has orders to stop the Nationalists from interfering with the regular business of the Communists—is it in our interest to protect England in shipping war supplies to our enemies?

Mr. McCARTHY. I think the Senator raises a good point. He refers to that part of the Presidential order to the Seventh Fleet, ordering it to make sure that Chiang Kai-shek's forces take no military action against the mainland.

Mr. MALONE. That is correct.

Mr. McCARTHY. As the Senator knows, this part of the order was the brainchild of Dean Acheson. As the Senator will recall, when it was suggested that we aid Formosa to prevent the creation of an entire Red Pacific, Dean Acheson at that time referred to it as a "silly venture." That was the day, the Senator will recall, that he referred to the Communist victories in China as "the dawning of a new day." So he has been adamant in attempting to prevent any aid to Formosa. When the President made the about-face and said, "We will send the Seventh Fleet to prevent an invasion of Formosa," then the Acheson crowd, while temporarily defeated, and while temporarily thrown into confusion, began to work. They succeeded in getting an order preventing Chiang in any way from interfering with the commerce of Red China. What effect has that had? The Senator spent considerable time in World War I as a combat engineer. Combining his background of experience with the news which is coming in today, the Senator knows that one of the reasons for the previous inability of the Communists to invade the island stepping stones to Formosa has been due to the fact that Chiang's air force has been able to keep the Communists from congregating enough small shipping and marshaling their forces on the mainland. So what we actually have today because of that Acheson order is that we have the Seventh Fleet protecting the Communists so that they can concentrate their forces and marshal their shipping along the coast.

The results are already becoming apparent. The Senator has read in the press that the Communists are starting an all-out attack on some of the island stepping stones to the mainland. What will happen? What will happen when Chiang's forces start to protect, through air action, their island defenses? I do not know.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McCARTHY. But that part of the order was a tremendous service to the Communists in China. If, of course, the Seventh Fleet stays there and actually makes an all-out attempt to protect Formosa, that will more than offset the temporary advantage which the Communists are today getting along the shore.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MALONE. We would naturally expect, inasmuch as there has been war between the Communists, sponsored by Russia, according to our own administration, and the Nationalists, and they have now won in China and have established their government in China, that naturally, they would make war on any island they thought would be advantageous to them. We would expect that.

OUR ALLIES FURNISHING WAR SUPPLIES TO COMMUNISTS

The thing which we normally would not expect is that our ally, England, would continue normal trade in fabricated and manufactured goods necessary to keep the troops in Korea supplied with such goods not available elsewhere, and that, further, we would order the Seventh Fleet not to allow Chiang Kai-shek to interfere with such shipments.

Does the Senator understand that is what is happening, with normal trade necessary to supply the front line army and the army behind the lines?

Mr. McCARTHY. As I followed the Senator's question, this is his position, that one of the things the Chiang air force was doing was to prevent the flow of British oil into areas where it could be used to keep the tanks of the North Koreans operating. I think it is fully admitted that British oil was keeping those tanks running. Up to the time the Seventh Fleet was ordered to prevent Chiang Kai-shek from operating between Formosa and the mainland, he was accomplishing the stoppage of at least a part of the volume of British oil. I gather the Senator's position is that since the order to the Seventh Fleet there is no one to blockade the Communist forces and to keep out the British oil which they are using in their tanks.

Mr. MALONE. That is the position. We now understand that England has stopped, at least temporarily, the shipping of petroleum into the Communist area, but she is continuing to ship fabricated goods which the Senator knows, from his experience in the Marine Corps in World War II, are absolutely indispensable to keep an army on the march. So we would expect our normal enemies to gain more ground, but we would hardly expect the particular ally, to whom we are furnishing $1,500,000,000 a year to create industry in their own countries, to ship manufactured and processed goods direct to Russia and to the iron-curtain countries, which are no doubt finding their way to Korea or wherever they are needed, with our allies' trademarks still on the goods. It is hardly understandable, to put it mildly.

Mr. McCARTHY. I thank the Senator. I wish to say, not in specific answer to his question, but with reference to the general situation, that I believe any fair-minded man, any man of average intelligence, who has a bit of horse sense, will admit that so long as the Acheson crowd is in the State Department, they will attempt to sabotage every effort we make to stop communism in Asia. As Lattimore said, "Let them fall, but do not let it appear that we pushed them." That is why the Red Dean and others make speeches against communism in general, while at the same time thrusting the dagger into the back of all anti-Communists in the East. They either do not realize what they are doing—and I do not think that is possible—or else they are trying to create a Red Asia and a Red Pacific Ocean which will wash our western shores.

OUR ALLIES ASSIST COMMUNIST CHINO-RUSSIA AND IRON CURTAIN COUNTRIES

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I gladly yield.

Mr. MALONE. Why confine it to China? For 2½ years we have furnished to the 16 Marshall-plan countries goods, industrial equipment, and money to better equip them for industrial production.

On March 4, 1948, the junior Senator from Nevada placed in the RECORD one treaty made by England with Russia covering the equipment being furnished Russia, and there are now 96 trade treaties between the 16 Marshall-plan countries and Russia, and the iron-curtain countries, furnishing them everything conceivable that would be needed to fight world war III. Why confine it to China?

Mr. McCARTHY. I thank the Senator for his contribution.

Mr. President, at this time I have several documents which I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD, to appear at the conclusion of my remarks. One of them is an editorial from my home-town paper, the Appleton Post Crescent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. MUNDT. With reference to what the Senator from Wisconsin has said regarding shipments to southern Korea, I should like to ask him whether he has made any study of the possible relationship of W. K. Remington and those associated with him with regard to shipments or the withholding of shipments to southern Korea. My reason for asking the question is that when the junior Senator from South Dakota was a member of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, somewhat over 2 years ago, and the committee was going into the case of Remington, we found him at that time in the Department of Commerce in the strategic position of determining what kind of military equipment and machine tools should be exported from the United States to Russia. Subsequently, as the Senator will recall, he was removed from the Department of Commerce, then cleared by the loyalty board, and reemployed by the Department of Commerce. So I wonder whether the Senator from Wisconsin has explored the possibility that the little cell he established there might be responsible for the withholding of military aid which for eight long months failed to reach Korea after being appropriated for by the Congress.

Mr. McCARTHY. I have made no detailed study of it, because that was impossible; but one of the reasons why I named Remington in the list of 81 persons was because he was working so closely with the State Department. I think it would be impossible for me, without the power of subpena, to tie down the specific individuals who were responsible for the sabotage. But, certainly, it was that small group in the Department of Commerce and in the State Department.

Incidentally, I want to invite attention to the fact that the State Department official whose file was given the Senate today is working on the question of exports to Russian satellite nations.

Mr. MUNDT. If the Senator will yield further, when the House Committee on Un-American Activities originally went into the Remington case, he was at that time largely engaged in authorizing the shipment of grinding tools and machine tools to Russia, which at that time was Russia's most conspicuous weakness. He was associated with a former resident of the great State of Wisconsin—an unfrocked preacher from Wisconsin. The situation became so bad that a labor union in Rochester, N. Y., went on strike and refused to manufacture armaments for Russia then being authorized for shipment by these two characters in the Commerce Department, who were later cleared by the loyalty board, as a prelude to being indicted by the grand jury.

I was wondering whether in his careful investigation of this case the Senator from Wisconsin had been able to determine why it was that for eight long months these shipments were withheld from the South Koreans. There must have been a studied effort on the part of someone. It could not have merely happened. It could not be merely an example of Government red tape or bureaucratic lethargy. It would seem to me to have been a deliberate effort on the part of someone to deny to the South Koreans the equipment which they need so badly today. It was equipment which Congress had voted in October and which the Koreans had not received in any degree at all up to June. Could the Senator from Wisconsin shed any light on that sordid chapter of American history?

Mr. McCARTHY. The only light I can shed on it is that when the Acheson crowd in the State Department, with their friends in the Commerce Department, decide that aids which Congress votes are not going to get to certain nations, they simply do not get there. However, the situation has existed longer than 8 months. We have an example of it in Formosa. Congress voted $75,000,000 for aid to Formosa, over the opposition of Mr. Acheson, who said it was a silly venture. However Acheson had the last word. Congress appropriated $75,000,000, and the President signed the bill, but Mr. Acheson's crowd had the last word. Because of their efforts not one penny's worth of material got to Formosa. I cannot pin it down to any one individual. It is the group to whom I have referred.

Mr. MUNDT. Is the Senator from Wisconsin aware of the fact that when the first Marshall aid program was authorized the House Foreign Affairs Committee, of which I was a member, over the vigorous protest of the Department of State wrote a new title into the bill providing aid for what was then Nationalist China, and that in conference between the Senate and House conferees of the Foreign Relations and Foreign Affairs committees, on which the junior Senator from South Dakota sat, representative of the State Department protested vigorously against that type of aid. However, the Senate receded and the position of the House was sustained. The bill as passed contained the so-called Chinese title. Despite the fact that Congress had again spoken, this time with respect to giving military and economic aid to Nationalist China, that aid was also withheld deliberately by someone in the State Department, and it failed to reach Chiang Kai-shek until he was practically on his last legs and almost ready to evacuate the mainland and proceed to Formosa. Is the Senator aware of that sequence of events?

That is not mere happenchance. The American public has not been told the whole story. It has not been told that deliberately time after time aid which had been voted by Congress over the opposition of the State Department was withheld and not delivered either to Nationalist China, Formosa, or Southern Korea.

Mr. McCARTHY. I thank the Senator for his remarks. The public will never be told so long as committees like the Tydings-McMahon committee are assigned to the job of digging out the facts. I was tremendously disturbed, surprised, and disappointed by what I saw and heard on the floor of the Senate last Thursday. The task of digging out Communists, traitors, and saboteurs should not be the task of any political party. It should not be the task of either the Republicans or the Democrats. It is a job for all Americans. From the moral support, the letters, and encouragement which I have received from Democrats throughout the country it seems to me that those loyal Democrats should have deserved something better than what we saw on the floor of the Senate last week. I thought perhaps that at least one Democratic Senator—at least one—would stand up and be counted and say, "I am not going to put myself into the Tydings-McMahon-Morgan group." I was very happy to see that some Democratic Senators at least did not have the stomach to come here and take part in what went on. We saw a most unfortunate spectacle last week—unfortunate not only for the Democratic Party, but for the Nation. For the first time we saw the Democratic Party line up solidly and effectively label itself as the party of betrayal and the party that protects Communists in Government. I am sure the American people will take note of that. That was not done by the Republican Party. It was done by no one except the Democratic Party itself. I say that does not represent the thinking and feeling of the vast number of loyal long-time Democrats throughout the country.

I may be getting away from the Senator's question, but I thought that fact should be made clear. For example, I do not believe the story will ever be told why the South Koreans, when this war started, had not been given a single tank, a single antitank gun, or a single airplane, except some old AT-6's. The story will never be told why they had not been given any help after Congress, following considerable discussion, had decided that it was in the interest of this country to defend South Korea. I do not think it will ever be explained why American soldiers had to go in there literally with bare hands to do a job which they would not have had to do had not Acheson and his crowd in the State Department sabotaged what we attempted to do. The Congress decided that we should give South Korea some of the planes, tanks, and guns, because it was in our interest to do so. However, the State Department and the Commerce Department said, "No, not 1 cent of it will pass."

Mr. MUNDT. Would the Senator agree that if that had happened only in South Korea, we could charitably charge it off to the lack of experience of perhaps good-intentioned but bungling men who were not fit for their jobs? However, when it follows in close sequence and exact replica what happened in Formosa, which also followed in close sequence and exact replica what happened in Nationalist China, the American public cannot help but conclude that someone planned it that way. Whether it was planned by men of poor judgment, whether it was planned by men of stubborn mind, or whether it was planned by men of disloyal purposes, it seems to me the American public has a right to know why they planned it. They have a right to know because one of the results is a bloody war in far-off Korea, which we must now win in order to save the world from communism.

Mr. McCARTHY. I agree with the Senator wholeheartedly. It was not merely the one case of Korea, but all of that area of the world. Our batting average in Asia is zero. The batting average of the Soviet Union is 1.000 percent.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Nevada.

A PATTERN OF POLICIES TIES STATE AND COMMERCE DEPARTMENTS TOGETHER

Mr. MALONE. The delay in the shipments of gasoline to Nationalist China was the subject of a resolution introduced by the junior Senator from Nevada. The purpose of the resolution was to provide for an investigation of the Commerce Department and certain persons in the employ of the Department who apparently were directly responsible for the delay.

Mr. Liebermann, whose name is now Mr. Lee—and who, incidentally, although on sick leave, still is the Director of the Far Eastern Division of the Department of Commerce when there was a 3-to-6-month delay in the gas shipments to Nationalist China during the crucial 1948 period. The funds for 125,000 barrels of gas and other supplies had been made available by Congress. The delay was so protracted during this period that General MacArthur, out of his meager supplies of gas in 1948, furnished Chiang Kai-shek gas—while for one reason or another they were holding it up in the Department of Commerce. One of the reasons was that they wanted the detailed size of the gas storage tanks in China, the number of troops, number of planes, and so forth, all information which the Reds wanted but which was not needed in order to make it possible to ship gasoline in accordance with the congressional act.

Mr. Gladieux, who occupies a high position in the Department of Commerce, appeared before our committee in connection with the Lee—Liebermann—case and endeavored to support his actions in China shipments.

After the junior Senator from Nevada made his statement before the committee, Mr. Sawyer discharged Mr. Remington and Mr. Lee. Mr. Remington has since been indicted by the grand jury. Mr. Lee is still hanging on.

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me correct the Senator. Mr. Sawyer did not discharge Mr. Lee. Mr. Sawyer asked Mr. Lee to resign.

Mr. MALONE. That is correct.

Mr. McCARTHY. And Mr. Lee told Mr. Sawyer to go to hell.

Mr. MALONE. I accept the correction; but he is on sick leave now. We have made progress.

What I wanted to say was that the junior Senator from Nevada drew a pattern of action before the Subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and the pattern is clear. The Lattimore letter fitted in, namely, that we must lose China and lose Korea. Then we proceeded to lose them through another department, at least it could be called an assist. Wherever we find one of these people, it seems to be like a hill of potatoes: If we get one, we get three or four or five others in the same department, all cooperating and supporting and recommending each other.

Further, Mr. President, I ask the junior Senator from Wisconsin, would he believe that the evidence of Mr. Gladieux in violently defending Mr. Lee and Mr. Remington and others under suspicion fits him to be an Assistant Secretary of Commerce?

Mr. McCARTHY. I should say that in the eyes of the present administration, apparently, yes. In my eyes, no. I am sure the Senator does not think so.

Mr. MALONE. If the Senator will yield further, I understand he was slated to be Assistant Secretary of the Department of Commerce until this hearing was held, but the appointment is temporarily delayed now until the fire dies down, if it does die down; but the junior Senator from Nevada has no idea of letting it die down. He is simply correlating further evidence.

The hearing is, however, stalled in a democratically controlled committee.

Mr. McCARTHY. The junior Senator from Nevada performed a tremendous service for the country when he exposed Michael Lee in the Department of Commerce.

In further answer to the question which the Senator from South Dakota asked in regard to Remington, I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that Remington was found to be O. K. not only by the Seth Richardson loyalty board, but the Tydings-McMahon committee found that there was no evidence of disloyalty, no evidence that he was a Communist, and no evidence that he was a pro-Communist. I think that should be clear.

The Tydings-McMahon committee also found, insofar as this individual, whose FBI file I have here, is concerned, that there was no evidence of disloyalty, no evidence that he is a Communist—listen to this—no evidence that he is a Communist, no evidence that he is a pro-Communist, even though we have a complete FBI report showing that he was a member of the Communist Party, not only in this country—this man was born in Moscow—but that he was a member of the Communist Party in Europe; that he admitted this to the FBI agent whom he considered to be a fellow Communist at the time the FBI agent was working under cover as a member of the Communist Party.

It was found by the McMahon-Tydings committee that there was no evidence that this man was a Communist, no evidence that he was a pro-Communist, no evidence of disloyalty. They did not single the cases out separately, but took the whole 81 as one.

I thought the Senator would be interested in knowing that even though a grand jury has indicted a man for perjury in connection with his communistic activities, the report which was prepared after the indictment still says that there is no evidence of his being a Communist or a pro-Communist.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. MALONE. Is the Senator aware of the fact that Mr. Gladieux, of the Department of Commerce, testified before the Committee on Appropriations of the House, I believe in April of this year, that there were 28 known dangerous risks in the Department of Commerce?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am sorry; I did not catch the question.

Mr. MALONE. Is the Senator aware of the fact that Mr. Gladieux, who was formerly considered as material to be appointed as Assistant Secretary of Commerce, testified before the appropriations subcommittee of the House—I believe in April 1950—that there are 28 known dangerous security risks in the Department of Commerce?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am aware of that. But let me say that the Department of Commerce cannot as easily get rid of those risks as can the State Department. The State Department is covered by the McCarran rider, which gave the Secretary of State the right to discharge those risks instanter. The Secretary of Commerce, the Senator will recall, asked Michael Lee to resign, and Lee thumbed his nose at him. In fairness to the Secretary of Commerce, I should say he did not have the complete, unlimited power which the Secretary of State had. But I am aware of the fact that we do have those bad risks in the Department. Those risks, I understand, all had formerly gotten loyalty board clearance.

Mr. MALONE. That is correct. At least Mr. Lee had a clearance from the board, and I understand Mr. Remington had also. As I recall Mr. Alger Hiss also had clearances from the controlled loyalty boards—he has since been found guilty by a jury.

The Senator is perfectly aware of the fact—or is he?—that whatever the Congress may do, the State Department and the Department of Commerce, working together can defeat, the Department of Commerce being the department which handles the shipments and the final disposition of materials which are purchased by the money appropriated by Congress.

Mr. McCARTHY. Not only can, but have done so.

Mr. President, I should like now to read an article which may sound unusual at first. It is in high praise of the Tydings-McMahon committee. I should like to read it into the RECORD. It says:

Something very unusual but not unwelcome occurred last week in the Senate. The sworn testimony of a professional stool-pigeon was discredited, rejected, and repudiated by the formal actions of a Senate subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and of the Senate as a whole.

I may say, before reading it, that this article deals with the committee's treatment of Mr. Budenz. It praises the committee to the skies. I think that before completing reading it I should mention the fact that I am reading from the Daily Worker, the official Communist publication. I think it is well that someone is saying something good about the McMahon-Tydings committee, so I am going to read portions of this article into the RECORD. It proceeds:

Interest grows, of course, when one realizes that the professional stool pigeon was Louis Francis Budenz, whose eager lies have been so helpful to the Justice Department in its drive against Communists and progressives.

It can be seen his testimony hurt. One of the reasons why I am putting this into the RECORD is that I want the Senate to compare the Daily Worker's language used in condemning Mr. Budenz with the language of the report of the committee.

Prosecutor McGohey relied heavily on the tortuous fabrications of Budenz in his case against the 11 Communist leaders. Judge Medina took pains that the jury should give it great weight. In the opinion of newsmen covering the trial, the testimony of Budenz was the lever by which the prosecution pried a guilty verdict from the jury.

It was the more or less unsupported word of Budenz which brought a jail sentence for Harold Christoffel, the Milwaukee labor leader. And during the last couple of years, few noncitizens have been ordered deported for their political views without the gloating participation of Louis Francis Budenz.

The article proceeds to point out that the Government would have been unsuccessful in deporting or convicting Communists if it had not been for Louis Francis Budenz.

Then they point out that the committee has done a tremendous service to the country in finally taking care of this man Budenz so that his testimony cannot be used in the future to convict other equally dangerous Communists. They apparently think the committee has done a brilliant job in applying the smear brush to Budenz so thoroughly that never again can his testimony be used to deport other dangerous Communists as it has been deported in the past. I recommend this Daily Worker article for the reading of Senators at the same time they read the committee report.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire article be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, at the end of my remarks. I trust it may be the last time I will ask that a Daily Worker article be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibit 2.)

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I wish to have placed in the RECORD a number of editorials, as follows:

An editorial from the Appleton Post-Crescent entitled "So Here Is How It Stands," under date of July 22, 1950; an editorial entitled "The Report Nobody Believes," from the Washington Times-Herald of July 19, 1950; an editorial entitled "Green Lights for the Reds" from the Shreveport Times of July 19, 1950; an editorial entitled "A Shameful Performance," from the Los Angeles Examiner; an editorial entitled "Whitewash, Pitch in Odd Mixture," from the Dallas Morning News of July 19, 1950; an editorial from the St. Louis Globe Democrat of July 19, 1950, entitled "Convenient Whitewash."

Another editorial entitled "'Whitewash' of Red Charges," from the Cincinnati Enquirer of July 21, 1950; an editorial from the Wheeling Intelligencer of July 19, 1950, entitled "Buckets of Whitewash"; an editorial entitled "The Whitewash," published in the Illinois State Journal of July 21, 1950, an editorial from a Dallas, Tex., newspaper whose name I do not have, entitled "No Mood To Forget"; an editorial "Owen Lattimore, Self-Revealed," from the Arizona Daily Star of July 18, 1950, an editorial entitled "Smellier and Smellier," from the Indianapolis Times of July 30, 1950.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the editorials may be printed in the body of the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibit 3.)

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an editorial from Life magazine entitled "Johnson or Acheson." I am very happy to insert this editorial from Life magazine because of its indication that the men controlling the editorial policy of Life are big enough to admit mistakes and change.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibit 4.)

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I also have in my hand an article from the July 17, 1950, issue of Time magazine. The article is entitled "The United States Tragedy in Formosa," and is written by John Osborne, Time-Life senior correspondent in the Far East. Much as I hate to take the Senate's time, I think this article is important enough to read into the RECORD. It is not very lengthy but is extremely important. Here is a magazine which certainly has not been considered friendly to the efforts to remove the Communists from government, a magazine which certainly has not been friendly toward our attempt to expose what Acheson and his clique have been doing in the Far East. That, I believe, makes this article doubly significant. I should like to read it into the RECORD. It will take me but a few moments to do so. I read as follows:

John Osborne, Time-Life senior correspondent in the Far East, visited the Formosan capital of Taipei last week, cabled:

"This capital teems with testaments to the tragic miscalculations and near-fatal results of United States policy toward the Chinese Nationalists and Formosa. The visible, jarring fact is that the United States has created a situation which now makes it wellnigh impossible to sustain any effective position whatever on and toward Formosa. If the miscalculations of the State Department are retrieved, it will be only because Formosa's Nationalists, in their extremity, are able and willing to make retrieval possible.

"The full import of the United States State Department's attitude toward the Chinese Nationalists in recent months is measurable only in terms of the Nationalists' political position on Formosa. If this position was understood by the State Department, the State Department stands convicted of the deliberate sabotage of the Chinese government; if this position was not understood, the State Department stands convicted of avoidable ignorance.

"Blind and stubborn. On Formosa, as in every other part of Asia, United States pronouncements are read with extraordinary attention; they eventually reach even the illiterate masses. And the State Department has blindly and stubbornly insisted on the maximum distribution of official American statements that were bound to undermine the Formosans' confidence in their government."

Listen to this, Senators:

"On more than one occasion, Formosa's Nationalists have sharply and justifiably reminded the puny United States representation here that the statements of Secretary of State Dean Acheson and other Washington spokesmen constituted a direct attack on a government which was, after all, host to the very Americans in charge of disseminating these statements throughout Formosa.

"The results of this almost incredible situation have not been catastrophic for two reasons: (1) Chiang Kai-shek's present government is definitely better in performance and public relations than any Chinese Nationalist Government since the mid-1930's; (2) a bumper rice crop this year has made rural Formosans feel pretty good and allayed discontent that might otherwise have been stimulated by American statements.

"Crowning irony: The crowning irony came this week when Nationalist Spokesman Shen Chang-huan felt constrained to dispel at least part of the heavy fog surrounding President Truman's statement on Formosa. Said Shen in a statement to the Chinese press: "I believe the United States has no territorial ambitions on Formosa." It was a statement that any local United States spokesman might have been expected to make, but of course none did. Any local United States diplomat who said anything reassuring to the Chinese Government would have expected to lose his job."

Let me repeat that, Mr. President:

"Any local United States diplomat who said anything reassuring to the Chinese Government would have expected to lose his job.

"It makes no sense for the United States to reverse its concept of Formosa's strategic importance and at the same time cling stubbornly to the old, down-the-nose political attitude toward Formosa's Nationalist Government. Yet so far as I can judge here, this is precisely what the United States State Department is undertaking to do. I can state as fact that no instructions to modify or alter in any way our political, diplomatic, and military relations with the government of this island have been received by United States representatives here."

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday, where there appears, starting on the first page, a copy of a letter which I addressed to the President of the United States under date of July 13 and a copy of his reply of acknowledgment of July 14. In my letter I pointed out that I felt that with the changed situation the Government of the United States should be represented at Taipei, which is the temporary capital of the Republic of China, by an Ambassador rather than the present consul general who is there. I respectfully suggested to the President that one possibility, as an Ambassador, and a man who is well acquainted with that area of the world and with the Soviet aspirations in that area of the world, was Mr. Angus Ward, who was held a prisoner by the Communists at Mukden for a considerable period of time. In any event, of course, the one who is selected will be chosen by the President of the United States himself.

However, certainly there is on the island of Formosa—which I visited last November and December—the largest force of non-Communist combatant troops in that area of the world. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact—although I am sure he already knows it—that the first member nation of the United Nations to respond wholeheartedly to the appeal for aid in meeting this Communist aggression was the Republic of China, located on Formosa, which offered some three divisions of 30,000 men and 20 C–46 planes. That Government was not only the only member of the Security Council, aside from the Government of the United States, to offer ground forces, but until quite recently it was the only member of the United Nations to offer any ground forces, and up to this very moment it is the member of the United Nations which has offered the largest number of ground forces, other than the United States of America.

I also wish to call to the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin, or at least to remind him of the fact, that had it not been for the vote of the representative of the Republic of China in the Security Council on the second and the third resolutions, which require, by virtue of the Charter of the United Nations, seven votes in order to carry, the second and the third resolutions would not have been adopted, or at least, would not have been adopted without some additional delay, which might have resulted in the overrunning of all Korea.

I think the Senator has made a very good point. This Government does have some responsibility in this matter. Even as we meet here today, as I pointed out yesterday, the island of Quemoy, otherwise known as Kinmen, is about to come under amphibious assault. Heretofore it was thought that perhaps the Republic of China was foreclosed from reinforcing that island. However, it is my opinion that that is not the case, but that the Government of the Republic of China is free to give such reinforcement to the island of Quemoy or Kinmen as is necessary.

Certainly it would be a great mistake, in my judgment, to permit the island of Quemoy to fall to the Chinese Communists; because if it does fall to them it will be a stepping stone to the island of Formosa.

I wish to say now—and I intend to take it up in both the Armed Services Committee and the Foreign Relations Committee—that I do not believe we should get caught in Formosa as we were in Korea. I believe that the Government of the United States should have in Korea today a commission finding out what additional ammunition and what additional artillery and what additional tank equipment they need, so that if there is an assault against the island of Formosa, the Chinese forces there—some 500,000 men, under the very able leadership of Gen. Sun Leh Jen, a graduate of Virginia Military Institute, and a very able leader, just as Gen. Hu Lien, on the island of Kinmen, is a very competent commander—will have the necessary material with which to defend themselves. They are willing to defend the free way of life, as against communism, having had considerable experience with what communism means when it overruns a country.

So I do not believe we should sit back and wait until Formosa itself is under amphibious assault before we get the ammunition and the other materials which we need to get to that island.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think the Senator from California will agree with me that if the Communists are successful in overrunning Kinmen, one of the reasons why they will be successful is the existing order which the President of the United States gave to the Seventh Fleet, which provided that they would protect the mainland and its approaches from any air attacks by Chiang Kai-shek. I am sure the Senator is aware of the fact that until that order went into effect, Chiang Kai-shek had been effectively bombing the attempted concentration of small boats in preparation for the invasion of Kinmen. However, since that order has been in effect, Chiang Kai-shek's air force has not been able to attempt to break up the marshaling of troops on the mainland and the concentration of small shipping in preparation for the invasion of Kinmen.

I am sure the Senator will agree with me that that order certainly should be given close scrutiny by the President of the United States at this time.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that I think that undoubtedly is true; and that order does make more difficult the defense of Kinmen Island or the defense of Formosa itself, by permitting the accumulation of amphibious craft to carry an invading force to either of those islands.

However, I think the record should be clear that, as I understand, there is no restraint on the Government of the Republic of China in regard to reinforcing the island of Kinmen, which apparently is soon to come under attack; at least, so far as movements from Formosa to Kinmen Island are concerned, they will not be interfered with by the United States Seventh Fleet.

Mr. McCARTHY. I understand that; but I am sure the Senator will agree with me that the mere sending of troops to Kinmen, coupled with a denial of the right to bomb and break up the concentration of Communist forces along the shore, is of but little help to the Government of the Republic of China. So long as we prevent Chiang's forces from bombing the concentration of Communist forces, which apparently are prepared or are preparing to invade that island, we are performing a great service for and are giving great help to the Communists. So long as we say that Formosa is of strategic importance and that we must protect it—which means, of course, that we must protect it with the Seventh Fleet and perhaps air forces—and if there is an attempted invasion of Formosa, many of our boys will die because Chiang Kai-shek has been prevented by us from using his air force to bomb and break up the Communist forces which are preparing to invade Formosa. I am sure the Senator from California will agree with me in regard to that point.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I agree; and I am sure that any order preventing the Republic of China from sending its air force to bomb the Communist forces which are preparing to invade Kinmen or Formosa should be canceled. I think that some conditions which previously prevailed in connection with the invasion of South Korea, made it desirable that another front not be opened up, in connection with China. However, certainly the action to be taken against invading fleets should be left to the discretion of the Government of China, which temporarily is located on the island of Formosa.

Mr. McCARTHY. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. President, continuing with the article from which I was reading——

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, we have been rather lenient, and have not objected to the making of speeches by other Senators in connection with the matter the Senator from Wisconsin is discussing. We have not objected to interruptions.

Mr. President, I am going to have to demand the regular order from now on, and I simply wish to give that notice.

Mr. McCARTHY. I thank the Senator, and appreciate the fact that he has been patient up to this time.

Mr. President, I read further from the article entitled "The United States Tragedy in Formosa":

The prevailing American attitude is that any help to Formosa, military or economic (beyond the present ECA program), would be a mistake because it would build up the Nationalist Government, again identify the United States Government with it, and thereby contribute to the Nationalist return to the mainland so ardently opposed by our State Department.

All here, including the responsible Chinese I have so far seen, realize that this is no time to rake up the past for recriminations' sake. But all here also realize that this past has created problems to be dealt with now—and to be dealt with by United States officials whose attitudes and capacities, for the most part, can only be measured by the recent past.

Close call: Consider the United States position on Formosa after Truman's statement: the senior United States representative was Consul General and Chargé d'Affaires Robert Strong, a State Department career man of modest reputation. The senior military representative was an Army lieutenant colonel assisted by a staff of three other officers and barely enough enlisted men to answer phones, drive staff cars. Not one of the military men had the rank or authority to provide the liaison so urgently required with the United States Seventh Fleet.

Last week an incident symbolized the lack of contact between United States officials here and the Nationalist government.

Six United States planes appeared over Formosa's west coast. They were reported as strange aircraft because the Nationalists had not been informed that they were coming. Nationalist fighters took off to intercept them. A moment before they would have opened fire, they recognized the United States markings on the planes. At Tainan, where the American planes came in to land, Nationalist ack-ack crews learned only at the last minute, and then from their own pilots, that the "strange" planes were American. Had the identification come a few seconds later, the crews would have fired on the United States planes.

Most responsible Chinese here are fully aware that Washington and the Seventh Fleet have a war on their hands and other things than Formosa to think about. Nevertheless, they have reasonably requested clarification here and in Washington of Truman's rather cryptic cease-fire orders to Chinese forces, and with notable patience and forbearance have tried to learn what is expected of them by the Seventh Fleet.

Just relax: In the early course of these inquiries, the Chinese were told in all seriousness that there would be no problem of communication or plane identification since the Seventh Fleet would stay completely away from Formosa. Incredulous Chinese officials pointed out that planes from a United States carrier would surely at some time or other approach the Formosan coast. What if a United States plane were in trouble far from its carrier—would it ditch at sea rather than land on Formosa? The American attitude remained: you boys just relax, you'll never see Seventh Fleet ships or planes.

The questions Formosa's Nationalists most urgently want answered are these:

Does Truman's ban on "mainland operations" include aerial reconnaissance?

Does the United States ban on further naval blockade mean that the Nationalists may not watch, search and seize Chinese ships carrying supplies from Hong Kong to the mainland? If so, will the Americans take their own measures to prevent the supply of the Chinese Communists—and the North Koreans—via the mainland?

Does the blockade prohibition further prevent the Nationalists from policing their own territorial waters—including those off Formosa as well as the waters off the mainland itself (which the Nationalists still consider "their" waters)?

Pointed as these questions are, they do not include the biggest question of all.

I want to call this to the attention of the Senator from California, especially, because he has been more intelligently and consistently interested in the situation in the Far East, I believe, than any other of the 96 Senators and that is no reflection on other Senators:

Pointed as these questions are, they do not include the biggest question of all: Does the United States Government really think that it can protect and secure this island without protecting the government of this island? Does even the State Department persist in the illusion that it can ignore and destroy the government which rules this island without losing a position now acknowledged to be of vital interest to the United States?

I am going to reread the last sentence:

Does even the State Department persist in the illusion that it can ignore and destroy the government which rules this island without losing a position now acknowledged to be of vital interest to the United States?

MISSION FROM MAC

So far there has been one ray of good sense in United States-Formosa relationships. It comes from General MacArthur. The Nationalist mission in Tokyo has been assured that MacArthur will send a military mission here to inspect and consult as soon as he can.

Otherwise, in all matters affecting United States military contact and security on this island, I see nothing but an indictment of those in Washington who have perpetrated this crime against the vital interests of our country. This feeling has not been stimulated or fostered by the Nationalist officials I have seen here; it stems entirely from what any child can observe in Taipei today.

I am going to reread just one sentence:

I see nothing but an indictment of those in Washington who have perpetrated this crime against the vital interests of our country.

Mr. President, I believe I have overlooked something which I planned to read into the RECORD, but I have taken much more time than I had expected to take. Therefore, I ask to insert in the RECORD a total of 11 pages entitled "United States Civil Service Commission—Investigations Position—Report of Investigation." The document contains the further heading: "Economist, Department of State—Investigation Conducted by Federal Bureau of Investigation—Distribution: Department of State, Three Copies."

The document bears a stamp showing that it was received by the United States Civil Service Commission on, I believe, September 10, and that it was transmitted to the State Department. I ask that all these insertions be made in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the documents were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—INVESTIGATIONS POSITION—REPORT OF INVESTIGATION

(————, Economist, Department of State—Investigation Conducted by Federal Bureau of Investigation—Distribution: Department of State, Three copies—Report of FBI Special Agent Thomas A. Conroy, Washington, D. C., July 6, 1948)

In this capacity he works with the Assistant Chief and other ranking officers in the drafting of final policy determinations regarding various forms of economic assistance, investment, and development programs. He also makes policy recommendations in connection with questions of public and private investment and effect on industrial organization, economic stability and development of the central and eastern European areas and their relationship to the broad objective of the United States "foreign policy." For the past several months he has been working on the question of exports to Russia and the satellite nations. Currently residing at ——, Washington, D. C.

BASIS FOR INVESTIGATION

An FBI informant of known reliability was contacted by the FBI during course of a previous security investigation conducted in June 1942. At this time he furnished a list containing names of persons of active indexes or mailing list of United American Spanish Aid Committee. List contained name ———. (Group cited by Attorney General.)

Previous FBI investigations indicate that United American Spanish Aid Committee was organized by Communist Party and completely controlled by it.

An FBI agent who joined the Communist Party at the request of the Bureau in 1937 and was expelled from the Communist Party in 1948 and whose record as an informant was one of complete reliability, stated that ——— was a member of the Communist Party and personally know to him as such.

The same informant advised that ——— wife, ———, had been a member of the Communist Party both before and after her marriage to ———. She formerly lived with ——— and the wife of Barnard Addes. They have maintained close association with ——, an admitted Communist Party member.

According to this informant ——— claimed to have been in the Communist Party in Europe and said his father had been a Trotskyite. ——— came to a lot of "open unit" meetings and to all recruiting meetings of the Communist Party from 1938 to sometime in 1942. This informant said he had had no contact with ——— since 1942, stating further that ——— was horrified at the Russo-German alliance in 1939.

Another reliable FBI informant recalled ——— as a member of the Communist Party in the late 1930s.

His wife, ———, was formerly secretary to ——— of Workers Alliance. His wife, ———, was member of and active in Young Communist League before and a while after she became a Communist Party member.

A reliable informant said Bernard Addes and his wife were associates of ——— in the late 1930's and these people were both members of the Communist Party and have been over a long period. Mrs. Addes and Mrs. ——— were long-time friends. Mr. Addes ran for governor of Maryland about 1934 on Communist Party ticket. Recently named in paper and by radio commentators as well-known Communists who contributed $5,000 to the Presidential campaign fund of Wallace (vertified through compaign records in office of Clerk of Senate—contributed February 8, 1943). The same informant said that when Mrs. ——— was secretary to ——— she was a Communist Party member and it was strongly believed that —— was also a member but his membership was never definitely established by informant. ——— however was a Communist sympathizer and propagated Communist principles and became quite friendly and associated with ——— through Mrs. ———.

A confidential and reliable informant said ——— was closely associated with ———, ———, and ———, who are admitted Communist Party members.

Mrs. ——— was found to have roomed with ——— who was considered by the Bureau, as the result of previous investigations, as a member of the Communist Party, and who also openly admits Communist Party membership.

———, ———, Interstate Commerce Committee said he hired ——— to work with him on Brookings report in summer of 1933 because of his ability to read and speak French; specifically questioned ——— as to any Communist connections he might have had in Russia or Europe, and ——— said he had none, and expressed himself against Communist Party principles.

———, ———, Federal Public Housing, states he has known ——— from 1938 to 1941, and had worked under him for 1 year. ——— highly regarded ——— and stated during the time he had known ——— had exhibited nothing reflecting on his loyalty.

——— Division of Investment and Economic Development, European Division, Department of State, said he has known ——— since 1945 and is now his ———. ——— has worked on some very difficult assignment involving Russia and the satellite countries and has never given any indication of disloyal tendencies. ——— stated that in his opinion, there was no question as to his loyalty.

———, Eastern European Division, Department of State, advised he has worked closely with ——— for the past 2 years. ——— stated he has found him to possess views of a theoretical economist who frequently pushes ideas contrary to those held by persons concerned with political aspects of the question involved, but in every case he was sincere in his beliefs and in no way endeavored to bring about actions detrimental to the policy of the State Department. As this policy has become more and more clear, ——— has tended to go along with the political viewpoint of the State Department. ——— concluded by saying that in his opinion there was no question as to ——— loyalty.

——— of the Eastern European Division, Department of State, advised he had had no contact during the past year but both were on a Committee on Czechoslovakia in 1946 in which two groups were involved, first theoretical economists who wanted to pour funds into Czechoslovakia and the group made up of those on the political desk who were inclined to be more cautious until a definite policy had been formulated by the State Department. ——— was on the former group and was often overzealous, endeavoring to dominate the committee in his capacity as executive secretary. ——— was made to realize the State Department's position and has caused no trouble since. ——— concluded by stating that he had no serious doubts as to ——— loyalty.

——— Office of United Nations Affairs, said ——— had been ——— of the above committee on Czechoslovakia as well as other committees. ——— advised that never before had ——— seen a member of the committee adopt an attitude such as that exemplified by ———. She said that ——— evidenced a strong pro-Czechoslovakian attitude and approached every question with the query: "How will this affect Czechoslovakia" and not "How will it affect the overall policy of the United States." ——— said ——— immediate reaction was that he must be a Czechian National or at least of Czechoslovakian ancestry. ——— had no contact other than the 3 months' period from April to July 1946 and said ——— could not comment other than to state from his actions ——— would hesitate to place too much trust in him from a loyalty standpoint.

The following is a signed statement dated September 7, 1948, from ———, as follows:

I served as ——— of the Czechoslovakian committee in May and June of 1946. My acquaintance with the person in whom you are interested is limited to this period. At the first meeting and at all meetings thereafter, I noted that he approached each problem from the standpoint "How will this help Czechoslovakia?" As I recall, such questions as German transit rates, the settlement of the army's debts, and further loans to Czechoslovakia were under consideration. I know nothing about the person in question, but the bias displayed was so marked that I queried the ——— and found she had reacted in similar fashion. I assumed he was of Czech origin and checked the register as a matter of curiosity, only to discover that his origin was Russian. Since he had worked in other agencies and his origin would naturally have caused him to be thoroughly investigated, I did nothing further at the time.

I recall two other episodes. He requested me to have reproduced, as a committee document, an article by Maurice Hindus which had appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. (I believe at the request of Congressman SABATH, but am not certain). The article was a eulogy of Benes' policy of friendship and cooperation with the Soviet Union. Apart from the contents of the article (about which I had grave questions), the request to publish it as a committee document was peculiarly out of order. I spoke with Mr. Gange and Mr. Reber of the secretariat about it, but they took the position that the secretariat couldn't question a committee member's request. I then spoke with Mr. Williamson, the committee chairman, stressing the inappropriateness and the expense (the article was lengthy). He directed me not to issue it as a document, but to obtain a few copies of the RECORD and circulate them for information. That was done.

At that stage I was beginning to have doubts of the nature of the pro-Czech bias—was it pro-Czech or pro-Soviet, particularly since the reports from our Embassy were to the effect that Czechoslovakia was over the hump and that he might be building up Czech industry for Russia. All the information coming into the Department during that period was certainly opposed to the position taken by the person under consideration, and policy in line with the reports was established by the Secretary shortly thereafter. Toward the end of June I attended a meeting of the Russian committee under Mr. ———, secretary of the committee, at which the individual under consideration was present. After the meeting, which was on a highly secret matter, ——— commented that he considered the individual dangerously pro-Soviet and that he intended to discuss the question of his further attendance with the chairman of the Russian committee. I do not know what subsequently transpired, since I went on detail to UIVA early in July.

To summarize: I was so strongly convinced initially of pro-Czech bias that I assumed the individual was of Czech origin, but the matters involved were such that Soviet interests were also served. The weight of opinion and information from the Embassy during the period did not affect his judgment or approach, although it directly preceded and must have entered into the sharp policy decision by the Secretary. I believe I was totally unaffected by the Russian origin of the individual since that fact plus his previous employment led me to assume that he would have undergone a searching investigation and must have been cleared. It was considerably later, when all connection with the committee and the individual had been terminated, that I recommended an investigation.

The determining factor was the realization, from facts emerging in other cases, that the assumption of thorough investigation in view of background was not necessarily valid. I still hesitated since I am totally opposed to Red smearing and other forms of harassment. I was questioned about another individual both by the Department security officers and by FBI agents and was impressed by their ability and by their sincerity in trying to search out the truth. With that assurance of a thorough investigation and fair hearing for the individual, I felt that I dared not refrain any longer from recommending an investigation. This is the only instance in over 6 years in the Department when I have felt that I had to take such action.

——— ———.

———, Eastern European Division, Department of State, said he had been working very closely with ——— recently on the question of trade relations with Russia and the satellite nations as to the policy this country should take regarding exports to those countries. It has been his observation that ——— has constantly advocated a "be soft policy" toward Russia and her satellite nations. ——— said this would be consistent with the Communist Party lines; however, there has been nothing to indicate the latter to be so. ——— volunteered that he could not see how anyone in touch with the situation could adopt such an attitude as the employee and because of his Russian ancestry he would be inclined to be very alert as to the question of ——— loyalty.

———, of the Department of State, said he has known ——— for some time, but only from contact in committee meetings. He had had no contact in recent months. ——— stated that from what he had observed he might question ——— judgment but never his loyalty.

———, a former resident manager of ——— Avenue NW., advised that ——— had lived there about 10 years ago; and that he recalled that at this time there was some literature distributed in the building advocating some kind of "peace group." ——— stated that he recalled clearly that some one of the other tenants had advised him that this literature had been distributed by ———.

Washington confidential informant of known reliability, readily recalled both ——— and his wife, ———, as having lived at ——— NW., prior to moving to ———. Prior to this the same informant recalled that ——— and ——— lived at ———. When the ——— had been recently married they moved to ———, and the above informant definitely recalled ——— as having received Communist literature at ——— NW., and that he recalled that both of the ——— received similar Communist literature at ———, relating to some "youth group."

Washington confidential informant of known reliability advised that the name of ——— appeared on the active indices of the American Peace Mobilization.

———, of the Federal Housing Office, Greenbelt, Md., advised that the ——— had come there to live on ———, and stayed until ———. ——— recalled ——— had some trouble with the ——— regarding one ——— and ——— residing with him in violation of the rental regulations which prevented residents from sharing or subrenting their apartments. She said the three were very close friends.

A reliable confidential informant advised that ——— had changed his name to ——— and was a former member of the Young Communist League and is presently believed to be a member of the Communist Party. ——— father has been a Communist Party member over a period of time.

Washington confidential informant advised that Mr. and Mrs. ———, Washington, D. C., appeared on a membership list of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties; this organization has merged with several others and is now known as the Civil Rights Congress. Both of these organizations have been cited as subversive by the Attorney General of the United States. Washington confidential informant who gave the above information is of established reliability and furnished the information to the Federal Bureau of Investigation during a previous investigation in March 1941.

——— was a fellow employee of ——— when they were employed by the United States Housing Authority in Washington. At another Government agency, ——— listed ——— as a reference, describing ——— as being well acquainted with him and could furnish information as to ——— loyalty and character. ——— was a member of the Washington Bookshop Association; Louisville (Ky.) chapter of the American Youth Congress; and listed on the active indices of the American League for Peace and Democracy. All organizations are listed on the subversive list of the Attorney General of the United States. It has also been reliably reported to the Federal Bureau of Investigation that ——— was discharged from a position as announcer for a Louisville, Ky., radio station in 1937 for making strong pro-Communist statements over the air in violation of that station's censorship regulations.

The State Department Passport Division files show that ——— was issued a passport on ———, for travel to France, England, and Switzerland for a vacation; the file contains the name of ———, a State Department employee, ——— Avenue NW. ——— signed an affidavit for the passport application that she had known ——— for 3 years. Washington confidential informant, considered reliable, reported that ——— was a member of the Washington Bookshop Association and the United American Spanish Aid Committee during a previous FBI investigation in March 1942. Washington confidential informant also advised that ——— was a member of the Communist Party and that she and ——— both held Communist Party meetings in their respective apartments at ——— New Hampshire Avenue NW. They were both very friendly with the ———.

———, confidential informant who is believed reliable, furnished signed statement June 24, 1948, and advised that she is willing to testify before Loyalty Board provided her identity is not revealed to the employee.

"As I remember Mr. ——— when he lived in the ——— Apartment, ——— New Hampshire Avenue NW., Washington, D. C., in about 1939 and 1940, I would consider his actions to indicate that he was disloyal to the United States Government. Though about 8 years have elapsed since my contact with Mr. ———, and my conception of the term 'Communist' and 'fellow traveler' may have been colored by present meanings of these terms, I feel that Mr. ——— perhaps was and may be a Communist or fellow traveler. By 'Communist' I mean 'A group or groups to overthrow our Government or cause dissention or dissatisfaction with our way of government or anyone who is loyal to the Russian Government.' By 'fellow traveler' I mean 'A cover-up group for the Communists who do their dirty work.' By 'dirty work' I mean 'To pass out their literature or make contacts for them.'

"During the time I saw Mr. ——— I observed him passing out literature in the lobby of the apartment for the ——— Group, which at that time I considered to be a group which were disloyal to the United States. I received one copy of these pamphlets. I cannot recall that it said anything of a disloyal nature, however. I also recall that Mr. ——— put this literature under the doors of the apartments on the upper floors. I believe Mr. ——— was a member of the ——— Organization, because he tried to sell the principals of the organization to two of the elevator operators which he intimated to the operators as being better than our American way. He frequently talked about their low pay and long working hours. He seemed to me to be a fanatic on anything pertaining to labor, to unions, to conditions under which Americans work, and the pay scales. This to me was an indication that Mr. ——— might be a Communist.

"Another reason which makes me think that he might be a Communist is that he gave out literature which I heard supported the Spanish Loyalists, which group I recall was supported by the Communists of Russia at that time. I know that Mr. ——— was receiving mail from Spain because * * *."

FBI REPORT, JUNE 24, 1948, CHICAGO, ILL.; SPECIAL AGENT DANIEL J. MCCARTHY

Mr. ———, professor of economics, ——— University, Evanston, Ill., ——— State Department's Division of Investment and Economic Development, and was ———. He recalled that a whispering campaign about ——— loyalty had been rife for a while in his division. He believed that the only basis for it was that ——— was foreign born. Mr. ——— expressed the opinion that ——— was loyal.

FBI REPORT, JUNE 28, 1948; SPECIAL AGENT JOSEPH M. KELLY

———, professor of economics, Russian Institute, ——— University advised that from ——— to January ——— he was ——— Economics Subdivision, U. S. S. R. Division, OSS, and that ——— was on his staff for a year. Mr. ——— stated he became fairly well acquainted with ——— and that he had heard or seen nothing to indicate disloyalty. Mr. ——— concluded on the basis of his knowledge of ——— that he is loyal.

———, executive of ——— Co., advised that in ———, he was a deputy on the financial matters to William Clayton and ——— Division of Financial and Development Policy. ——— advised that ——— was employed in ——— under one ———, chief of a section under ———. Mr. ——— stated that his contacts with ——— were very limited. In 1946 a ——— joined the State Department and worked under ———, and that ——— was probably one of ——— staff officers at present. ——— always spoke favorably of ——— and because of this Mr. ——— stated he was of the opinion ——— was loyal.

FBI REPORT, SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF., SPECIAL AGENT RICHARD T. CLANCEY

———, ——— University, ———, said he was ——— of the Committee on Russian Economic Affairs in the State Department in ——— and that ——— represented the Czechoslovakian section of the State Department in the committee meetings. It became apparent to some of the committee after a meeting or two that ——— seemed to be more patriotic to his own country of birth than to the United States. Dr. ——— advised, further that ——— approach to the problems under consideration appeared "colored" and that ——— did not have the traditional American patriotism it

THEY ACT LIKE SCREHEADS

The fact that Senator MCCARTHY's blasting of the State Department is recognized the country over as the major cause of the reversal of our idiotic Asian policy does not set very well with the Capital Times or the Milwaukee Journal which sometimes team up as they did in using the story of a reporter who deliberately aimed to deceive the public by omitting important written details from filed papers.

The Times and Journal are fuming and furious, and may even have a hemorrhage, because it appears from the income tax statements of the Senator that he borrowed a substantial amount of money.

Of course those connected with the Times and Journal say nothing about the fact that they, and the institutions with which they are concerned, have borrowed money in excess of the amount that Senator MCCARTHY probably borrowed. When they did the borrowing and took the chances, they looked upon the transactions as strictly in the American tradition, as they certainly were, but when Senator MCCARTHY did exactly the same thing, or something similar, they began tearing their hair out in gobs.

What is a virtue in them becomes an offense in Senator MCCARTHY. What is a privilege to them is nothing short of presumption upon the part of this commoner who dares to try to better his condition in the world.

Apparently the Senator decided that he might better sell his property, liquidate his loans, and devote the small equity he received to running down the Lattimore-Acheson-Roth-Service-Remington gang at Washington, a procedure that threw the Times and the Journal into crusty and grouchy moods.

Senator MCCARTHY is devoting his time and his talents to rooting out the dizzy apes and slug-nuts who have been leading America to ruin with the softly panting approval of the haughty and egocentric professional liberals who have been in fact, the world over, the softest snap the Kremlin ever ran into.

The average man on the street is no fool and, given the honest facts, he can make up his mind pretty well without the aid of any big-lipped scatterbrains. That ordinary man knows that it took a sledgehammer to batter down the defenses erected by mumblers and bumblers of the Lattimore-Acheson order, and that if Senator MCCARTHY had not done just exactly what he did do, all Korea and Formosa would now be in the hands of Moscow and we would be picking up our duds in Japan and the Philippines and moving home. It took some strong language upon the part of a man in the Senate to reverse the whole lunatic and defeatist attitude of the State Department and the fact that an innocent toe here and there may have been stepped upon is of trivial importance.

May we not suggest to these newspapers with the bloodshot eyes that they investigate the Senator's socks and seek if they are purple. Anyway, they won't be red or pink.

EXHIBIT 2

AS WE SEE IT—SENATE REPUDIATES BUDENZ' TESTIMONY

(By Rob F. Hall)

WASHINGTON.—While the eyes of the Nation were on Korea, trying to gage whether this aggression of the Truman administration was likely to become a world war, something very unusual but not unwelcome occured last week in the Senate. The sworn testimony of a professional stool pigeon was discredited, rejected, and repudiated by the formal actions of a Senate subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and of the Senate as a whole.

Interest grows, of course, when one realizes that the professional stool pigeon was Louis Francis Budenz, whose eager lies have been so helpful to the Justice Department in its drive against Communists and progressives.

Prosecutor McGohey relied heavily on the tortuous fabrications of Budenz in his case against the 11 Communist leaders. Judge Medina took pains that the jury should give it great weight. In the opinion of newsmen covering the trial, the testimony of Budenz was the lever by which the prosecution pried a guilty verdict from the jury.

It was the more or less unsupported word of Budenz which brought a jail sentence for Harold Christoffel, the Milwaukee labor leader. And during the last couple of years, few noncitizens have been ordered deported for their political views without the gloating participation of Louis Francis Budenz.

Since the freedom and happiness of so many individuals and the life of certain democratic institutions depend so heavily on the word of this creature, his credibility is a matter of more than passing concern to the Nation. It is therefore of the greatest significance that the Senate of the United States did not regard him as credible or trustworthy.

Budenz testified April 20 before an open session and on April 25 before a closed session of the Tydings subcommittee. At the open session, with the klieg lights and the cameras spotlighting his garrulous exhibition, Budenz said Prof. Owen Lattimore was known to him as a Communist. At the closed session he said something similar about Haldore Hansen, a writer on Chinese affairs holding a minor post with the State Department.

The Tydings subcommittee, assigned to investigate Senator JOE MCCARTHY's charges that scores of Communists held jobs in the State Department, listened respectfully to Budenz. But after they heard his testimony and compared it with a wealth of material at their disposal, including copious FBI reports on MCCARTHY's victims, they could not escape the conclusion that Louis Francis was a sordid liar.

The subcommittee cleared Hansen and Lattimore. In their report accepted by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the Senate, members said Budenz' testimony left them "to a degree, in wonderment."

"We cannot accept Mr. Budenz' hearsay testimony as controlling," the report said in reference to the Hansen case. (Budenz' testimony at Foley Square was not only hearsay; it was mainly his opinions.)

His testimony concerning Professor Lattimore "was not altogether satisfying," the report said.

The Tydings subcommittee was especially struck by the fact that "even though Budenz has been reporting for several years to the FBI on various Communist activities and personalities," it was only after the MCCARTHY circus hit town that Budenz climbed aboard that particular bandwagon. "Only since this investigation and the publicity concerning Lattimore therewith has Budenz given information to the FBI concerning Lattimore," the report commented.

This sudden rush of old memories to Budenz as a result of which he came up with the recollection that Lattimore and Hansen were "Communists" was "necessarily puzzling" to the subcommittee.

Beware of Budenz' yeoman service to the Fascist drive against progressives, the subcommittee was anxious that their repudiation of his yarns should not destroy for all time the usefulness of the Justice Department's stool pigeon. They therefore wrote into the report a sort of escape clause for Louis Francis' "character."

"We recognize that Budenz has been used as a witness by the Government in other cases where his testimony was not hearsay and was corroborated. Here of course his testimony is hearsay and corroboration is lacking. This observation is necessarily not a reflection upon Mr. Budenz' veracity inasmuch as his testimony related to what he was told by Communists."

But this is poor consolation to Louis Francis and his Justice Department sponsors. The Senators have chosen not to believe him on oath. They have, moreover, suggested that his thirst for the limelight seduced him into making sensational statements which they, for partisan reasons, felt compelled to expose as lies. The crumb they tossed him could not conceal their contempt for the professional liar.

The chairman of the subcommittee, Senator MILLARD TYDINGS, basing himself on the official document, called Senator MCCARTHY a perjuror, a "fraud and a hoax." Inferentially, Louis Budenz was also condemned as an accomplice to perjury and fraud.

Meanwhile the perjury and fraud committed by Budenz in the trials of Communists and progressives go unpunished. This sleek little pigeon slips furtively from stool to stool while his victims, truly good men and women, face deportation and prison.

EXHIBIT 3

[From the Appleton (Wis.) Post-Crescent of July 22, 1950]

SO HERE IS HOW IT STANDS

The three Democrats on the Senate committee investigating the McCarthy charges have found them to be wholly without foundation.

The two Republicans differed violently with this conclusion. They characterize the investigation as "superficial and inconclusive, the atmosphere too often not that of seeking to ascertain the truth whereas the committee's record is a tangle of loose threads, of witnesses not subpenaed, of leads not followed up."

The people who want to arrive at the correct conclusion in a matter of this importance must thread their way through a maze of closed doors, suddenly secret sessions, and a battery of obvious defamers who tried their level best to prevent the committee from investigating the charges by preferring charges against the Senator himself.

But even the Democrats upon the committee are forced reluctantly to conclude that some of those attacked by Senator MCCARTHY were, to quote these Democrats, "naive and gullible" and that others were guilty of conduct described as "extremely indiscreet."

So a man who admittedly gives to a Red top-secret information and whose voice is recorded by the FBI as he tells that Red that it is a secret, is slapped upon the wrist and told that he was extremely indiscreet, while he is returned to his position where he may commit further indiscretions.

In attempting to get order out of confusion let us look at some of the presented evidence.

On June 21, Senator TYDINGS asserted "that a special inquiry by the Federal Bureau of Investigation had established as false Mr. MCCARTHY's accusations that the files had been stripped or raped before being turned over to the subcommittee."

A short time thereafter Senator MCCARTHY sent out a photostat of a letter written to him by the head of the FBI as follows:

"I have received your letter dated June 27, 1950, inquiring whether this Bureau has examined the 81 loyalty files which the members of the Tydings committee have been scrutinizing and whether such an examination by the FBI has disclosed that the files are complete and that nothing has been removed therefrom. The Federal Bureau of Investigation has made no such examination and therefore is not in a position to make any statement concerning the completeness or incompleteness of the State Department files."

So much for that Tydings whopper.

Continue along the same road because the scenery is quite interesting.

Unable to get the Tydings committee to subpena further witnesses who would testify that they were directed to strip the records, Senator MCCARTHY sent to the President the affidavits of four such witnesses, and supplied the press of the country with photostatic copies of such affidavits. Three of such witnesses gave their names. One was a junior at Georgetown University, another was an FBI agent, a third was employed in private industry, and the fourth still works for the State Department and said that he would supply his name only if the President would assure him that he would not be fired for telling the truth. No such assurance ever came from the White House.

Let us see what these four witnesses said in their affidavits. Quoting from the one who is still employed by the State Department will be sufficient because the statements were much the same. He swore:

"In August 1946, I started working as a clerk in the State Department * * * I was assigned to a project with other clerks on the State Department personnel files. We all were instructed to remove all derogatory material from the personnel files and we were instructed to dispose of these materials. The derogatory material consisted of letters, memorandum which reflected on the employee. I cannot remember any specific file because we all worked on many files. But we worked on this project from August until the end of December 1946. All of the derogatory material in the files was destroyed or thrown away."

It is more than passing strange that a committee appointed to investigate charges refused to even listen to the evidence of four witnesses, one of them still working for the State Department, and refused stubbornly to let the people of this country have their evidence.

The people will draw their own conclusions. From Senator MCCARTHY they have received all the evidence he could gather. This evidence showed that men were employed to destroy evidence. It also showed that the Tydings committee willfully falsified to the country by pretending that the FBI had gone through records which the FBI deliberately says it never went through.

Moreover, the Tydings committee acted as though it always had something to hide. When it had a piece of evidence that seemed to refute the McCarthy charges, it brought it out in public with a brass band. When it was time to inquire why men high in the State Department gave secret documents by the hundreds to fellows like Jaffe, the committee locked the doors and drew the curtains.

We expect that the public conclusions on this case will not be far out of the way.

[From the Washington Times-Herald of July 19, 1950]

THE REPORT NOBODY BELIEVES

TYDINGS and Co. says there are no Communists in the State Department and there is no Communist influence in the State Department. These findings would be welcome, if true. Unfortunately nobody believes them.

We can say with little fear of contradiction that even the three New Deal Senators who offer the country this sugared assurance don't believe their own statement.

What we had in the congressional investigation of the Pearl Harbor disaster we are now given again—a large bucket of whitewash. What we had when incredible mismanagement was charged to the atomic-energy committee is tossed back at us again—denials and evasions. But, meanwhile, four spies in this country and one in England who were stealing our atomic secrets for Russia have been arrested.

What Mr. Truman called the Alger Hiss case—a "red herring"—has been served up to us by the administration once more. The herring is a little higher now, and Hiss, convicted as a perjury spy, is under sentence of 5 years and has been disbarred.

We have got precisely what we have come to expect from every political investigation by the New Deal—self-exculpation by the party which has fostered, condoned, and protected betrayals of the national interest and public trust such as this country has never before known.

What else could we expect? This is the party of lies. It is the party of Roosevelt, telling America's fathers and mothers "again and again and again" that, on no account, would their sons be sent into a war he was then plotting.

It is the party of Truman, the product of the Pendergast machine in Kansas City, where, when 71 henchmen faced the penitentiary for stealing the primary election in 1946, the simple solution presenting itself was to blow the courthouse safe and steal the fraudulent ballots providing the evidence.

Truman is the man who only 2 years ago said of Stalin, "I like old Joe, Joe is a decent fellow." If the Loss Communist is a decent fellow, then who is to say that lesser, non-Russian Communists are also not decent fellows?

Certainly the New Deal Senators who were commissioned to investigate Senator JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY'S charges of Communist infiltration of the administration found nobody who did not measure up to their standards for being a decent fellow. But why not? Look at the Senators:

MILLARD TYDINGS, of Maryland, New Dealer, was the original sponsor of the present Secretary of State, Dean Acheson, when the latter was presented as nominee for undersecretary of the Treasury in 1933. TYDINGS conceded at the time that he had initiated the move to put Acheson in the job. To statements that Acheson's law firm had extensive Wall Street connections, TYDINGS replied that Acheson had also represented Russia in American courts and accepted Moscow's fees. Now, as Secretary of State, Acheson presides over Truman's world-wide anti-Communist crusade.

TYDINGS also happens to be the son-in-law of Joseph E. Davies, Roosevelt's Russophile ambassador to Russia, whose book Mission to Moscow, was a flagrant piece of pro-Soviet propaganda. By another curious coincidence, Seth Richardson, chairman of the President's loyalty review board, through which there filtered all of the curious characters Senator MCCARTHY has called security risks, is a law partner of Davies. And TYDINGS was appointed chairman by the New Dealers to investigate the whole mess.

THEODORE F. GREEN, New Deal Senator from Rhode Island, is 83 years old and is chiefly distinguished as the one-time little Hitler of the tiny New England State. In January 2, 1935, even before being sworn in for his second term as governor, GREEN, in the space of less than two hours, engineered a coup unique in the history of American government.

He ousted the five Republicans composing the existing State supreme court and replaced them with a Democratic majority.

He killed 80 State boards and commissions manned by Republicans. He restored to himself powers long since taken from the governorship.

All of this Senator GREEN accomplished by unseating elected Republican State senators on the basis of a quick recount by two of his henchmen, thus converting a Democratic Senate minority into a majority.

GREEN'S lieutenant governor, Robert E. Quinn, his chief agent in this bloodless revolution, succeeded GREEN when the latter became a Senator. Quinn is chiefly remembered for using the State militia to shut down the Narrangansett race track in order to put a political enemy out of business.

The third New Dealer on the TYDINGS whitewash majority is BRIEN MCMAHON, an old hand at sweeping New Deal dirt under the rug.

MCMAHON for years was one of the officials of the New Deal Department of Justice, the agency charged with exposing and prosecuting subversives. If the justice of Senator MCCARTHY'S assertion that the State Department was loaded with protected Communists and fellow travelers were admitted, MCMAHON would have been in the position of exposing the culpability of the Department he so long served, and furthermore, his own dereliction as chief of its criminal division.

As chairman of the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy, Mr. MCMAHON previously had bent all of his efforts toward proving that the Atomic Energy Commission had properly safeguarded the secrets of the atom bomb. Only later did the arrest of members of the Soviet atomic spy ring demonstrate the spuriousness of the whitewash applied to the charges of Senator BOURKE HICKENLOOPER that the atomic secret had not been guarded.

These three—TYDINGS, GREEN and MCMAHON—abruptly voted to stop the McCarthy investigation when the war in Korea afforded a convenient diversion. They hurried to completion the report now announced, clearing every single suspect. They did not permit their two Republican committee colleagues, Senators HICKENLOOPER and HENRY CABOT LODGE, to inspect their report.

They departed from the rules of the Senate by releasing the report to the press before they even tendered it to the full Senate Foreign Relation Committee, in whose name they acted as a subcommittee. Senator CONNALLY, the New Deal chairman of that committee, limped forward with a summons for the committee to meet and receive the report 24 hours after it had been published in the Nation's press.

LODGE and HICKENLOOPER would have none of TYDINGS' phony clearance. Internationalist and supporter of the administration's foreign policy though he is, LODGE found the whole proceeding too much for a sensitive stomach. In a separate statement, he asserted:

"The investigation must be set down as superficial and inconclusive. The proceedings often lacked impartiality; the atmosphere was too often not that of seeking to ascertain the truth. The subcommittee's record is a tangle of loose threads, of witnesses who were not subpenaed, of leads which were not followed up * * * this business will never end, clearly or otherwise, if the practice of having the majority party investigate the majority continues to hold sway."

The pretext of the Tydings New Dealers for giving clearance to all of the men and women whom Senator MCCARTHY had dubbed Stalin's little helpers was that the State Department loyalty files which the subcommittee, after months of Presidential obstruction, was finally permitted to inspect showed "nothing derogatory."

Senator MCCARTHY had anticipated this weak defense. He had produced, in advance of the release of the Tydings report, statements from one present and three former employees of the State Department that in 1946 the administration had a team of eight persons working for 5 months to weed everything from the files which was derogatory or incriminating.

A deadline was set for this task: It had to be completed before the democratic congressional majority was replaced by a Republican majority elected to the Eightieth Congress. State Department officials were even permitted to strip their personal files, so that the men who were defendants were able to destroy the evidence against themselves.

So, all provision having been made, and a rigged investigation undertaken for the purpose of ratifying a predetermined judgment, the Nation is now told by the New Deal that Prof. Owen Lattimore, the New Deal pilot of America's policy in the Orient, was never of service to Russia. The public is informed that Dr. Philip Jessup, ambassador-at-large, who was knee deep in Communists in all of his years with the Institute of Pacific Relations, is neither a knave nor a dupe, as Mr. MCCARTHY called him.

The people are told that John Stewart Service, State Department far eastern expert, cleared no less than six times by the New Deal Loyalty Boards (would a man whose loyalty was unquestioned have to make as many farewell appearances as Sarah Bernhardt?) may have been indiscreet in his dealings with Communists, but that is all.

And the Nation is also told that there was no fix in the case of the six persons arrested for wartime espionage in the theft of 1,700 secret Government documents which found their way to the offices of of the pro-Soviet magazine Amerasia.

In fact, by assurance of TYDINGS and his New Deal friends, the people need not feel disturbed about anything, and least of all about Communist manipulation of New Deal policy. The three Senators thus have made themselves a part of the Communist conspiracy at a time when it is obvious that our weakness in Korea was made known to the Communists of the Kremlin, and when it is certain that that weakness was promoted within the administration.

The American people now have a simple criterion for determining Communist influence in this country. It will be evidenced fully by counting up those who support the Tydings report.

[From the Shreveport Times of July 19, 1950]

GREEN LIGHTS FOR THE REDS

The thoroughly absurd report by the majority of the Tydings committee investigating Reds in the State Department is a green light to further and future activities of fellow travelers and their friends in undermining America and Americanism right inside our own Government. The report would be the biggest laugh of the century but for the fact that a lot of green kids, some of them teen-agers, are dying in Korea with their faces in the mud—and sometimes with their hands tied behind them. It was blindness of the type displayed by the Tydings group—inside the State Department and outside it—which laid the foundation for the international fumbling of the Truman administration that brought on the Korean situation. It is the Tydings group that now says that revelations of those subversives and blindness to them in the State Department and outside it are fraud and hoax. And as long as we have such as the Tydings group to clear the disloyalties, the traitors, the fifth columnists, and the nitwits who don't know what they are doing, just so long will we have those subversives and Commies and lefties and disloyalists gnawing at the vitals of the Americanism built and fostered through the decades and now facing destruction through those who should be its foremost supporters.

However, there is nothing surprising in this action of the Tydings majority of the investigating committee.

Hasn't it been clear from the beginning that the majority had just one objective—to clear everybody with a tinge from light pink to deep red and to smear Senator MCCARTHY, who forced the inquiry?

Didn't President Truman call all such inquiries "red herrings"—particularly the earlier investigation into Alger Hiss, Roosevelt confidential adviser, which finally headed Hiss and others toward penitentiaries? Didn't President Truman personally say he would do everything possible to disprove the McCarthy charges—to clear the accused?

Didn't President Truman personally bar essential files and evidence from the committee?

Didn't the President and his subordinates open some files only after it was known that they had been looted of all important material?

Didn't the Washington administration try to put the hush-hush on the fact that some 200 perverts had been found in the State Department and finally fired?

And did agencies of this same Washington administration then rehire some of the perverts previously fired?

And isn't it a known fact that such perversion is the strongest and one of the most used forms of blackmail by enemy agents seeking secret information from within Government departments?

Didn't the Washington administration try to cover up the whole Amerasia case with an early Saturday morning court hearing in which United States attorneys acted virtually as defense counsel for those pleading guilty to possession of stolen secret State Department documents?

And wasn't the investigation that might have convicted others in the same case mysteriously hushed and blocked?

The questions could be carried on indefinitely. The answer to each and every one of them is, "Yes!"

As Senator MCCARTHY said of the report:

"The most loyal stooges of the Kremlin could not have done a better job of giving a clean bill of health to Stalin's fifth column in this country."

Get out your medals, Mr. Stalin; there are some fellows in Washington who seems to deserve them.

Perhaps, also, attention of the "clear everybody" boys in Washington might be called to this Washington news dispatch, which came over the Associated Press wires along with the story of the Tydings clearance report and was published, with it, on page 1 of most newspapers:

"WASHINGTON, July 17.—The FBI Monday arrested a fourth American in connection with the leak of United States atom bomb secrets to the Russians.

"FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover said that Julius Rosenberg, 32, operator of an engineering plant in New York City and a former member of the Army Signal Corps, had been taken into custody in New York on a charge of conspiracy to commit espionage.

"Hoover described Rosenberg as 'another important link in the Soviet espionage apparatus.'

"During the last 2 months the FBI took into custody Harry Gold, Philadelphia biochemist, Alfred Dean Slack, Syracuse, N. Y., scientist and David Greenglass, former United States Army sergeant, on similar chargcs. Greenglass is also from New York City.

"Each is charged with feeding top secrets on American defense to the Russians in wartime—a charge carrying the possible death penalty."

Yes, "each is charged with feeding top secrets on American defense to the Russians * * *"

And where and how did they get those top defense secrets, theft of which may be directly or indirectly responsible in part for green kids dying in Korea? Why, through conditions exposed in the State Department and elsewhere by McCarthy and others—revelation of which is termed by the Tydings report as "gigantic in its fraud and deep in its deceit."

A Shameful Performance

The Tydings committee's majority report on the McCarthy charges of Communist influence in the State Department is probably the most disgracefully partisan document ever to emanate from the Congress of the United States.

As a public paper prepared in perilous times, it verges upon disloyalty.

As such, it goes beyond the obvious objective of whitewashing the New Deal's calamitous foreign policy.

The inquiry on which the report was based was a staged and superficial travesty of investigative procedure.

For the committee made no real investigation.

It clamped a New Deal Maxim silencer on the junior counsel representing the Republican minority.

It was friendly to the New Deal witnesses; it was palpably hostile to the McCarthy witnesses; and it permitted no proper cross-examinations.

The majority prepared its report without consulting the minority members.

And, as Senator Lodge has said, it totally ignored its actual mandate from the Senate, which was a broad directive covering the whole question of disloyalty.

The sordidly political nature of the Tydings-Green-McMahon report is self-evident.

It made Senator McCarthy—rather than the offenders in the notorious Amerasia larcenies, and the pro-Communist policy makers in the State Department—the apparent culprit.

In a front-page dispatch from Washington the New York Times said of the three Democrats:

"They attacked Mr. McCarthy, a Wisconsin Republican, in terms of harshness rarely used in the Senate's history.

"They accused him of conscious falsehood and of serving the interests of the Communists by raising baseless suspicions among the people of the country.

"They cleared every person who had been accused by Senator McCarthy."

No wonder, as the Times also reported, the two Republican members declined to sign the report.

Neither is the New Deal's clearance of accused persons free from doubt and suspicion.

One of those accused was Owen Lattimore, who advocated our desertion of Nationalist China and our surrender of Korea to communism.

Respecting him, the New Deal report says:

"Even the testimony of Louis F. Budenz, if given the fullest weight and import, could establish no more than that the Communists used Lattimore to project a propaganda line anent China."

But what else was the Tydings committee appointed to establish?"

For the record shows that Lattimore—by implication at least a Communist tool—for years was an influential State Department adviser.

[From the Dallas Morning News of July 19, 1950]

Whitewash, Pitch in Odd Mixture

The Senate's Foreign Relations Subcommittee set up to investigate the charges made by Senator McCarthy has brought in a majority report that is certain to be confusing to the average citizen. There is no concurrence from the membership of the minority hostile party. Perusal of the full text shows clearly the reason for that. The minority could hardly lend their approval to the mixture of whitewash and pitch discernible in the welter of words that lead up to the six sensible recommendations which the committee makes in finality.

As to these, there can be little disagreement in principle, but Senator Lodge has a sounder nonpolitical proposal for the make-up of a nonpartisan group for an over-all investigation than the majority could stomach. There will be hearty accord with the view that there must be some brake on the power of Members of the two Houses to slander individuals under the cloak of congressional immunity, and there can be no logical objection to a demand for more orderly conduct of hearings, for greater information on the operations of the State Department, and for improved system in protecting the security of classified documents.

Unfortunately the subcommittee majority has operated in an atmosphere of partisan spleen on both sides. The majority notes bitterly that "it has been subject to an organized campaign of unwarranted and unfair villification without parallel in the history of congressional investigations." If so, it has squared itself amply with Senator McCarthy by handing him the lie direct. Indeed if the full Senate shares the subcommittee view, it would not be surprising to see a test made in impeachment proceedings. Few men have been as severely castigated by their colleagues in an official report.

Certainly the report does not answer all questions. On July 12, McCarthy filed with the President a complaint supported by photostats that the majority is also guilty of misstatements. A letter from J. Edgar Hoover asserts that the FBI has never been asked to investigate State Department personnel files to assure their being intact and three affidavits are made in which affiants assert that they were hired specifically in 1946 to remove all "derogatory material" from these personnel files.

The majority concede that the controversy has aroused public distrust and they want a body in the nature of the Hoover Commission to make a complete investigation, but the personnel would be named by the President, the Vice President (as President of the Senate), and the Speaker of the House, all Truman Democrats, good and true, Senator Lodge urges an eight-man commission, with reasonable safeguards against party domination.

There is only one clear and unchallengeable conclusion from the present report—there is a Democratic majority on the subcommittee.

[From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat of July 19, 1950]

Convenient Whitewash

The spectacular developments in Korea, which prompted the President to move dramatically to halt Communist aggression, have provided just what the Democrats needed to get out from under Senator McCarthy's charges of Communists in Government. It was an "out" which they did not ignore for excellent political reasons, and they have made it formal by issuing a 350,000-word report on the findings of the Senate inquiry committee, headed by Senator Tydings.

The majority report, that, is the Democrat report, labeled the McCarthy charges as a "fraud and a hoax," a "nefarious campaign of half-truths and untruths." Not one basic accusation was proved. Nothing questionable about the Amerasia case. A clean bill of health for Lattimore, Jessup, Service, and Hanson. The administration in every aspect is clean as the proverbial hound's tooth. In short, McCarthy cooked up the whole deal with nothing, absolutely nothing to support him.

Senator Lodge filed a minority report in which he agreed that the McCarthy charges were "superficial and inconclusive"—as they were permitted to be explored. Senator Hickenlooper agreed in general with Lodge, but may have more to say later.

Despite the mountain of whitewash poured on the inquiry by the Democrats, we believe the public does not regard the McCarthy charges as groundless. Agreed, he did not develop them properly, he went into court inadequately prepared to prove his case, he swung aimlessly at times and his misses were just what the administration needed to exploit the utter falsity of his accusations.

For political reasons, the Democrats, including the President, placed every obstacle in McCarthy's path. At no time did he receive even a semblance of cooperation from the administration. The Senate inquiry committee was flagrantly biased. And his fellow Republicans timidly stood on the sideline and waited to see what would happen. If he made good, "we did it." If he failed, "he was on his own." This was a cowardly attitude and the Democrats made the most of it.

Now comes the Korean police action, a dramatic challenge of communism by the President. With the Nation committed to back the President at every step, with mobilization for war staring us in the face, now is no time to expend our energies looking for past derelictions, which the Democrats say never existed. So, in the shadow of Korea, the Democrats brand McCarthy as a wholesale liar and declare his crusade ended.

If McCarthy has succeeded in scaring the President and his advisers into cleaning house, into getting rid of suspected subversives, into checking thoroughly into the loyalty of government personnel, his labors have not been in vain. And we believe he did just that. Perhaps 'tis well that the inquiry close its books now. But around those books is an aroma of red herrings that even Korea cannot dissipate. And now as ever before it is necessary to make certain that the Communist fifth column, in or out of Government, is under constant surveillance. The termites bear watching.

Whitewash of Red Charges

The report of the Senate subcommittee which "reviewed" the charges of Senator Joseph R. McCarthy was almost precisely what might have been expected. The Democratic majority of the committee devoted a great many thousands of words to an attack upon the Wisconsin Republican, without giving evidence of more than a cursory examination of his charges. Both of the minority members of the committee, Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., of Massachusetts and Senator Bourke B. Hickenlooper of Iowa, declined to sign the report, and Senator Lodge issued one of his own, asserting that the committee's investigation had been "superficial."

Amid all the garish language of the majority report, here was little or nothing of concrete value in determining the validity of Senator McCarthy's attack upon alleged Communist infiltration of the State Department. Even the stanch supporters of the administration who insisted that Senator McCarthy discredited himself will be compelled to agree that the majority of the committee likewise tended to discredit themselves as impartial arbiters of his charges. During the progress of the hearings there was at least one notable incident in which Chairman MILLARD TYDINGS betrayed remarkable prejudice in favor of those nominally under investigation. We use the phrase "nominally under investigation" because, in the case of Prof. Owen Lattimore, Chairman TYDINGS delivered a personal and virtually on the-spot "vindication" of the Johns Hopkins University adviser on our far eastern policy.

In their comments on the Amerasia case, as in their remarks on the McCarthy charges, Senator TYDINGS and his Democratic associates almost impel the use of the word "whitewash." The public is left knowing scarcely what to believe about either matter. Whatever basis there may have been for the McCarthy allegations, he was given no help whatever by the committee in arriving at their truth or falsity. The subcommittee, at best, defied him to try to prove something. Had its conduct been a little more judicial—or investigative—the impact of its denial of all of his assertions would have been a great deal more forceful.

Indeed, the rhetorical fury of the committee's counterattack was not very persuasive. It will serve only to recall to most people that this is a congressional election year, and that, whether innocently or otherwise, the Asiatic phase of our foreign policy has reflected terrible discredit upon the administration's State Department.

There's a line in Shakespeare which might apply to the committee's majority report: "The lady doth protest too much!"

[From the Wheeling Intelligencer of July 19, 1950]

BUCKETS OF WHITEWASH

Senators MILLARD E. TYDINGS, of Maryland, THEODORE F. GREEN, of Rhode Island, and BRIEN MCMAHON, of Connecticut—all Democrats—have surely laid the whitewash on with a lavish hand in an effort, political in intent and design, to escape from the very serious charges made against the United States State Department by Senator JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY, of Wisconsin. They poured on the whitewash by the bucketfuls in the 350,000-word majority report they have just issued. It was expected, perhaps all that could be expected, in a campaign year, but the report, we believe, will someday torment its authors. The minority report, by the two Republican Senators of the investigative committee, is yet to be brought in.

Senator MCCARTHY fought his battle almost single-handed against terrific odds. As on other occasions when his opponents sought to shout him down, to smear him, and to put every conceivable roadblock in his pathway, the fates seemed to have conspired to assist Senator MCCARTHY. On the very day the report of the majority whitewashers was published, the FBI arrested still another alleged link in the Soviet espionage group whereby United States atomic secrets were transmitted to Moscow. And this latest accused person is described as a former associate engineering inspector of the United States Army Signal Corps who was removed because of information indicating Communist Party membership.

One of the most senseless and dubious steps ever taken by any Government was the admission of Communists into the Armed Forces of the United States when we were supposedly having a honeymoon as the pal of that ruthless and cynical world conspirator, Josef Stalin.

Senator TYDINGS and his Democratic committee associates can put the whitewash on thicker and thicker, but it is doubtful if they will deceive the thinking people of the United States.

Acheson, Lattimore, and Jessup are still mistrusted by many millions of American citizens, and the time will come, we are convinced, when Senator MCCARTHY will be fully vindicated.

[From the Illinois State Journal of July 21, 1950]

THE WHITEWASH

True to their tinged colors, subservient to orders from higher up, Senators TYDINGS, GREEN, and MCMAHON, all abject New Dealers, have brought in what purports to be their majority report of the subcommittee assigned to probe communism in Government. It absolves everyone whom Senator MCCARTHY, the fighting Wisconsin Republican, wanted truly investigated. But it goes further. It is a signal to Reds, both foreign and domestic, that they may work to undermine the American Republic without fear of molestation from the Truman regime. Moreover, it stands as a practical endorsement of the Communist fifth column in America, in everything it has done and may do.

Minority members of the subcommittee are Senators LODGE and HICKENLOOPER, both Republicans. Neither of these two had been allowed to read the Tydings report before it was made public, but LODGE, who often slants New Deal-wise in his voting, issued findings sharply differing from the three New Dealers' views. Significantly, LODGE asserted that the whole alleged probe was superficial and inconclusive, that the atmosphere too often was not that of seeking the truth and further that the subcommittee's record is a tangle of loose threads, of witnesses not subpenaed, of leads not followed up. In a gentlemanly way, LODGE was saying that the whole performance was a fraud. Senator MCCARTHY was quick to analyze the report as a green light to the Red fifth column in the United States. Senator HICKENLOOPER withheld comment immediately, until he could study the TYDINGS whitewash.

In language both intemperate and unpatriotic, the report makes a personal issue of MCCARTHY, whose charges, TYDINGS says, are an organized campaign of vilification and abuse.

TYDINGS glossed over the testimony of Louis F. Budenz as hearsay, despite the fact that Budenz, the reformed Communist, was telling the subcommittee of his personal contacts and knowledge. He blocked off every effort MCCARTHY made to produce full and undeleted Government files, on which to prove points which MCCARTHY knew had substance. In short, not an effort was spared to make the investigation a fake and a fraud.

The American public now knows beyond every shadow of doubt the subversive atmosphere in which official Washington thrives. It has been asking, since American boys began to bleed and die in Korea, where the billions are that Communists have helped to squander. The public is aware that J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the FBI, only a few days ago warned that the menace of the Communist underground in the United States is the most threatening in American history. The public now will know that Truman's whole concept is to coddle the Communist vote in this country, and the country be damned. In this, he is joined by TYDINGS, LUCAS, and every other pawn of the dawning socialism.

The Tydings outfit, for the moment, has gotten away with its whitewash. Shortly, Americans will rub their eyes and begin to look Washington in the face. When they do, they are going to ask questions. They will want to know why American boys have been sent to their deaths by Truman against Communists in Korea, while Truman's congressional whelps throw arms of safety and preference around Communists' shoulders at home. They will want to know whether, with thirteen to fourteen billions of tax dollars spent every year for defense, Communist influence has directed that most of this money be squandered or, more likely, that it be directed into foreign channels helpful to the Kremlin. They want to know why, with all the braying from every department head in Washington, our boys were sent into battle stations in Korea without a chance.

The Tydings performance may be rated, for a few hours, as a political triumph. Long before November rolls around, it will have served the purpose of bringing out the Truman administration's true color. The hue is red.

AMERASIA, TOO

The Tydings triumvirate wasn't content with calling Senator MCCARTHY every name that reasonable etiquette would permit. It cleared everybody connected with the foul Amerasia scandal of 5 years ago, as well.

That case broke in June 1945, when FBI agents arrested Philip J. Jaffe, editor of the pro-Russian magazine, Amerasia, and found hundreds of secret and confidential Government documents. Five others landed in the FBI net, two of them State Department officials. Jaffe, whose Communist affiliations were well known, made a deal with the Department of Justice, in consequence of which he got off with a light fine. Then the incident was hushed up, and the traitors involved continued to operate as usual, except that the magazine was discontinued. It had been only a cover-up for the real business of stealing and transmitting top Government secrets to Russia, anyway.

The Tydings outfit concedes that the documents found in the Amerasia office were there illegally. But as for Jaffe's having "fixed" the token fine that was assessed against him, Tydings the protector throws up his hands in horror. Perish the thought!

Senator LODGE scored the Jaffe deal. "It is shocking that the Government should have made any deal at all with this man," LODGE averred. It was not only shocking, it was unnecessary. The FBI caught Jaffe and his Amerasia group red-handed. The stolen documents were there. Many of them bore upon highly confidential American defense plans.

Either the Amerasia case was "fixed" by the Government authorities then in charge, or it was glossed over because the administration was unwilling to offend Stalin and his Communists. In either event, the course was that of traitors.

NO MOOD TO FORGET

It ain't so, says the TYDINGS committee. Senator MCCARTHY'S indictment of the State Department is "a fraud and a hoax." There is no evidence, absolutely none, to support the charges against Far Eastern Expert Owen Lattimore, Career Diplomat John S. Service, Ambassador Philip C. Jessup, or others named.

Strewn through the 350,000 words of the TYDINGS committee majority report are some mighty bitter phrases.

Senator MCCARTHY, the report avers, has been guilty of possibly "the most nefarious campaign of untruth" in American history. He has resorted to "gossip, distortion, hearsay and deliberate untruth." He has used the technique of the "big lie," in the Hitler-Stalin manner.

Furthermore:

There was nothing wrong with the way the Amerasia case was handled. No "agency of our Government" was derelict in any way. The fact that hundreds of secret papers belonging to the State Department were found in the offices of this pro-Communist magazine didn't mean anything.

Better forget the whole thing, and concentrate on the pleasant task of kicking JOE MCCARTHY. That appears to be the view of the majority members of the TYDINGS Committee.

The minority rebuttal is offered by Senator LODGE of Massachusetts, a left-wing Republican of internationalist leanings. If he had any preconceived opinions when the investigation began, it is fair to presume that they were favorable to the State Department and hostile to Senator McCarthy.

The Massachusetts Senator was saddened by the whole proceedings. In his report he agrees with the majority that McCarthy did not prove his case. But he adds that the committee made no honest attempt to search for the truth.

The investigation, says Senator Lodge, "must be set down as superficial and inconclusive * * * a tangle of loose threads and leads which were never followed up."

In plainer words—a whitewash.

Senator Lodge particularly criticizes the committee for its "incomplete investigation" of the testimony of former Communist Leader Louis Budenz. The truth is there was no investigation whatever. Mr. Budenz, who has been the Government's key witness in recent Communist cases, charged that Owen Lattimore had been a Communist—and the committee yawned and did nothing further about it except to listen to Mr. Lattimore's denial.

As for the Amerasia case, says Senator Lodge, it was handled "in what appears to be a timid, almost apologetic manner."

What is the public to conclude from all this?

We think the argument over whether Owen Lattimore, or any other individual, ever carried a Red card saying "I am a Communist" is pointless, and will never be settled.

The important thing is not what men carry in their pockets, but what they carry in their heads.

Lattimore, Service, Jessup, and Dean Acheson—he is always in the background—were key members of the State Department clique which decided far-eastern policy. Without exception, until the Korean war started, they followed the Communist line.

This is their record:

At Potsdam, with neophyte President Truman, they surrendered Sakhalin, the Kuriles, Manchuria, and huge stores of Japanese arms, to the Communists. After Potsdam they expertly cut the throat of Chiang Kai-shek, first with ceaseless propaganda about the "corruption" of his regime, and second, with demands that he form a coalition with the Reds (as was done in Czechoslovakia, Poland, etc.). After the Reds had ejected Chiang from Asia this same precious crew bleated that Korea was "indefensible" and that Uncle Sam should never, never "interfere" in Formosa.

Those made-in-Moscow policies led directly to the tragedy now taking place in Korea. Young Americans are giving their lives in a desperate attempt to hold a line which the State Department for years tried and schemed to surrender.

Were the authors of these Red-leaning policies Communists? Or fellow travelers? Or merely Communist dupes?

What does it matter? Knowingly or not, they played Stalin's game. The time has come to kick them out and, for a change, get some leaders in Washington who will play America's game.

The Tydings committee apparently believes that if it cried "Fraud!" and "Hoax!" loudly enough at Senator McCarthy, people will forget the betrayal of American interests in Asia by the Acheson-Lattimore, Service-Jessup axis.

If so, we think the Tydings committee is wrong. We think the people, sorrowfully watching events in Korea, are in no mood to forget.

[From the Arizona Daily Star of July 18, 1950]

Owen Lattimore, Self-Revealed

During the past several months the name of Owen Lattimore has been featured in the news as a No. 1 Communist in the Department of State as a result of the charges made by Senator McCarthy. Nothing definite to support the charges has been presented. Still many people have doubts, because they can remember how a similar situation developed after Alger Hiss first appeared in the news.

From the beginning the Star has said that, although Mr. Lattimore appeared to be sympathetic to numerous policies that favored the Soviet Union, it did not believe that he was a party member. Recently as a result of developments in Korea, passages from Mr. Lattimore's book, the Situation in Asia, published in 1949 have received notice. One on the situation in Korea is particularly pertinent. It reads as follows:

"The Russians organized a national army (in North Korea) grounding it on peasants who had land to defend and industrial workers who considered the new government their own, since it had been based on protection of their rights. The army was equipped with Russian, not captured Japanese, material.

"In South Korea the Americans organized, not a national army, but a constabulary, the backbone of which consists of men who served in the police under the Japanese—the most hated of all who collaborated with the Japanese. * * * Various enterprises have been nationalized, but have been staffed with personnel in political favor, whose outlook is not one of serving the state but of building individual property for themselves and eventually converting public into private property. * * * The army cannot be trusted to fight; the people do not trust the government; the government cannot be depended on, and does not depend on itself; it appeals for continued American occupation and protection.

"If there is to be a civil war * * * North Korea would be able to overrun South Korea without Russian help, unless stopped by American combat troops."

Those are prophetic words, but they are also revealing ones. They reveal Lattimore as one who thinks closely in sympathy with the Communist Party line, and as one who resorts to typical Communist propaganda tricks.

Let it be noted that he has only great praise and good to say for Communist Korea, and only biting scorn for the democracy of South Korea. Nowhere does he point out that North Korea is a cruel, efficient, Communist police state and that South Korea, as a new democracy, would be bound to show the usual weaknesses of a democracy.

He says that the North army was recruited from "peasants * * * and industrial workers who considered the new government their own, since it had been based on protection of their rights." Just to the contrary, he ridicules the South as an army recruited from the former Japanese constabulary.

How does he know so well that soldiers of the North feel the way he says they do? How does he know that the government of the North is protecting their rights? How does he imply that the Government of the South is not also protecting the rights of its soldiers and people? How can he say truthfully that the army of the South was a former Japanese constabulary, when its members were volunteers, 96,000 of them? Why does he present such a prejudiced picture of the South army and such a glowing one of the North?

He says not a word about how in the South all Japanese land holdings and all big estates had been divided among the actual tillers of the soil, and that productivity in agriculture and industry were increasing rapidly. He says not a word about how in the South men were free to criticize, free to choose their representatives to a national assembly and not limited to a one-party ticket. He says not a word about the thousands of refugees who escaped from the North, how the United Nations Commission was not free to inspect the North but could go anywhere in South Korea.

Mr. Lattimore falls into regular Communist lingo when he writes about the partial nationalization of industries in the South. He says they "have been staffed with personnel in political favor, whose outlook is not one of serving the state but of building individual property for themselves and eventually converting public into private property."

The implications of that statement are that industry must be public property. People must serve the state. That is a demand that Stalin, Hitler and Mussolini always made. Private property is wrong, as is a free society. Lattimore has not a word to say about how everything that was to be done in South Korea was being done under the supervision of American advisers.

Lattimore's words about the fighting qualities of the two armies sound prophetic, but he fails to inform that the Russians had no scruples about furnishing their satellite with modern tanks, plenty of good artillery and modern aviation. He ignores completely that we denied such weapons to the South Koreans, because they might be considered "offensive."

Today we are seeing that not even American soldiers can stop tanks and planes with rifles and machine guns.

Why did Lattimore fail, as a scholar, to present such facts?

He says not a word about how the South Koreans were forbidden to call for the unification of their country, but the North Koreans could. In the name of democracy we Americans denied the South the right to make that appeal that beats in the breast of every Korean.

In the past the Star has defended Mr. Lattimore. It now, as a result of what he writes in his book, distrusts him. He is no longer entitled to respect as a man of intellectual integrity. He has no business being a confidential adviser to our Government.

[From the Indianapolis Times of June 30, 1950]

Smellier and Smellier

Senator Tydings, McMahon, and Green are trying to get away with a fast one.

Apparently they think it's smart Democratic politics to close up the Amerasia investigation in a hurry while public attention is on the awesome developments of the Korean war.

By a vote of 3 to 2 they have overridden Republican committeemen, Senators Lodge and Hickenlooper, and ordered the committee staff to draft what they call an "interim report"—though it is obvious that Senators Tydings, McMahon, and Green do not intend to call any more witnesses or uncover any more unsavory facts in the Amerasia mess.

Senators Lodge and Hickenlooper have a right to be indignant, as they are. They have a right to denounce the committee majority's outrageous steamroller tactics from the Senate floor, as we trust they will.

From the start of this sorry imitation of an investigation, Senators Tydings, McMahon, and Green have acted like men trying to keep the truth of the Amerasia affair from being brought out into the broad light of day.

In our opinion, they have been all too clever. Neither the Congress nor the public can have any confidence in any report they sign. They have played hide-and-seek, opening committee hearings to present one side of the picture, closing committee doors to prevent the public from hearing the other side.

Their chief counsel, Edward Morgan, in cross-examining witnesses accused of improper conduct, has acted like a defense attorney—following somewhat the same pattern as the original Justice Department prosecutor on the Amerasia defendants. They muzzled the Republican counsel, Robert Morris, when he tried to ask the right questions.

And now Messrs. TYDINGS, MCMAHON, and GREEN are trying to shut off proceeding without calling the most important witnesses.

Among the important uncalled witnesses are Laughlin Currie, Thomas Corcoran, Ben Cohen, Supreme Court Justice Tom Clark, and Judge James M. Proctor.

EXHIBIT 4

[From Life magazine of July 24, 1950]

JOHNSON OR ACHESON?

In the last 2 weeks or so, while inadequate American forces were being beaten back in Korea, it looked as if Louis Johnson would have to take the rap. But to put the biggest part of the blame on the Secretary of Defense is to judge matters superficially. Our weakness in the West Pacific was caused by fundamental errors. These fundamental errors were the errors of the Secretary of State, Dean Acheson.

Johnson is wide open to criticism. He made much too much blather about economizing, and a case could be made for his retirement. But he was carrying out the orders of the President. It was Truman who scuttled a minimum adequate defense program in 1948, and this year, when Congress wanted to reinstate some of the cuts, he opposed it.

Nevertheless the fundamental reason that we were so unprepared to meet the Red attack is that Acheson refused to face the dangers of the Communist advance in Asia. He offered the military chiefs a phony choice: all-out commitment of United States strength to anti-Communist forces in Asia or no effective resistance at all. Naturally the military men, hamstrung by economy cuts, backed away. Discouraged, they made no plans for fighting communism in Asia.

It was Acheson who was Truman's chief adviser on basic policy, and Acheson was also Truman's chief alibi-ist. It was Acheson, not Johnson, who befriended Alger Hiss and was mixed up with the Owen Lattimore crowd in the State Department who stupidly or deliberately played into Communist hands in Asia. Johnson and the Joint Chiefs of Staff were for sending a mission to Formosa; it was Acheson who persuaded Truman to override them. Acheson would not only have let Formosa go to the Communists, he might have recognized the Communist Government of China, if he could have got away with it—and he still might.

The country can have no confidence in the conduct of our struggle against communism in Asia as long as Acheson is Secretary of State. Acheson should go.

ERRONEOUS POSTULATES OF COMMUNIST PHILOSOPHY—ARTICLE BY ERWIN D. CANHAM

Mr. McMAHON and Mr. DONNELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILEY in the chair). Just a moment: In his capacity as a Senator from Wisconsin the Chair wants to make a statement on his own behalf, and he then wants also to clear up a little misunderstanding which has occurred in relation to the question as to who should be recognized. But before doing that, the Chair wishes to say that it is not very often, in these days, that one can turn to a newspaper or a magazine and find an article that is worthy of the philosophy of a Plato or a Socrates. But the Chair had that experience recently, and in view of his colleague's speech today, he wants to ask unanimous consent to place the article in the RECORD. It is an article entitled "The Authentic Revolution," by Erwin D. Canham, and was published in the Christian Science Monitor. The Chair merely wants to read one or two paragraphs from the article because while today we have been centering our attention on the mistakes we have made, or have been making, in the Far East, but here, it is good to note, and this will be especially good for Mr. Barrett, as head of the Voice of America section, to note——

Mr. MCMAHON. Mr. President, may I first ask——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair finish.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MORSE. I just came into the Chamber. I am at a loss to understand the procedure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The procedure is that the Senator from Wisconsin has recognized himself for 3 minutes to put something in the RECORD.

Mr. MORSE. Does the Senator ask consent to do that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; he asks unanimous consent as a Senator to insert something in the RECORD.

Mr. MORSE. Did any Senator reserve the right to object? I should say it is an extraordinary procedure. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The distinguished Senator from Oregon thinks the senior Senator from Wisconsin is engaging in debate. The Chair is not doing that. The Chair wants to place something in the RECORD, because he has tried for 3 or 4 days on the floor to get something in the RECORD, and other Senators have been occupying the floor for so long that now the Presiding Officer, as a Senator from Wisconsin, is going to put this in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT entered the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Following which, the Chair will recognize the Vice President. The Chair asks unanimous consent that this article, written by Erwin D. Canham, be placed in the RECORD, following the remarks of the Chair.

Mr. MORSE. I object.

Mr. MORSE subsequently said:

Mr. President, I wonder if I may be allowed to ask unanimous consent that the senior Senator from Wisconsin may introduce into the RECORD the article which he wanted to introduce while he was the Presiding Officer. I objected. I did so most kindly, because I am very fond of the senior Senator from Wisconsin. I objected because I thought it would be a violation of the rules of the Senate for him to introduce anything into the RECORD while presiding over the Senate. While presiding he is acting for the Vice President as the Presiding Officer of the Senate. It is clear that as the Presiding Officer he is not free to engage in the legislative work of the Senate. That is why I objected to his introducing it while he occupied the chair. I did so in order to keep what I think must be kept pure—the rules of the Senate. Now I should like to ask unanimous consent to have my good friend from Wisconsin introduce the article from the floor, from where I thought it should have been offered in the first instance.

Mr. WILEY. I cannot agree with the technical attitude of my good friend from Oregon, but I agree that he is a pretty good fellow. I have seen a Presiding Officer do the very same thing several times. I did not do it as the Presiding Officer, as I indicated at the time. I offered the article as a Senator from Wisconsin. I asked if there was objection to my doing it, and the Senator from Oregon objected.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD an article entitled "The Authentic Revolution," written by Erwin D. Canham, and published in the Christian Science Monitor magazine section of July 15, 1950. I call particular attention to the significance of this article and to some of the quotations included therein.

Charles Malik, Minister from Lebanon to the United States, has well said:

To the superficial observer who is unable to penetrate to the core of love and truth which is still at the heart of the West, there is little to choose beween the soulless materialism of the West and the militant materialism of the East.

Mr. Malik tells us further that we must not simply export our flourishing political institutions, our happy human relations, our reputation for wealth and prosperity, or our expert advice and technical assistance, but to be able to lead and save others we must export the great ideas of our minds, our great truths rooted in the Graeco-Roman-Hebrew-Christian-western European humane outlook.

In this article Mr. Canham gives the three basic erroneous postulates of the Communist philosophy. He concludes with the challenge to all of us to get across the right ideas and the right way of life, instead of simply the materialistic concepts.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE AUTHENTIC REVOLUTION—WE ARE THE GREAT REVOLUTIONARIES, AND OUR REVOLUTION IS A SPIRITUAL ONE

(By Erwin D. Canham, editor of the Christian Science Monitor)

I

Let me tell you my thesis bluntly at the outset.

It is that the struggle for the salvation of free society in our time will be lost unless we in the West—and particularly we in the United States—awaken to and project the fact that we are the great revolutionaries in world history, and that our revolution is basically a spiritual one which we have already proved in action.

We have let most of the world think that the American achievement is primarily materialistic. This is the great gap between ourselves and those who yearn for much more than materialism. And we are the first victims ourselves of the misunderstanding.

The misunderstanding concerning America which is so pervasive in the world today is the key to the future of western society.

For, as Charles Malik, Minister of Lebanon to the United States, has well said: "To the superficial observer who is unable to penetrate to the core of love and truth which is still at the heart of the West, there is little to choose between the soulless materialism of the West and the militant materialism of the East."

And, as Mr. Malik further told us in the West: "If your only export in these realms is the silent example of flourishing political institutions and happy human relations, you cannot lead. If your only export is a distant reputation for wealth and prosperity and order, you cannot lead. Nor can you really lead if you send forth to others only expert advice and technical assistance. To be able to lead and save yourself and others, you must, above everything else, address your mind and soul. Your tradition, rooted in the glorious Graeco-Roman-Hebrew-Christian-western European human outlook, supplies you with all the necessary presuppositions for leadership. All you have to do is to be the deepest you already are."

There is the challenge of the hour. These are not challenges requiring the postulating of new fundamentals. They call for no panaceas. It is a call to awakening and to articulation. The basic need is to understand and to proclaim the truth. The West must find its voice.

Let us, therefore, ask ourselves a few fundamental questions. Let us proclaim the truth on the issues which confront the world. Mankind today is being told it must choose between revolution and reaction. It is told that communism represents revolution, and that our system—which is opprobriously called capitalism—represents reaction. In such a confrontation, there would be no choice. Mankind must go forward. But this statement of the issue is an explicit reversal of the truth.

The fact is that communism—like totalitarianism in any form—represents the blackest of reactions. The fact is that the free system, of which capitalism is only a small and modified part, represents the authentic revolution—not a subversive revolution, but a revolution which sets men free.

We in the Western World are the true standard-bearers of a great and emancipating doctrine. But we have allowed ourselves to be thrust into the indefensible position of seeking to protect the status quo. The free system is by no means the same thing as the status quo. Our tradition is not static, but is constantly dynamic. Our tradition strikes off chains. Totalitarianism would put them back on again.

The stirring battle cry which ends the Communist manifesto is itself a delusion. Marx and Engels wrote: "The proletarians have nothing to lose but their chains. They have a world to win." Where, in today's world, are most people in chains? Is it in the United States, where what is perhaps the most enlightened labor contract in history was recently signed by our largest industrial corporation and one of our largest trade-unions? Or is it in the world's most extensive Communist state, the Soviet Union, where tragic millions, suffering and dying, are bearing the literal chains of slave labor? Is it in Britain, where labor's own government is in power and is carrying through the most extensive peaceful and gradual social revolution in history? Where are the chains today? Where are the mental chains? Are they in the free universities and the free churches of the Western World? Or are they in the Communist states, where man's right to think is now denied on behalf of the omnipotent state, and free science or free religion has ceased to exist?

II

These are among the facts to which we must awaken.

But let us come at our task in an orderly way. Let us first ask ourselves, in the most searching possible fashion, what are the chief claims of communism, and let us confront these statements with the best truth we know. Then let us examine the two doctrines—communism and western democracy—in actual practice, to test their words by their works. And, finally, let us chart a plan of campaign in this great battle of truth against falsehood.

First, what are communism's basic postulates?

The primary claim of communism—the foundation stone on which it rests—is that of dialectical materialism. It is the assertion that ultimate reality lies in matter, and in matter alone. But the truth as we know it is that superior to matter in every way is the reality of mind and of spirit. In our time an awakening to the metaphysical bankruptcy of materialism is beginning to sweep over thoughtful mankind. The awakening is most striking among the natural scientists. They are finding, in the realm of the very little and of the very large—of the infinitesimal and of the infinite—that old materialistic assumptions are no longer valid. Reality is now by them recognized to be related to consciousness. Time and space are seen to be dependent upon consciousness. Reality is emerging more and more to today's thinker as the basic essence which lies behind and beneath the material manifestation. In short, not the chair of wood and wicker, but the idea of chair existing in consciousness, is seen to come closer to ultimate reality.

There is an even more striking and topical proof of the bankruptcy of materialism. Men have wrought the most powerful engines in their experience; from gunpowder and steam and electricity they have progressed to atomic power. And yet they now see that the power to help or harm mankind lies not in the atom itself, not in the uranium or plutonium or tritium, but in the thinking that motivates the finger which does or does not push the button that does or does not set off these fearful engines of destruction. In the words of a great Yale natural scientist, Dr. Edmund W. Sinnott, "Man, not matter, is the chief problem of mankind today."

The second great lie of communism walks hand in hand with the first. It is that there is no God. Today we have the opportunity of knowing as never before that there is indeed a God, who is the loving Father of all mankind. We do not necessarily have to identify God merely with the single three-letter name, G-o-d. Perhaps it is useful to redefine God as the central principle of the universe. Perhaps it helps to think of Him as Eternal Truth and Life and Love. These things cannot be denied. We know the universe is orderly. We know that it works according to established rules and principles, some of which we have been able to partially define. It seems to me to be rationally impossible to recognize the reality of an orderly universe and to deny God.

Still further to disprove Communist dialectic, take the assertions that there is no objective and eternal truth, and that only the transient and the temporal exist. I am sure that we in the Western World can readily prove to our satisfaction that there is truth, and that it is transcendent. Again we can prove it in the working of the laws of the universe. Or we can prove it in the vast and noble reaches of the mind and the heart. There is abundant evidence of the existence of permanent and imminent values. These are accessible to mankind through a humble search for understanding. They come through the path of reason as well as down the road of revelation. They lift mankind out of its own confusions and perversities. They are to be confirmed not only in the religious convictions and teachings of mankind, but in the positive philosophical traditions of Plato and Aristotle, of Hegel and Whitehead.

Finally we come to another great Communist falsehood: That the individual exists for the sake of society and the state. This lie follows logically from the assertion of materialism and the denial of eternal truth and order. It is the specific doctrine which enslaves mankind. And yet the truth as we know it and prove it in action daily is that the state and society exist for the sake of the individual. It is this Communist lie which stifles the spirit of man. It is totalitarian. It is contrary to nature and to man. Again in the eloquent words of Dr. Malik: "That the state, the mere organ of government and order, is the source of every law, every truth, every norm of conduct, every social and economic relationship; that no science, no music, no economic activity, no philosophy, no art, no theology, is to be permitted except if it is state-licensed and state controlled: all of this is so false, so arrogant, so autocratic, and tyrannical that no man who has drunk deep from the living waters of the western Platonic-Christian tradition can possibly accept it. The state does not come in first place; it comes in tenth or fifteenth place. The university is higher than the state; the tradition of free inquiry is higher than the state; the church is higher than the state; the family is higher than the state; natural law is higher than the state; God is higher than the state; within limits, free economic activity is higher than the state".

It is good that Dr. Malik should have recognized not only the spiritual importance of church and university and family, but of free economic activity as well. For this brings us to the crux of our problem today. It is the free economic activity of the West which is most under fire in the contemporary world. It is this free economic activity which is used by those who hate it or misunderstand it to brand the West with the stigma and curse of materialism. The need, therefore, is for an awakening to the spiritual obligation and heritage of the free economic system.

III

Let us, then, proceed to the second of our main points: an examination of communism and the free economic system as they reveal themselves in action.

It is not necessary, first of all, to belittle the actual achievements of the Soviet state. Historic objectivity requires us to recall the importance of the transition from czardom, the achievement of partial industrialization in the face of two wars. In a certain narrow framework the Soviet state has accepted a large obligation to the individuals who make it up. It has gone a long way toward harmonizing the diverse interests of widely separated and scattered racial and cultural groups. In World War II the Red army under Marshal Stalin helped greatly in resisting and defeating a powerful aggressor.

It is important to recognize, also, that we have to live with the Russians, and many of the things we find dangerous in the present Soviet state are traits and trends which long antedate communism. We must find ways of adjusting ourselves to life with an awakened Eurasian continent. It is, perhaps, a blessing for mankind that the awakening and industrialization of this vast area has come about under a system which inevitably handicaps and limits its potential achievement. Sometimes one is appalled at the aggressive possibilities of a Russian empire organized with the efficiency and power of industrialized Britain in the nineteenth century or the United States in the twentieth century. A great natural scientist, Dr. Merle Tuve, recently remarked that the greatest single discovery of World War II was the efficiency of the free system. That kind of efficiency coupled with the natural resources and the immense racial dynamism of the people now under the hammer and sickle would make a world force of incalculable potential.

Communism has partly liberated and partly stifled this great capacity. On balance, at the point of the midcentury, there is far more of stifling than there is of liberation. When, as I believe to be inevitable, the Russian peoples are finally and genuinely liberated, we must be ready with a universal system of peace and order. Otherwise, they will be an explosive force against which today's communism will be a pallid squib. Fortunately, there is also in the Russian people a great and magnificent spiritual and universal yearning. The free Russian soul, in all its exuberance, longs for human brotherhood and bears a heavy burden of anguish for the spiritual failure of humankind. These deep impulses have helped to support communism. They would be far more effective in support of a free system wrought for the benefit of all mankind. The Russian need for religion has partially and temporarily accepted communism as a religion. When the Russian spirit is ultimately freed, it must find its way fully into the spiritual pastures of the great western tradition of truth and love. Otherwise, Russia might remain the world's great challenge for long and turbulent years—far more dangerously than in our own time, when Russia is self-curbed by a hopelessly inefficient and inhibiting system. Even under the present limitations, it is unnecessary to add that the Russian achievement is considerable.

But on balance the system remains one of chains and of slavery. It remains reaction, of the pattern of all the tyrannies that have sought to bind the free spirit of man and to withhold his natural rights down through the millennia. The fact is that communism in its works is both spiritually and materially sterile. It is fundamentally a failure, because it is unable to utilize more than the merest fraction of the forces which are available. It is the most profligate destroyer of human resources. Its concentration camps and its mass graves are filled with the richest of human talent. Those who survive are denied the immense productive force of free inquiry, of objective experiment, and of full self-analysis.

Against all this, contrast the actual achievement of the free system of the West. The American economy—derided and attacked by its enemies—is today holding the line against world collapse. With all the faults which we know full well lie within our society and in its economic organization, the fact remains that the world today would be in chaos without the stability and productivity of the United States.

I am not here seeking to put a halo around the profit motive: far from it. The first and most important thing to say about the free economic system is that it can survive only to the degree that the individuals and combinations that make it up accept their social obligation.

Moreover, there is a considerable difference between much of the economic organization that passes by the name of capitalism in some parts of the world and the best of the free economic system which enlightened leadership has brought into being in the United States and elsewhere. In many places overseas, when we defend capitalism we defend a feudal or a cartelist concept which would appall the thoughtful American business enterpriser. In some places, it is true, a sense of social obligation has dawned. We are not necessarily committed to the task of putting Humpty-Dumpty together again. But it is essential for us to put the importance of social obligation first, and not place ourselves in the position of advocating the return of industrial or financial feudalism.

IV

The free economic system in the United States, and measurably in many other parts of the world—including, particularly, the smaller states where neutrality and/or cooperation have supported much real equality and high standards of living—can be objectively left to stand or fall on its own merits. It stands. It stands because it has given more opportunity to the individual than any other system ever tried. It stands because it is perfectible. It is not dogmatic—or should not be. It should always recognize the imperatives of self-criticism and of change. It should remember the paramountcy of human values. But these are not values of social security alone.

There are serious shortcomings in the idea of security, taken as an ultimate value. No society which enshrined security as an end in itself was able long to continue the march of progress. Dissatisfaction, adversity, risk—these are the imperatives of progress. Furthermore, to enshrine security as an end in itself, and to place its procurement and maintenance in the hands of the state, is to say that the state is above the individual. That is the road of slavery; of social suicide. We must keep the individual and the individual-based forms of organization as our primary values; man and church and school, along with family and free economic activity. The state owes nobody a living. At the same time, it is necessary and effective to organize through the state the various functions which the individual or private organizations cannot accomplish. It goes without saying that insurance barriers against the hazards of the economic system, old age or unemployment, are accepted and legitimate parts of collective responsibility. That form of social security can be kept in its proper place.

But the increasing sense of dependence of the individual upon the state is not the obverse of the needful recognition of social obligation. It is, however, often the result of the failure of free enterprise to recognize its social obligation. In an industrial society, dominated by mass production, the individual is peculiarly insecure. He will seek the means of survival through collective action. For the laborer and artisan, protection comes through unions and government. Sometimes it comes through a cooperative relationship with his employer, which is best of all. For the employer, protection also comes through collective action, sometimes private and sometimes in governmental laws and procedures. But we have made great progress in evolving forms which are consistent both with free enterprise and with the special hazards of an industrial society. And again I must emphasize that these forms work best when they are founded upon a voluntary and perceptive acceptance of social obligation. That is the final and indispensable bulwark of the free system.

The fruits of the system are expressed in material and spiritual terms. Altogether too often we have remembered only the material rewards. We boast of our standard of living, and when we go abroad the dollars clink in our pockets. We are sometimes obsessed with material gain and with unrestrained selfishness. We have been our own worst salesmen, for we have convinced most of the rest of the world that we are money-mad materialists. But the greatest fruitage of the free system is spiritual. It stands in the recognition of the essential dignity of man which is implicit in equality of opportunity. It lies in the concept of legitimate service.

Perhaps you will understand me when I say, not too whimsically, that the American filling station is a very good illustration of the triumph of the free system. It is not the mechanical excellence of the filling station which is its chief virtue. It is its spirit. There are an enthusiasm and a self-respect which have infused the filling station and made it one of the most successful of our various institutions. I do not altogether know why this is so, I merely point out that our free economic system at its best has gone a long way toward the enshrining of human values and the attainment of a genuinely democratic relationship between server and served. I do not think anyone will deny that this is a spiritual value.

Something of the same achievement was illustrated the other day by the words of a German editor who recently had an opportunity to visit the United States. He was taken to a small eastern city as the guest of a local newspaper. I asked him how he liked it and what he had learned. He put it in these words: "The best thing was that they introduced me to everybody, and they introduced me to the lift boy just the same way they introduced me to the mayor."

Awareness of the individual importance of man is our greatest achievement. It lies at the heart of the matter. Recognizing the significance of individual man, we have been able to mobilize and utilize the vast and still uncounted and uncountable resources of the human spirit. This is an accomplishment of revolutionary importance. It springs from the circumstances under which Europeans first came to the New World; it is based upon the political and ideological and spiritual roots of our society. It is genuine democracy. Established in the midst of the natural resources of a continent, it has enabled us to become a material and spiritual bastion for the safeguarding of western civilization. We have been able to achieve the adequate blending of natural and human resources, and while we have wasted natural resources often in a profligate manner, we have come to utilize human resources within enterprising but humane bounds. This is illustrated by our rejection of child labor on the one hand and our increasingly wide opportunities for women on the other. But I would not gild the lily. There are plenty of dark spots in our human experience, as we have moved toward fuller light. There are dark spots today. They are part of the challenge, part of the incentive, part of the unfinished business without which we would decline and perish.

V

And that brings us to our third point: a plan of campaign in the war of ideas. The first necessity is manifestly self-awakening. We must rediscover the ideas by which we live. The ideology of communism is well known and widely proclaimed. It is passionately believed by many of those who proclaim it. This awareness and intensity is integrated and guided. There is no comparable intensity or coordination of ideas among those who believe in the free system. There will not be until we look at our heritage in fundamental terms and arouse ourselves to its revolutionary import today. The obligation of every citizen, of every leader, is to awaken himself and to awaken his fellow man to the significance of today's challenge.

The second necessity, after the awakening, is the voice. Already there are various small voices from the free nations—voices seeking to penetrate the void of human thinking. They must rise to full articulation. We possess today mighty machines for disseminating ideas to every corner of the globe. But we have not yet learned what we have to say. In fact, the message we must say is the same old message of truth down the ages: the significance of man under God, of his brotherhood, of his birthright of freedom.

The third necessity, along with the awakening and the voice, is the fuller demonstration of the free system in action. There is contagion in falsehood. Some of the lies of totalitarianism and materialism have penetrated into our own thinking. We must not let them stay there. In this unhealthy atmosphere of no peace, no war, we have yielded some citadels to the enemy. Some have sought to weaken or destroy the free spirit of inquiry and of teaching in our schools and universities. Happily, enough have seen the truth clearly and have prevented the sabotage of our educational institutions. In these bewildering times we have yielded to distrust of human character, and the cloud of suspicion—often of slander—hangs heavy over the human spirit. We must learn again to trust character, because free institutions depend upon respect for fellow man. We must spurn the corrosive doubts which do far more harm to our body politic than the dangers to which they pertain. We must, as I have said earlier, manifest social responsibility throughout our economic system. We must make swifter progress toward the removal of racial and religious barriers which prevent true community. These are but a few of our items of unfinished business—of our ways of proving in action the truth by which alone we live.

And, finally, let us regain perspective, let us cast off the inferiority complex with which communism has bemused us, let us reaffirm a consciousness of our birthright.

We stand in human history as the greatest revolutionaries of all time. Not just we Americans—but all of us in the Western World.

We are the guardians of a sacred and dynamic heritage. We have come a long way. We have a long way to go.

We have discovered long since the eternal truth of love and peace and brotherhood. We have discovered and in a measure applied the enormous potency of the freeman.

We have lifted part way the heavy burden of toil that has crushed humanity down through the years, and more gloriously we have begun to lift the curtain of ignorance which has blanketed the human mind.

We are on the march.

And today we are challenged. For the challenge we may be infinitely grateful. Because our society today faces adversity. There is a hill up which we must climb. We will not decline in slothful ease. We will pit ourselves against the lies which in our time assault the deep foundations of truth. These lies cannot prevail, even to the extent of setting civilization into a relapse, if we are worthy of our heritage.

And we can and will be worthy of that heritage if and as we awaken. The voice of no one of us is powerful enough to awaken all the slumberers in today's world.

It is our individual and collective duty to think these things through for ourselves, and in our free way to help our brother man to his needful awareness. Let us pass along the message of freedom. One day it will reach critical mass and a chain reaction will begin.

Meantime, we must preserve the physical defenses of the Western World by keeping military aggression at bay; we must strengthen the economic sinews and the stability of the free world; we must lead our civilization to higher plateaus of demonstrated freedom and achievement.

And from the valley below, those who have accepted the false doctrines of totalitarianism of the right or the left will one day see the heights to which we have ascended and will join us on the continuous pathway ahead.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Snader, its assistant reading clerk, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the bill (S. 3937) to authorize the President to extend enlistments in the Armed Forces of the United States.

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

Mr. DONNELL and Mr. McMAHON addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was walking through the door into the Chamber, and therefore does not know which Senator first addressed the Chair. For what purpose do the two Senators rise?

Mr. McMAHON. I rise to talk for about 3 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under those conditions, the Chair will recognize the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Chair requested the two Senators to state for what purpose they rose, I should like to have an opportunity to state it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DONNELL. I rise for the purpose of obtaining the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Connecticut, because he says he only wants 3 minutes.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, we have listened to the junior Senator from Wisconsin discuss the report of the subcommittee on foreign relations regarding employee loyalty in the State Department. He stated, and I am sure he did not mean to, that the committee had cleared Mr. Remington. Mr. Remington's case was not considered by the committee, because he was never an employee of the State Department.

The Senator from Wisconsin has also read to the Senate and placed in the RECORD an investigative report of the Federal Bureau of Investigation on one of the cases which the Senator submitted to the subcommittee. He has crossed out the name of the subject. I was able, however, to identify the man in question, and I have received from him permission to place in the RECORD some 21 affidavits as to his loyalty, patriotism, and integrity. I must do the necessary clerical work of crossing out the man's name wherever it appears.

I should like to read an excerpt from the first affidavit in the file given by a man and wife of undisputed ability, integrity, and patriotism. It is rather a lengthy affidavit, but I should like the Senate to get the benefit of two or three paragraphs of it, because they are somewhat illuminating. I read:

Since ——— was Russian born, we were especially interested in his views regarding Soviet development, and would have quickly detected any Communist sympathies, if he had any, no matter how cleverly they might have been concealed, for in a long, intimate relationship there are many unguarded moments when, in words, or gestures, or facial expressions, the deepest thoughts and feelings of friends are revealed. We have heard from him and his parents about his early childhood in Russia, particularly during the revolution, when his family were refugees. They had nothing in common with revolutionists. In analyzing Soviet developments, ——— has, however, been clear-headed and objective. His views on the Soviet Union have not been prejudiced by emotional considerations arising from the fact that he was denied the heritage of a native homeland. His intellectual discipline was of too high a standard to have permitted it. He has regarded Soviet developments in the light of basic social forces and world trends.

We discussed at great length the significance of Russia's turn against Germany and her alinement with the democracies. His view, which, if publicly expressed at the time, would have constituted a serious indiscretion, and that the Second World War had come to be not at all a conflict between two ideologies or ways of life but rather a conflict between Germany and Russia for leadership of a totalitarian movement (fascism vs. communism), leaving the question of totalitarianism versus democracy to be fought out later between the United States and Russia. He recognized, however, that our choice was to face the prospect of a second bout, against Russia, or run the risk of losing the first bout against Germany, and was accordingly reconciled to our alliance with the Soviet Union. The point is that ——— and his wife, who shared his views, were privately not sympathetic toward Russia at the time when expressions of pro-Soviet sympathies were popular.

The ——— were not without a sense of humor, however, regarding the Communist experiment in Russia. We recall in particular a book which they lent us, written by two Russians, with the title of The Little Golden Calf, the amusing situations in which were based on the corruption and incredible stupidity of Soviet officials and administrators. It was a source of delight to ——— that the book, written in the early twenties by approved Communist authors, achieved such popularity in the Soviet Union that the Government, after discovering its subtle satire on the Soviet regime, was unable to effect its suppression.

It is also recalled that among other books which the ——— lent us was a novel of outstanding merit regarding Soviet Russia, Darkness at Noon, by Koestler, which is the most convincing and devastating commentary on the Communist regime which we have read. It is devastating for the reason that, although the author, like ———, is able to present with tolerance and understanding the social grievances which have fostered the rise of communism, he, like ———, is quick to point out with equal objectivity the logical consequences of the Communist philosophy and course of action; namely, the enslavement of the individual, or, if he resists, his extermination.

It is perhaps conceivable that unsophisticated persons, impressed only by emotional manifestations, might have, through ignorance, mistaken ——— intellectual objectivity toward Russia as a symptom of Communist sympathy. It is not conceivable, however, that anyone capable of a rational approach to social problems and their solutions could interpret ——— views regarding Russia as anything but deeply and emphatically opposed to communism and Communists' activities.

We have known ——— ——— as a wife and mother, extremely devoted to her husband and children, and as a highly intelligent person interested chiefly in the arts, rather than in political, social, or economic matters. We have observed that in regard to such matters she shares her husband's views. It would be difficult to believe that, in view of the exceptionally close and harmonious relations between her and her husband, she could hold political views differing substantially from those of her husband.

I, Betty Carr, have discussed with ———, among other subjects of usual interest to women, problems of child training and care and know that she strongly opposes regimentation and tries to encourage in her children the spirit of individualism. She, as well as her husband, believes strongly in the institution of the family and in the institution of private property on which it is in a large part based.

On the basis of our long and intimate relationship with ———— and ————, we are convinced that they are not Communists, that they are not in sympathy with Communist philosophy, objectives, or activities, and that they can be completely trusted as loyal Americans, faithful and devoted to the political, economic, and social principles embodied in the Constitution of the United States. In fact, we cannot conceive on what basis their loyalty might be questioned, and are deeply distressed that such a statement as this should be necessary.

Mr. President, this is one of 21 affidavits bearing upon the subject's loyalty. One of the most distinguished Members of this body, who does not sit on this side of the aisle, but on the other side of the aisle, has an affidavit in this file as to this man's Americanism as of 1938.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator give the name of that Senator?

Mr. McMAHON. Yes; I intend to place the affidavit in the RECORD. I refer to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE]. This man worked for the junior Senator from Oregon on a project in the Department of Justice in 1938.

This is an example of the situation about which I spoke several days ago. If we take simply one part of a file and say that on the basis of it, without any hearings, without giving the accused an opportunity to appear and offer evidence to contradict the evidence given, then I say that if we stand for that system we have denied one of the basic and fundamental propositions which we hold to be basically American.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McMAHON. I shall not yield. I have sat here for 3 hours, it is now 3:30 p. m. and I have not had any lunch. I shall place this matter in the RECORD, and then I shall get some lunch.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at this point in my remarks the 21 affidavits bearing upon this subject, which, of course, were weighed by the Loyalty Board, in addition to all the other material in the file, be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, unless the Senator will show me the name on the affidavit, to see whether it is the same individual whom I mentioned, I shall have to object. Otherwise, I would have no way of knowing whether it is the same individual.

Mr. McMAHON. Does the Senator wish to look at the affidavit?

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, while the Senator is looking at the affidavit, let me say that he has also referred to a gentleman by the name of Theodore Geiger, an ECA employee. Mr. Geiger was the subject of some attention by our assistant counsel, Mr. Morris.

I should like to read into the RECORD at this point a letter written on the letterhead of the Economic Cooperation Administration, signed by William Foster as Acting Administrator, dated July 6.

I ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he has found that the name in the affidavit which I handed him is that of the same individual he had in mind.

Mr. McCARTHY. The last name is the same, and the first name is the same.

Mr. McMAHON. The Senator understands that I shall delete the names as I put the affidavits into the RECORD. It is quite regrettable that the Senator from Wisconsin, when he put in a part of the file, was not able to give us the rest of the file, so that we could have both sides of the case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the 21 affidavits will be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. McMAHON. The letter from Mr. Foster, which is addressed to the chairman of the so-called Tydings-McMahon committee, reads:

ECONOMIC COOPERATION ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., July 5, 1950.

Hon. MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: In connection with your inquiry of July 3, 1950, concerning Theodore Geiger, an ECA employee, I would like to state that he has been investigated as to loyalty and security by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Such an investigation is required by section 110 (c) of Public Law 472, the Foreign Assistance Act of 1948, which prescribes as follows:

"(c) No citizen or resident of the United States may be employed, or if already employed, may be assigned under this title for a period to exceed 3 months unless such individual has been investigated as to loyalty and security by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and a report thereon has been made to the Secretary of State and the Administrator, and until the Secretary of State or the Administrator has certified in writing (and filed copies thereof with the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and the House Committee on Foreign Affairs) that, after full consideration of such report, he believes such individual is loyal to the United States, its Constitution, and form of government, and is not now and has never been a member of any organization advocating contrary views."

In accordance with these provisions of the law and after full consideration of the information developed, Mr. Hoffman certified in writing his belief as to the loyalty of Mr. Geiger.

Sincerely yours,
WILLIAM FOSTER,
Acting Administrator.

It will be recalled that the Geiger case was referred to as one which had been suppressed and covered up, and upon which the people of the United States had been misled. I do not think that Mr. William Foster or Mr. Paul Hoffman, who are gentlemen whose friendship I am privileged to enjoy, are the kind of Americans who would engage in the sort of conspiracy which has been alleged here, namely, keeping an improper person in the employ of the Government of the United States. They would no more do that than would Gen. Conrad Snow do it. General Snow is the head of the Loyalty Board of the State Department, which passes on these cases. General Snow's loyalty and patriotism and integrity and ability were certified to by no one else than the second ranking minority Member of this body, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. The Senator's statement will be found in the hearings of the Committee on Appropriations. When he was asked his opinion of the reputation of this eminent and outstanding citizen of his State, he replied that it was of the best.

Mr. President, I think that is all I have to say. Perhaps I should close with a Latin maxim:

Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus.

Mr. MORSE and Mr. DONNELL addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. McMAHON. I yield to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE].

Mr. MORSE. I was called to the long-distance telephone and while I was out of the Chamber the Senator from Connecticut introduced an affidavit which I had signed some time ago with regard to a former employee. Does the Senator have the affidavit in his possession?

Mr. McMAHON. Yes.

Mr. MORSE. Did the Senator introduce it in the record?

Mr. McMAHON. Yes.

Mr. MORSE. Will the Senator permit me to see the affidavit at this time?

Mr. McMAHON. Certainly.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McMAHON. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I refer to the letter from Mr. Foster, which was read into the record by the Senator from Connecticut. Does the Senator know when the investigation of Mr. Geiger was made?

Mr. McMAHON. No; I cannot give the date.

Mr. WHERRY. I notice that the letter is dated July 5, 1950.

Mr. McMAHON. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask when he was investigated, because it seems to me that all that is being done here is to get a testimonial letter to answer Mr. Morris. I should like to make that plain on the record. This incident happened on June 28. A letter goes down to the ECA. It is dated July 3. On July 5 a letter comes back from the ECA and says that Mr. Geiger has been investigated. When was he investigated? Who investigated him. That does not foreclose what Mr. Morris wanted to do. He wanted to produce testimony to be heard by the committee. Now we are asked to take a testimonial letter to be a final conclusion of the matter on this man, when the minority counsel asked that a hearing be held so that testimony could be presented. Certainly the distinguished prosecutor, the Senator from Connecticut, who is one of the most able prosecutors who has ever served in Washington, would not consider that to be the proper way to handle an investigation of a man who is being charged with what he is being charged. I want that to be perfectly clear in the record. To me it is another indication of how the investigations were made of the men whose names were brought to the attention of the committee. To my mind, that is a whitewash.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut yielded for a question.

Mr. McMAHON. Yes. I cannot help but be somewhat—I was going to say amused—interested by the vehement reaction of the Senator from Nebraska. I shall call the Senator's remarks to the attention of Mr. Paul Hoffman and Mr. Foster. I shall do that on my private initiative. The committee is discharged. However, I shall call their attention to their clearance and to what the Senator from Nebraska has stated. I shall be very happy to show their response to the Senator from Nebraska. I imagine it was very disappointing when this letter showed up. It must have been very disappointing, indeed. However, we must suffer these vicissitudes sometime. I know the Senator from Nebraska will take it in good grace.

REPUBLIC OF FRANCE, DEPARTMENT OF SEINE, CITY OF PARIS,

Embassy of the United States of America, ss:

AFFIDAVIT FOR THE LOYALTY AND SECURITY BOARD OF THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE CONCERNING ————

We, Robert M. and Betty M. Carr, having been advised that a question has arisen concerning the loyalty of ———— and ————, desire to offer the following testimony in their behalf.

I, Robert Carr, was employed by the Department of State from July 2, 1934, until October 31, 1946, when I transferred from the Department to the Foreign Service of the United States, class 3. I am at present First Secretary of Embassy at Paris, France. I came to the Department with Henry Francis Grady when he became the first Chief of the Division of Trade Agreements. I was, previously, his teaching assistant at the University of California, where he was professor of international trade and dean of the College of Commerce, and where I received my Ph. D. in economics. When Dr. Grady became Assistant Secretary of State in 1939, I served as his assistant. I also served under him in New Delhi, India, where he was American Ambassador, 1947–48. Other immediate superiors under whom I have worked are John G. Winant (now deceased), formerly American Ambassador to London; Dean Acheson, formerly Assistant Secretary of State; and Harry C. Hawkins, formerly Director of the Office of International Trade Policy, Department of State.

I, Betty Carr, was married to my husband when he was a teaching assistant to Dr. Grady at the University of California, where I received my master's degree and completed except for a thesis, the requirements for a Ph. D. in philosophy.

We first met ———— in an air-raid shelter near Le Havre, France, in September 1939, at which time all four of us were waiting for return passage to the United States, and learned that they also lived in Washington and that ——— was employed by the United States Government. We also at that time became well acquainted with ——— father, mother, and sister.

I, Robert Carr, later supported applications for American visas made by ——— sister and mother and helped during wartime to find passage to the United States for his sister. His father died at the time of the German invasion of Paris. His mother came to the United States after the war and I had the opportunity then to renew my acquaintance with her.

When ——— went to serve in the United States Army, I, Betty Carr, used my good offices in helping ———— to obtain a position with the American Council of Learned Societies in order that she might supplement the income allotted her from her husband's pay.

When the war was over and ——— was about to be discharged, I, Robert Carr, recommended him for the position in the Department of State which he now holds. In doing this I felt that I was doing the Department, as well as ———, a useful service, not only because I considered ——— a person with unusual intellectual attainments and emotional and moral stability, but also because I knew that he was deeply grateful to America for the opportunities and security which it offered him and that he would serve the Government of his adopted country with unusual devotion.

In the 9 years that we have known the ———, we have seen them on an average of once a week, except for the period during which ——— was in the Army, and have counted them among our most intimate friends. We have dined together in each other's homes, we have gone on family picnics, we have read the same books, enjoyed together the same music, the same paintings, and the same plays. We were interested in the same ideas. Our economic and social philosophies were similar.

Since ——— was Russian-born, we were especially interested in his views regarding Soviet developments and would have quickly detected any Communist sympathies, if he had any, no matter how cleverly they might have been concealed, for in a long, intimate relationship there are many unguarded moments when, in words, or gestures, or facial expressions, the deepest thoughts and feelings of friends are revealed. We have heard from him, and his parents, about his early childhood in Russia, particularly during the revolution when his family were refugees. They had nothing in common with revolutionists. In analyzing Soviet developments, ——— has, however, been clear-headed and objective. His views on the Soviet Union have not been prejudiced by emotional considerations arising from the fact that he was denied the heritage of a native homeland. His intellectual discipline was of too high a standard to have permitted it. He has regarded Soviet developments in the light of basic social forces and world trends.

We discussed at great length the significance of Russia's turn against Germany and her alinement with the democracies. His view, which, if publicly expressed at the time, would have constituted a serious indiscretion, was that the Second World War had come to be, not at all a conflict between two ideologies or ways of life, but, rather, a conflict between Germany and Russia for leadership of a totalitarian movement (fascism versus communism), leaving the question of totalitarianism versus democracy to be fought out later between the United States and Russia. He recognized, however, that our choice was to face the prospect of a second bout, against Russia, or run the risk of losing the first bout against Germany, and was accordingly reconciled to our alliance with the Soviet Union. The point is that ———— and his wife, who shared his views, were privately not sympathetic toward Russia at the time when expressions of pro-Soviet sympathies were popular.

The ——— were not without a sense of humor, however, regarding the Communist experiment in Russia. We recall in particular a book which they lent us, written by two Russians, with the title of "The Little Golden Calf," the amusing situations in which were based on the corruption and incredible stupidity of Soviet officials and administrators. It was a source of delight to ——— that the book, written in the early twenties by approved Communist authors, achieved such popularity in the Soviet Union that the Government, after discovering its subtle satire on the Soviet regime, was unable to effect its suppression.

It is also recalled that among other books which the ——— lent us was a novel of outstanding merit, regarding Soviet Russia, Darkness at Noon, by Koestler, which is the most convincing and devastating commentary on the Communist regime which we have read. It is devastating for the reason that although the author, like ————, is able to present with tolerance and understanding the social grievances which have fostered the rise of communism, he, like ————, is quick to point out with equal objectivity the logical consequences of the Communist philosophy and course of action: namely, the enslavement of the individual, or, if he resists, his extermination.

It is perhaps conceivable that unsophisticated persons, impressed only by emotional manifestations, might have, through ignorance, mistaken intellectual objectivity toward Russia as a symptom of Communist sympathy. It is not conceivable, however, that anyone capable of a rational approach to social problems and their solutions could interpret ——— views regarding Russia as anything but deeply and emphatically opposed to communism and Communists' activities.

We have known ———— as a wife and mother, extremely devoted to her husband and children, nd as a highly intelligent person interested chiefly in the arts, rather than in political, social, or economic matters. We have observed that in regard to such matters she shares her husband's views. It would be difficult to believe that, in view of the exceptionally close and harmonious relations between her and her husband, she could hold political views differing substantially from those of her husband.

I, Betty Carr, have discussed with ————, among other subjects of usual interest to women, problems of child training and care and know that she strongly opposes regimentation and tries to encourage in her children the spirit of individualism. She, as well as her husband, believes strongly in the institution of the family and in the institution of private property on which it is in a large part based.

On the basis of our long and intimate relationship with ————, we are convinced that they are not Communists, that they are not in sympathy with Communist philosophy, objectives, or activities, and that they can be completely trusted as loyal Americans, faithful and devoted to the political, economic, and social principles embodied in the constitution of the United States. In fact, we cannot conceive on what basis their loyalty might be questioned, and are deeply distressed that such a statement as this should be necessary.

AFFIDAVIT

I, Arthur M. Wilson, being duly sworn, depose and say:

In 1939 a friend of mine, a former fellow student in the Harvard graduate school, assured me that I would greatly enjoy making the acquaintance of one ———— who was in France that summer and whom my friend had met in France the preceding year. The ——— and we made an appointment, but the outbreak of war prevented our meeting as planned. By great coincidence we found ourselves on the same boat returning to New York, the steamship Roosevelt, which sailed from Pouillac, France, in late September 1939.

The rest of that year I continued to be on leave of absence from Dartmouth College, and from late December of 1939 to late March of 1940 my wife and I did research in the Library of Congress. During that time we frequently saw the ——— and we have been in touch with them off and on ever since. I do not recall that we saw each other face to face between March 1940 and 1943. I certainly saw him once in 1943, when he was about to be inducted and was interviewing people in OSS in the hope of being assigned for service there, and we saw them now and again in 1944 and 1945, during which time he was assigned to OSS and was living in Greenbelt. The last time I saw him was when we had lunch together at the State Department just after New Year's 10 months ago.

My personal knowledge of ——— and his wife makes me think it extremely unlikely that either of them ever was or is now a member of the Communist Party or a Communist sympathizer. The first days I ever knew ———, when in 1939 we were on the boat returning to the United States, I remember that he expressed repugnance at the idea that the U. S. S. R. had invaded Poland. A few months later I was present at a heated argument in which the ——— defended Finland and criticized the U. S. S. R. for its attack on Finland. Also during that winter of 1939–1940 I was present at a dinner party with the ——— during which our host set forth ideas which certainly seemed to me to be antidemocratic in tendency and sympathetic to the Fuhrer-Prinzip. I remember that ——— vigorously attacked these views, and his defense of democracy, by the way, was framed in concepts that were Jeffersonian, not Marxist. These were the months of the so-called phony war. I never once heard ——— or his wife defend the Nazi-Soviet pact, or suggest that the war was an imperialistic war or that it was not our war, or any other of the favorite contentions of Communists or Communist sympathizers at that time.

I knew the ——— most intimately in these months of 1940, but nevertheless we have been in touch with them by letter and by occasional visits since, and I have never detected in them any change or trend in their point of view. That point of view is characterized by (1) a deep and well grounded appreciation of the meaning and value of western European and American culture; (2) an abhorrence of totalitarian or police state methods wherever they are to be found; (3) a mode of thought which uses words and concepts which are Jeffersonian-democratic, not Marxian. I have always found ——— to argue any matter, whether political, literary, or aesthetic, on its merits and not according to some preconceived, programmatic line of thought. Moreover, he does not think in terms of the class struggle, or dialectical materialism, or with any other of the familiar Marxian crutches. His whole cast of mind is liberal in the western sense, as well as New Deal in the American sense, and it is completely anti-Marxian or non-Marxian. Moreover, I have never detected in either of the ——— anything that would suggest that they were being shifty or deceitful or evasive, or were trying to conceal their real opinions. I know the working of ——— mind better than that of his wife, but my belief is that the foregoing characterizes the one as well as the other.

In short, I have never noticed anything about either of the ——— which would raise the slightest suspicion in my mind as to their complete loyalty to this country. ——— is a man who is intelligent, competent, conscientious, and discreet. I might point out, for instance, that when we saw each other now and again while both of us were with OSS, he acted in a completely security-conscious manner toward me, as I did toward him.

Of myself, let me say that I was born at Rural, Rock Island County, Ill., on July 29, 1902, and have lived all my life in this country except for 3 years (1924–1927) when I was a student at the University of Oxford, and except for a few months in 1939, when I was in France on a Guggenheim Fellowship. I have been at Dartmouth College since 1933, my present title and rank being professor of biography and government. From January 3, 1943 to September 1, 1945, I was with OSS at Washington, assigned first to the Current Intelligence Staff of the research and analysis branch, then to the foreign nationalities branch, and finally to the OSS history project.

AFFIDAVIT

I, Julia Mary (Tolford) Wilson, being duly sworn, depose and say:

I first knew ——— in September 1939 when my husband, Prof. Arthur M. Wilson, of Dartmouth College, and I were returning from Europe on the same boat as were the ———. I saw her next, and several times, during the period from late December of 1939 to late March of 1940 when Mr. Wilson and I were resident in Washington while he was doing research in the Library of Congress. From then until 1943, I did not see her, and what correspondence passed between the families was extremely casual as far as my relation with her was concerned. In January of 1943, my husband returned to Washington to work with OSS, and sometime during that year we saw the ——— once when they came through Washington. After ——— himself was transferred to OSS, we saw the ——— several times. I have seen neither since I left Washington in September of 1945.

While I have been very friendly with ——— at such times as our paths have crossed, it cannot be said that we have ever been intimate friends. However, when one is with the ——— the conversation is confined almost exclusively to ideas and to intellectual subjects, so that one quickly gets to know the cast of their minds. I soon learned, therefore, that ——— was an ardent New Dealer, with tastes for the most advanced in art and music. Though I did not completely share her enthusiasm on these subjects, the four of us were congenial enough to enjoy an occasional evening together. The talk was always what is commonly called stimulating, and that was largely because neither of the ——— is hesitant to express an opinion on any topic under discussion.

I have no hesitation in saying that ———, in spite of this willingness to let her views be known, never said anything that would lead me even to suspect that she might be or ever had been a member of the Communist Party. As for her sympathies, I cannot remember that she ever disagreed with her husband on subjects pertinent to this affidavit. For his views, I would refer you to the statement of my husband about ———.

Returning, as Mr. Wilson and I did, from Europe in late September of 1939, we were thrown with many voluntary but unappreciative repatriates. This experience made me very sensitive to and hostile toward those who criticized or were unsympathetic to democracy. In fact, I probably might have been described as having become militantly American. I believe, therefore, that I would have been very likely to detect any anti-American attitude in ———, and am the more convinced that her views were sympathetic to mine because I still retain very vivid impressions of others whom I met at that period and who were not enthusiastic believers in democracy.

As for her trustworthiness, I do not remember that ——— ever said anything which indicated that she might be indiscreet and inadvertently reveal a military secret if she ever knew one. I say this with the more confidence because I myself was very conscious of the problem of security, not only because of my husband's connection with OSS but because I did a good deal of volunteer work at the United Nations Service Center at the Union Station Plaza, where the importance of guarding one's speech was constantly being impressed upon one.

I was born in this country (at Boyd, Chippewa County, Wis.) of native-born parents.

To Whom It May Concern:

I, Gerhard E. Kadisch, residing at 106 Cook Street, Bennettsville, S. C., and Valley Road, Wachtung, N. J., hereby declare that I am a naturalized citizen of the United States of America. I was born in Denmark (Copenhagen). I am at present general manager of Boro Wood Products Co., Inc., Bennettsville, S. C.

I first met ——— in May 1932, in Berlin, Germany, in my capacity as general manager of the Goerz Division of Zeiss Ikon A. G., Berlin-Zehlendorf. ——— was a nephew of Prof. Emmanuel Goldberg who was a well-known scientist and managing director of the Zeiss Ikon A. G. in Dresden, Germany. ——— was then employed in the advertising department.

In addition to periodic contacts with him in the course of business, I got to know him and his family socially, as he was a frequent guest at a small social club for the promotion and study of the English language and literature at which I was an occasional guest speaker. At that time I found Mr. ——— to be a very refined, well-educated, young man, remarkably well versed in literature and art and generally of high intellectual caliber.

I occasionally visited his father's home. The family lived in comfortable circumstances but I understood that they were at one time wealthy Russian industrialists and that the family had lost most of their possessions during the Russian revolution. Mr. ———, Sr. described to me some of the adventurous episodes of his family's life in Russia and the impression that I got at the time of the family's political leanings was certainly not that of any sympathy with communism. On the contrary, the atmosphere was typical of that found in most Russian immigrant families at that time, namely, that of distinct hostility toward the Bolsheviks.

In 1933, after Hitler's coming to power, a particularly radical situation developed in the Zeiss Ikon concern. ——— uncle, the managing director of the company, was subjected to brutal Nazi persecution and ——— himself as the nephew of the non-Aryan company head was forced to resign and left the company.

I was instrumental in helping him get a job temporarily with the Zeiss subsidiary in Paris, France, and I visited him there in the summer of 1934 in the course of a business trip to that country. ——— family had in the meantime left Germany and settled down in France. During my stay there in 1934 I spent several evenings with ——— and his family. The atmosphere was distinctly a nonpolitical one, and neither then nor at any subsequent time have I ever noticed any pronounced political interest on the part of ——— other than those of the average well-educated man.

Early in 1934 I entered the employ of the Yale & Towne Manufacturing Co., Stamford, Conn., and took over the management of their Czechoslovakian company. In 1935 ——— wrote me from Paris that he had decided that there was no future for him in Europe and that he was going to emigrate to the United States of America where he had an uncle. I invited him to visit me in Czechoslovakia before he went and in the summer of 1935 he stayed a few days with me in Opava as my guest. I gave him a letter of introduction to the lately deceased president of the Yale & Towne Manufacturing Co., Mr. W. Gibson Carey, and he was employed there for some time but left to study economics.

I came to the United States of America in January 1939 and I met ——— and his wife, ———, on several occasions during my business trips to Washington, Chicago, New York, and they also visited me at my home in Plainfield, N. J., in the period from 1939 to about 1944 during which period I was employed as general manager of General Ceramics Co., Metuchen and Keasbey, N. J. In renewing my acquaintance with ——— I found that both he and his wife were well read and intellectually well developed people with a wide range of interests. Our conversations covered numerous subjects in the fields of general philosophy, literature, art, foreign affairs, American history, etc. As a result of the very engrossing conversations I am sure that I would have detected any sign of communistic ideology on either ——— part if he or she had so expressed themselves and such was definitely not the case. I found them both to be marked individualists and antagonistic to totalitarian principles and regimes. This applied both to their attitude to the totalitarian nations with which we were at war and to their attitude to the Russian attack on Finland and the carving up of Poland and swallowing up of the Baltic states prior to the actual outbreak of war.

In the last few years, my work has left me little time for social activities and solely for this reason my contacts with the ——— have been limited to an occasional exchange of greetings, Christmas cards, etc. I feel however, and I have no hesitation in so stating, that any charge that ——— was a member of or even a sympathizer with the Communist Party in Europe is entirely unfounded, judging from my personal observations of his attitude and interests at the time that I knew him there. As for his activities in the United States of America I again repeat that in my numerous contacts with him in the time from 1939 to 1944 or '45 I have at no time observed any sympathy with the Communists or any other foreign group nor have I observed any sign or expression of disloyalty to the United States of America. On the contrary, I always regarded him as being an enthusiastic believer in the democratic principle and American way of life and I particularly remember his avid reading of all available literature on Lincoln, of whom he was a great admirer. Both he and his wife always impressed me as being people of high moral character and idealism and I felt that his repeated statements of his thankfulness for being able to live in the United States really reflected the sincerity of their feelings in this respect. Although it would at this time be personally inconvenient to me to travel to Washington, I am prepared if necessary to do so in order to appear as a witness at the Loyalty Board hearing as I am convinced from all my observations and previous contacts with them that both ——— are loyal American citizens.

STATE OF FLORIDA,

Paul E. Raymond first being duly sworn, on oath deposes and states that:

1. He is a citizen of and a practicing attorney at law in Daytona Beach, Volusia County, Fla., and is president of the Daytona Beach Chamber of Commerce, and chairman of the Halifax District and vice president of the Central Florida Council, Boy Scouts of America.

2. Affiant was personally acquainted with ——— from October 1937, to June 1938, and was in daily association with him. ——— was research assistant of the affiant who was preparing as editor a volume on parole for the United States Attorney General's Surevy of Release Procedures. At that time affiant was professor of law in John B. Stetson University, DeLand, Fla., before he became Dean of the School of Law from 1938 to 1941.

3. During the 9 months association between affiant and ———, affiant had frequent occasion to discuss with ——— various national and international questions involving social, economic, and political policy. In all of the many conversations regarding such matters the affiant never heard ——— express any word of sympathy toward communism or any other philosophy inconsistent with the American ideals. The impression that the affiant gained of ——— after this association was that ——— was a steadfast opponent of communism and the various totalitarian philosophies, and was a loyal adherent to the prevailing American interpretation of democratic ideals.

4. During this association between the affiant and ———, the affiant was vice president of the DeLand, Fla., Chamber of Commerce and was active in several other civic organizations. As such he induced ——— to speak on international questions for the junior chamber of commerce, the Stetson University student body, and other civic organizations. At one time he arranged for a radio broadcast of ——— speech. At that time the most imminent threat to the peace of the world appeared to be from Nazi and Fascist countries, and most of ——— comments related to this fact. His comments, however, indicated that he was strongly opposed to any form of totalitarianism and aggression, whether Fascist or Communist, and affiant believes that no one could have heard him without concluding that he was opposed to nazism, fascism, and communism alike. Several listeners commented to the affiant after said speeches that ——— had a better understanding and appreciation of American ideals than most native-born Americans.

5. Affiant was assistant attorney general of Florida from 1941 to 1942, and thereafter was an officer in the United States Navy on active duty for 40 months. Affiant has no sympathy whatever with any un-American philosophy and is extraordinarily sensitive to any expression sympathetic to any foreign philosophy. Affiant strongly believes that persons sympathetic to activities subversive of American ideals shoud not be tolerated in governmental positions, but affiant is at a loss to understand how an accusation on this score could be leveled at a man who manifested the ideals and beliefs that ——— did during his 9 months association with the affiant.

6. Affiant regrets that because of the pressure of his business he is unable to make the trip to Washington to testify in ——— behalf, but he will do so in the event that it is required.

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES,
October 26, 1948.

The LOYALTY SECURITY BOARD,
Department of State,
New State Department Building,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: I have just received a telephone call from Mr. Paul E. Raymond, an attorney of Daytona Beach, Fla., formerly dean of the John B. Stetson Law School of Florida, in regard to Mr. ——— ———. Mr. Raymond informs me that Mr. ———, an employee of the State Department, is being investigated by the Loyalty Security Board on charges that he is or has been a Communist.

Mr. Raymond was on my staff in the United States Department of Justice from 1936 to 1938, when I was Director of the Attorney General's Survey of Release Procedures. He served as director and editor of that phase of the study which dealt with the subject of parole. One of Mr. Raymond's assistants on the editorial staff was Mr. ——— ———, who had been appointed as a sociologist to assist the editorial board with some of the sociological problems involved in parole procedure.

As director and editor in chief of the entire survey, I came to know Mr. ——— in connection with his work on our staff. On the basis of his professional work for the Attorney General's Survey of Release Procedures during the period of time indicated above, he gave no indication at all that he held even friendly feelings toward the Communistic ideology. In fact, it would be a great surprise to me as well as a keen disappointment if, since leaving his work in the Department of Justice, Mr. ——— had developed even the slightest sympathy for the Communist philosophy.

Of course, I did not know Mr. ——— intimately outside of his office, but my recollection of him is that he was always a rather emphatic opponent of any totalitarian view, be it of fascism, nazism, or communism. As I recall, Mr. ——— came to the United States from Poland, but I am not certain about that. However, I do recall distinctly that he was very critical in those days of the totalitarian philosophy which was sweeping Europe in Germany and Italy as well as in Russia.

Nevertheless, I wish to make it perfectly clear that I have had no contacts with Mr. ——— whatsoever since 1938, and I am in no position to pass any reliable judgment whatsoever upon his political, social, economic, or religious philosophy since he served on the Department of Justice staff at the same time I was there. Also, I wish to make perfectly clear that if there is any evidence against Mr. ——— which establishes the fact that he is a Communist or a fellow traveler, then I am very much of the opinion that he and all others of like point of view should be discharged from holding any position in our Federal Government.

However, in fairness to Mr. ———, for whatever value it may prove to be worth in light of any evidence which has been developed subsequent to his service with the Department of Justice, I think it is only right to give you my impression that when he was associated on Mr. Raymond's editorial staff in connection with the parole phase of our study, Mr. ——— gave no indication that he held any sympathy whatsoever for any form of totalitarianism, including communism.

Very truly yours,

WAYNE MORSE.

AFFIDAVIT

I, the undersigned, Eugene W. Posnjak, residing at 1076 Tornoe Road, Santa Barbara, Calif., do solemnly swear and affirm that:

I have recently retired from the Geophysical Laboratory of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, where I held the position of research chemist continuously since 1913. During most of this time I was residing at 3400 Rodman Street NW., Washington, D. C. I was born in Moscow, Russia, in 1888 and was educated there and at the University of Leipzig, Germany, where I received the Ph. D. degree in chemistry in 1912. I came to this country in 1912 and became a citizen of the United States in 1921.

I have known my nephew ———, of 5404 Thirty-ninth Street NW., Washington, D. C., since he was about 10 years old and have followed his development closely, seeing him on trips I made to Germany in 1921, 1923, 1929, and 1932 when I visited his parents who were living in Germany, as were also my parents. They had all been forced to flee Russia as a result of the Communist revolution. ——— father, the late ——— was my brother. He had been a well-to-do industrialist in Moscow before the revolution and owned several factories in that city, which were expropriated by the Soviet regime. My nephew was educated in Germany and was attending the University of Berlin in 1933 when the coming to power to Hitler made it advisable to leave Germany, and he went to live and work in Paris, France.

I spent several month on each of my trips to Europe and while there saw ——— a great deal. We became close friends and had many intimate conversations, occasionally discussing also politics. I had never heard him to express Communist views or even any opinions that might be considered radical. In fact, I had the impression that he was not greatly interested in politics, being more concerned with cultural subjects, such as literature, theater, art, etc. I am certain that he did not engage in any radical or subversive activities when he was in college in Berlin or later when he went to Paris and I am also sure that he never belonged to any Communist or other subversive organizations in Europe. I think his family background makes this quite understandable.

In August 1935, at my suggestion (which I first made in 1933 while he was still in Berlin) and with my assistance, ——— obtained the United States immigration visa and came to this country. For about 6 months, until early January 1936 ——— lived with me and my family at my residence at 3400 Rodman Street NW. I had an opportunity to observe him closely. I never heard him express views sympathetic to communism and he certainly never took part in any political activities whatsoever. After ——— got a job with a Washington patent attorney (as translator), he went to live by himself, but he came to my house frequently and my opinion of him did not change.

I met ——— wife, ———, before they were married in 1938, and I saw them both frequently after their marriage at my home and at theirs. ——— impressed me as a quiet, reliable, cultured person, devoted to her husband and his career. She seems to do her own thinking but I have never observed anything subversive and in the least fanatical about her. Both ——— were greatly interested in such cultural matters as theater, literature, art, music, and also gave much of their free time to their hobby of water-color painting. Since the birth of their two sons when ——— was in the Army, they have been preoccupied with their children's upbringing to the exclusion of practically all other interests. I am completely confident that neither of them engaged in any subversive or radical activities of any kind.

I can recall that in some of our conversations ——— both expressed profound disgust for such manifestations of Soviet foreign policy as the Nazi-Soviet pact in August 1939, the Soviet invasion of Finland, or more recently the Soviet aggressions in Iran, Greece, and other small nations. They were strongly opposed to Nazi and Fascist aggressions in Ethiopia, Austria, and Spain but they seem to be fully as much opposed to the Soviet aggressions. They both impressed me as being utterly hostile to totalitarian states and profoundly attached to the democratic institutions and traditions of America.

I have no hesitation in stating that in my opinion both ——— are completely loyal to the United States and devoted to the principles on which this country is founded. I am convinced that they are both wholeheartedly patriotic Americans.

I am a native of Russia; have immigrated into the United States in 1916; naturalized in 1922.

I have been on the staff of the Irving Trust Co. and its predecessor banks continuously since 1917 and have been a vice president of the institution since 1930 in its foreign department.

I have been informed of an investigation of the loyalty of Mr. ———, of 5404 Thirty-ninth Street NW., Washington, D. C., who is employed in the State Department as an economist.

I am familiar with Mr. ——— background over a long period of years, going back to his grandfather, Mr. Solomon Koppleman, in Russia, who was a prosperous and conservative merchant, religious and devoted to philanthropy.

I met Mr. ——— father and mother repeatedly during my travels in Europe where they were refugees from the Soviet regime in Russia. The family fortune having been lost as a result of the Communist revolution, the entire household was permeated with a strong anti-Communist feeling.

I met ——— when he first arrived in this country as a very young man and he impressed me most favorably as to his character and up-bringing. I had many personal contacts with him during the first few years of his stay here and am convinced of his entire loyalty to this country and its institutions and his genuine gratitude for the opportunities it has given him. It is my firm conviction that he is not a Communist or a Communist sympathizer or otherwise in any way disloyal to this country.

COMMUNITY HALL,
Gladwyne, Pa., October 13, 1948.

To Whom It May Concern:

I was indeed astonished to learn that a charge of Communist leanings had been brought against ———.

I have known ——— since 1930, at which time I was appointed head of social service work in Gladwyne. (At the present time I am also executive secretary of the Gladwyne Civic Association, and president of the Gladwyne fire company.) As I live across the street from the Aranson home I feel I knew the family very well indeed. ——— was always ambitious, and eager to familiarize herself with the cultures—music, literature, and art.

We have had many talks on national and international affairs, both before and after her marriage with ———. She and ——— seldom came home on a visit that they did not come across the street to call on us, since we all enjoyed the same things. I have never heard either say anything that was un-American, or that could be construed as the least subversive.

I have always felt that I could trust both in every way, and I still have the same feeling toward them.

I can only regret that owing to a recent serious heart attack it is impossible for me at this time to travel to Washington to testify on their behalf. My condition also prevents Mrs. Bell from leaving home for any appreciable length of time, also.

GLADWYNE FREE LIBRARY,
Gladwyne, Pa., October 13, 1948.

To Whom It May Concern:

It was with profound shock that I learned recently that ——— were looked upon as Communists.

I have known ——— since she was a school girl. My husband and I came to Gladwyne in the fall of 1930, as he had been appointed head of the social service work in that village. The home of the ——— family was across the street from the Community House, where we lived, and we saw a great deal of them. They were a family, quiet, hard working, and respected in the community. I might add that I have never known a more generous and kindly person than ———. She was constantly spending herself in the service of those in trouble. As a family they were well-read, vitally interested in current events, and with a keen love of the arts, especially music. In all the years we knew them, when affairs, both national and international, were freely discussed between us, I have never heard a subversive statement from any one of them.

To them all, America was a land of beauty and integrity, and on graduating from high school ——— was eager to work in Washington—to her a city of romance and of promise. I might add that while waiting to take her civil-service examination she freely offered her services as pianist to the playground commission in Philadelphia, and through her associations there came into close contact with a group of music lovers, which led to an association with the Philadelphia Orchestra and other music groups. Until she left Gladwyne she was also a member of the Girls' Friendly Society branch in that village, of which I was leader, and was very active in all their interests—music, dances, athletics, and social-service work. I can only reiterate that she was a girl with an exceptionally fine mind, a deep love of all things cultural, and an intelligent interest in national and international affairs.

On her visits home, after she was employed in Washington, she invariably called on us, and our conversations were often on world affairs. I can recall her distress and horror as conditions grew blacker in Europe. After her marriage she and her husband, ———, continued to call on us during their visits back to Gladwyne. Naturally by that time (from 1938 on) the topic of German, and later, Russian aggression, formed a large part of our conversation, but at no time did either express anything but the greatest repugnance for National Socialist and Communist ideologies. We were glad to change the subject back to our old gay debates on music and books.

I feel strongly that there has been serious misunderstanding somewhere, because after having known ——— 18 years, and ——— 10, I am still convinced that there are no more sincere and loyal American citizens in this country than they.

REPUBLIC OF FRANCE, DEPARTMENT OF SEINE, CITY OF PARIS,
Embassy of the United States of America, ss:

LOYALTY AND SECURITY BOARD,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington 25, D. C.

Subject: Loyalty of ————.

Having been informed that in the course of the investigation of ———— under the employee loyalty program the allegation has been made that he is a Communist or Communist sympathizer, and that a hearing of his case has been set for October 26, 1948, I welcome this opportunity to place the following information before the Board.

I met Mr. ——— for the first time early in 1941, through mutual friends, Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Carr (Mr. Carr is a foreign service officer, presently assigned to the American Embassy, Paris, France). Since that time I have, on a number of occasions, attended social functions or small informal gatherings where he was present. I have nothing but the most pleasant recollections of his conduct in these situations. Nothing he said ever gave me the slightest impression that he was a Communist sympathizer, much less a Communist. On the contrary, I have from the beginning had the very definite impression that he had no intellectual or political leanings toward communism. Never in the years I have known him have I ever heard anyone question his complete loyalty to the United States.

In regard to my professional contacts with Mr. ———, the longest period of close association with him was in 1946, when he was my assistant for several weeks in New York, during the second part of the first session of the General Assembly. As executive officer of the United States delegation for committee 2, I was responsible for helping Alternate Delegates Adlai E. Stevenson and HELEN GAHAGAN DOUGLAS with their work on this committee. As might be expected, the views of the U. S. S. R. and satellites concerning items on the agenda frequently were opposed to those of the United States delegation. Never during the course of his work with me in the development of arguments in favor of the United States position and against those of the U. S. S. R. did I sense the slightest hint of disagreement with the United States position. His work was uniformly excellent and constructive; he was most cooperative; and I had complete confidence in his loyalty.

These earlier favorable impressions were further confirmed recently, shortly before my departure for Paris as executive officer for committee 2 of the General Assembly, third regular session. At my suggestion, Mr. ——— prepared a confidential paper (US (P)/A/C.2/4, September 28, 1948) entitled "Criticism of the International Bank," for possible use here in Paris in dealing with an anticipated repetition of attacks on the Bank by the U. S. S. R. and satellites. This paper, which was widely cleared in the Department, is an example of the competent work done by Mr. ———. It is, in my view, entirely in accord with United States policy, and should prove valuable to the United States delegation if the occasion arises. (The Board should be able to obtain a copy of this paper from UNE.) Before final clearance of the paper, Mr. ——— showed me the original and we discussed it together at some length. This conversation strengthened my earlier impressions of his competence and trustworthiness.

To sum up, from my personal and professional association with ———— I am convinced that he is completely loyal to the United States.

Vice Consul of the United States of America.

AFFIDAVIT

REPUBLIC OF FRANCE, DEPARTMENT OF SEINE, CITY OF PARIS,
Embassy of the United States of America, ss:

1. ———— has been well known to me, Hubert F. Havlik, since August 1946. When I became Chief of the Division of Investment and Economic Development in the Department of State, Mr. ——— was a member of the staff of that Division at that time. While I was Chief of that Division, until September 5, 1948, he worked under my general direction and often under my specific guidance, in connection with matters I was handling personally. Many memoranda which he prepared were specifically reviewed and approved by me, and I frequently discussed with him at length matters which fell within the scope of his assignment.

2. Mr. ——— was specifically responsible for the subject matter of the Division's responsibility relating to the central and eastern European area (Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Austria, Rumania, Yugoslavia, and the U. S. S. R.). Important matters with which Mr. ——— dealt were the following:

(a) Financial and development needs of Czechoslovakia, Hungary, and Poland, and requests for Export-Import Bank or International Bank loans by these countries, as well as the application of loans granted by the Export-Import Bank to some of these countries.

(b) Problems of compensation for property of United States nationals nationalized by Czechoslovakia and Poland. (This work was, after several months, transferred to another Division of the Department.)

(c) The economic development aspects of trade between the eastern and western European countries, as well as of policies regarding the control of exports from the United States to countries of eastern Europe.

3. Because of his capacity for analysis and drafting, and knowledge of the work of the Division, Mr. ——— also was designated by the Division to act as advisor on economic development to United States delegation to at least one meeting of the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations, as well as meetings of some of the subgroups of ECOSOC. He also assisted in drafting various "position papers" for the guidance of delegation members.

4. Work on all these problems involved a large degree of skill and analysis of the economic aspects of problems within the boundaries of the general policies established by the Department of State. In my experience, Mr. ——— followed instructions with respect to the scope and objectives of his assignments with conscientious regard for the interests of the United States Government. Draft recommendations which he formulated or assisted in formulating were usually discussed among representatives of other interested Divisions of the State Department and revised in accordance with decisions reached in the course of these discussions. I have never felt at any time that his analyses and recommendations were biased in favor of the interests of the U. S. S. R. and its satellites, or in favor of communism, or that they were taken with a view to action against the interests of the United States Government. While there were often differences of opinion among departmental personnel as to policy on matters which Mr. ——— was called upon to deal with, my conviction, based on my personal knowledge of his work, is that Mr. ——— is not sympathetic with communistic doctrine, methods, or objectives.

5. According to my observation, Mr. ——— held scrupulously to both the spirit and the letter of requirements for security made necessary by his position in the Department. I do not have nor ever have had any reservations with respect to his loyalty to the United States Government nor have I ever heard any reservations expressed by any person.

6. At present I am Chief of the Payments Section in the Office of the Special Representative, Economic Cooperation Administration, Paris, France. From 1942 to 1944, I was an economist and an official in the War Production Board; from 1944 to 1945, I was in the Foreign Economic Administration holding the position of Deputy Assistant Administrator for economic programs at the time of its termination. From December 1945 to August 1946, I was Chief of the Division of Lend-Lease in surplus property policies in the Department of State; from 1946 to 1948, I was Chief of the Division of Investment and Economic Development, and on several occasions Acting Director of the Office of Financial and Development Policy.

HUBERT F. HAVLIK.

PARIS, FRANCE, October 19, 1948.

Then personally appeared the above named Hubert F. Havlik and made oath the foregoing statements by him subscribed are true to the best of his knowledge and belief.

[SEAL] LEONARD R. MOREY,
Vice Consul of the United States of America.

---

1. I am making this affidavit at the request of Mr. ————, for presentation to the Loyalty and Security Board of the Department of State.

2. I was employed by the Department of State from July 1944 to September 1946. From approximately December 1945 until my resignation, I was Chief of the Division of Investment and Economic Development. (It is possible that my formal appointment as Chief was not made until some weeks after I was in fact responsible for the work of the Division.) Mr. ———— was an officer in this Division during the entire period that I was in charge of the Division.

3. A large part of Mr. ——— work related to economic policy toward the countries of eastern Europe. In view of the small number of men in the Division, I had close contact with Mr. ———, and I found him thoroughly competent, conscientious, and reliable. His actions and his attitudes all indicated a sincere devotion to the best interests of the United States, and nothing that he said or did in my association with him could possibly be regarded as disloyal, or as suggesting in any way an association with the Communist Party. Nothing in my contacts with Mr. ——— would lead me to question his integrity, or his observance of the strict security standards that would be expected of an officer of the Department of State.

4. I do not know what Mr. ——— did outside of office hours, or with whom he associated, but there was nothing in his attitude, conversation, or behavior that raised the slightest suspicion in my mind as to his loyalty, or that made me consider him in any different light than I would consider any officer of the Department.

5. Around the spring of 1946, after Mr. ——— had attended several meetings in the Department on eastern European problems, reports came to me indirectly that an officer—or perhaps more than one officer—in the Department had made unfavorable comments about Mr. ———, apparently as a result of some discussion at the meetings. The remarks were of a very vague nature, and suggested that the person or persons originating them might have had a personal disagreement with Mr. ———, or possibly objected on general principle to having a person born in eastern Europe working in the Department of State on Eastern European problems. I did not feel that the remarks reflected in any way on Mr. ——— loyalty, his integrity, or his reliability. In view of their trivial nature I paid no attention to them.

6. I resigned from the Department in September 1946 to return to Haverford College as professor of economics. I had been at Haverford since 1934, and in January 1943 had been given leave of absence to enter Government service. I resigned from Haverford College early in 1948 to join the faculty of liberal arts of Northwestern University as professor of economics, a position that I now hold. I reside at 580 Orchard Lane, Winnetka, Ill.

7. I have seen Mr. ——— several times since I left the Department, and nothing in these contacts has altered the high opinion I formed while in the Department of his loyalty, his integrity, and his observance of high standards of security.

2. I reside at Old Westbury Road, East Hills, Roslyn, Long Island, N. Y.

3. I am presently employed as Foreign Exchange Manager, Standard Oil Co., (Inc. in New Jersey), 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York 20, N. Y.

4. In 1945 I was Deputy on Financial Affairs to Mr. William L. Clayton, Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, and Director of the Office of Financial and Development Policy of the Department of State, Washington, D. C. I resigned these positions in May 1946, to become United States Executive Director of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, Washington, D. C., retaining a consultant status with the Department of State.

5. The Division of Economic Development Policy (E. D.), now known as the Division of Investment and Economic Development, was at that time, and continues to fall, within the jurisdiction of the Office of Financial and Development Policy.

6. Mr. ——— was appointed an economist in such division on October 10, 1945, and continued a member of the staff of the division when I resigned from the State Department. Mr. —— was appointed at the recommendation of Mr. D. M. Phelps, then Chief of E. D., who subsequently served as a member of the United States delegation to the Paris reparations conference, and then resigned to return to the University of Michigan. Mr.——— subsequently served under Mr. Frank W. Fetter, who has since returned to academic work and is now at the Northwestern University.

7. My association with Mr. ——— was very largely confined to the period in which we were both employed in the Department of State, and to our work together there. Our contacts were in general those of the director of an office with one of the responsible officers within his organization. I had specific association with Mr. ——— on a number of occasions in connection with financial and economic questions, especially relating to Czechoslovakia and Poland. He had developed the circumstances surrounding such questions and policy and action recommendations. The recommendations Mr. ——— made on these questions were, in my opinion, well balanced and constructive and my regard for his work and ability, based on these contacts, was very high.

8. Insofar as I am aware, Mr. ——— has not been connected with any organization whose purpose it is to overthrow the Government of the United States. I have no reason to believe that he is in any way disloyal to the United States. On the contrary, in the duties which he performed under my general supervision as an officer of the Department of State in making recommendations on foreign policy matters, with special reference to eastern Europe, Mr. ——— conducted himself as an able, effective and loyal officer of the Department.

AFFIDAVIT FOR INFORMATION OF LOYALTY AND SECURITY BOARD OF THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE

REPUBLIC OF CHINA, PROVINCE OF KIANGSU, CITY OF NANKING,
Embassy of the United States of America, ss:

Before me, Bruce M. Lancaster, vice consul of the United States of America in and for the city of Nanking, China, duly commissioned and qualified, personally appeared Thomas J. Cory, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says as follows:

My name is Thomas J. Cory and I am serving as second secretary of the American Embassy at Nanking, China. I wish to make certain statements concerning the loyalty to American institutions and the anticommunism of ————.

I have known Mr. ——— since July 19, 1947, when we both began service as advisors to the United States Repesentative to the fifth session of the Economic and Social Council at Lake Success. I saw a great deal of him during the month the fifth session continued. During the subsequent year, I had two long dinners and conversations with him in his home in Washington, D. C., and one long dinner and conversation in my home in New York City. In addition, we have also had luncheons together in Washington, D. C.

Mr. ——— and I are both deeply interested in and have discussed at length the position of the U. S. S. R. in the world today, its internal stresses and the present and future status of its relations with the United States. My knowledge of the U. S. S. R. is derived from 8 months of Russian language study at Cornell University, 11 months of service as second secretary of the American Embassy in Moscow, 8 months of service as American vice consul at Vladivostok, 3 months of service as an officer in the Division of Eastern European Affairs of the Department of State, and 8 months of study at the Russian Institute of Columbia University. To the best of my knowledge, Mr. ——— interest in the U. S. S. R. derives from his excellent mind and his broad intellectual and professional interests as well as his Russian origin. I understand that he was born in Russia of Russian parents who fled from Moscow when he was 6 years of age that is in 1947. He came to the United States from France in about 1936, is now a naturalized American citizen after serving in the United States Army during the war and is married to an American girl from Philadelphia whom I know and respect as an intelligent, well-educated person thoroughly loyal to American institutions. It is in the light of our respective backgrounds that I wish to state categorically that during many long conversations about the U. S. S. R. I have never known Mr. ——— to express a thought or give any indication suggesting that he was at any time or in any way sympathetic to Communist aims and methods or hostile to American society and policies. On the contrary, I concluded from my knowledge of his past history, from the manner in which he discharged his duties at the fifth session of the Economic and Social Council and from my observations of his personal relationships with the other foreign and American advisors to that fifth session that Mr. ——— is a competent and balanced observer of Soviet Russia, an honorable man and a loyal American.

And further deponent saith not.

2. I have known ———— for approximately 8 years. I can recall meeting him at dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Carr at a time when Carr and I were employed in the Trade Agreements Division of the Department of State;

3. Since that time I can recall having seen him on one or two other occasions at dinner at the Carr's home. In addition to this I have dined once or twice at ——— home and he had dined once or twice at my home;

4. In the course of the past year or 18 months during which I have been a resident of New York and engaged in the work of the Department there, I can recall having dined with ———— on two occasions when he was in New York as an adviser to the American Delegation in the Economic and Social Council. Our conversations on these occasions touched upon the subjects of communism, Soviet foreign policy, and Russia;

5. During the entire period of my acquaintance with ———— and on the basis of our various meetings as set out above I have no recollection of having heard him make any statement or express any opinion which would indicate to me that he is a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or in any way disloyal to the United States. Since I have known ——— no information has come to my attention from any other source suggesting or indicating that ——— is a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or in any way disloyal to the United States;

LOYALTY OF ———

I have known Mr. ——— as an economist in the Department of State for about 2 years. During that time I have been special assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs and Deputy United States Representative in the Economic and Social Council. In these capacities, I have had repeated occasion to observe and work with Mr. ——— both within United States delegations to the General Assembly and to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations, and in preparatory work in the Department of State for meetings of these and related bodies.

On every occasion I have always found Mr. ——— a loyal and useful citizen. His contributions have been valuable and positive as an assistant in preparing American positions on issues coming before the Economic and Social Council and as an adviser to the United States spokesman. His views have uniformly been opposed to the policies of other delegations which were antagonistic to the policies and interests of the United States. His relations with members of other delegations have, so far as my observation goes, been entirely correct and discreet. On no occasion have I ever had any evidence tending to cast doubt on his loyalty to the United States.

To the best of my knowledge and belief, Mr. ——— is a thoroughly loyal employee of the United States Government. Nothing has ever come to my attention which would cast any doubt on his behavior or judgment in matters of security.

I, Irving G. Rudd, residing at 4709 Alton Place NW., Washington, D. C., being duly sworn, depose and say:

That I am a citizen of the United States of America.

That prior to the war I was partner in D. M. Minton and Co., 111 Broadway, New York City, members of the New York Stock Exchange, and that I am now engaged in international trade and shipping as president of Trade Abroad, Inc. and treasurer of Earley-Walter, Inc., located at 1010 Vermont Avenue NW., Washington, D. C.

That between November 1941 and July 1944, I was a staff member of the U. S. S. R. Division of the Office of Strategic Services and its predecessor agency, the Office of Coordinator of Information.

That I met Mr. ——— in the fall of 1943 while I was Chief of the Industrial and Military Supply Section of U. S. S. R. Division, Office of Strategic Services, in connection with Mr. ——— application for a position as a staff member in my section.

That after careful examination of Mr. ——— qualifications, I recommended his appointment to the Chief of the U. S. S. R. Division.

That the appointment of Mr. ——— was duly made on or about May 1, 1944, after the security check was satisfactorily completed.

That during the time Mr. ——— worked under my direction he performed his duties in a most capable and conscientious manner and made important contributions to the several projects which were at that time under study in my section.

That I became well acquainted with Mr. ——— during our association in the Office of Strategic Services and that our friendship continued after my resignation from the U. S. S. R. Division of OSS.

That while I was Special Assistant to the Chairman of the War Production Board until the beginning of 1945 and afterward when I returned to private business, Mr. ——— and I met at frequent intervals and more recently, during the summer of last year, Mr. ——— and his family resided for a period of 2 weeks as our neighbors at Dewey Beach, Del.

That it has been called to my attention that during recent investigation of Mr. ——— record allegations have been made by certain persons that he was sympathetic to the Communist cause. On the basis of my acquaintanceship with Mr. ——— during the last 5 years, I can vouch for his integrity and can state unequivocably that in my opinion he is a loyal citizen of the United States.

NOVEMBER 1, 1948.

To Whom It May Concern:

I am presently employed, since August 1947, as an economist, grade P–6, in the Division of Statistical Standards, Bureau of the Budget, Executive Office of the President. I was previously, since June 1938, with the United States Housing Authority, later the Federal Public Housing Authority and now the Public Housing Administration, Housing and Home Finance Agency. I have known ——— since the fall of 1938 when he joined the staff of USHA.

I was fairly closely associated professionally with Mr. ——— during the entire time, October 1938 to September 1943; he was at USHA. At the beginning of that time we were in different sections of the same division. In about January 1941 he was transferred to the section of which I was chief. A few months later he was transferred to the position of regional research adviser, the regional counterpart of the position I held in the central office, but for about a year he was located in Washington so that I maintained frequent contacts with him. After his office was moved to Chicago in March 1942, until he went into the army in the fall of 1943, I saw him less frequently although I kept in close touch with his work.

In all of our work together, approximately 5 years, I found Mr. ——— to be competent, sincere, discreet, honest, and trustworthy. During that time, and since he returned to Washington in the spring of 1944 when I have seen and talked with him only occasionally, I have never heard Mr. ——— say anything which would lead me to suspect his loyalty or devotion to the United States.

To Whom It May Concern:

My wife, Marjorie Stewart Johnson, and myself became friends with ——— very soon after they came to Chicago, and saw them frequently until their departure for Washington.

My wife met ——— at the first assembly for obtaining ration books. In the natural confusion, the two women were attracted to each other in sympathetic understanding. My wife told me that evening about Mrs. ——— and soon after, I met her and ———.

We four became friends, with like sympathies and appreciation of the important elements of human conduct, music, theater, books, art.

We sensed deeply that ——— are gentle, tolerant, wise people of fine sensibility and deep understanding, who knew, as we agreed in discussion, that the highest human values reside in a system where government, by all the people, operates for the good of all the people. And that any system wherein the individual is forced to exist for the state, which inevitably means for a small group of selfish, powered people—no matter what the tag—Communist, Fascist—is a wicked cheat of human dignity and freedom.

I have not known two finer, more kindly people, deeply perceptive of the essential values of life and, as such, vigorously aware of the favored climate this country supplies for the healthy development of those values, than ———.

I am, and have been for the last 24 years, art director for Reincke, Meyer & Finn, advertising, 520 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill. I am a veteran of the First World War and during World War II was sponsor for a Japanese alien for the United States Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization.

Sincerely,

CLARENCE NOEL JOHNSON.

REPUBLIC OF FRANCE, CITY OF PARIS,
Embassy of the United States of America, ss:

Before me, Leonard R. Morey, vice consul of the United States of America, duly commissioned and qualified, personally came Ossip Bernstein, doctor at law, exporter, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says that:

He was a member of the Moscow bar, and was forced to leave Russia in 1920. He lives since then in Paris, as a naturalized French citizen (naturalized in 1933). He knows ——— and his whole family for more than 35 years. ——— parents and grandparents were very honorable people, industrialists. He knew thoroughly Mr. ——— background, education and behavior from childhood on and during his life in western Europe. He had very often the opportunity to see Mr. ——— and to follow his development and life. He certifies that he has never seen or heard anything suspicious about Mr. ——— like sympathy for communism or Soviet Russia. He considers Mr. ——— as an honest, straightforward and loyal person, unable of any Communist or other un-American activity.

AFFIDAVIT OF DR. JOSEPH KEMLER

STATE OF FLORIDA,
County of Dade:

Before me, a notary public in and for the State of Florida at large, personally appeared Joseph I. Kemler, who being duly sworn states that he is a citizen of the United States and that he is a resident of Baltimore, Md., residing at No. 1908 Eutaw Place, Baltimore, Md. Affiant further says that he is engaged in the practice of medicine at said address, specializing in otolaryngology, having practiced in said city since the year 1911. Affiant further says that he is a member of the American Medical Association; that he is a fellow of the American College of Surgeons; that he is a fellow of the American Academy of Ophthalmology and Otolaryngology; that he is chief of the otolaryngology department of Sinai Hospital of Baltimore, Md., and also chief of laryngologists of Mount Pleasant Sanitarium in Baltimore County, a member of the staff of the Eye, Ear, Nose, and Throat Hospital of Baltimore, Md., and on the teaching staff of the University of Maryland, and the originator of the operation for cancer of the larynx, known as the Kembler bilateral thyrotomy for carcinoma of the larynx. Affiant further says that he is in Miami at the invitation of the Southern Medical Association to present his operation at the scientific exhibition of this meeting.

Affiant further says that he is making this affidavit in behalf of ———, who are under investigation by the United States Government in connection with the United States Government's employee loyalty program.

Affiant further says that he and ——— are first cousins and that he has known ——— since the year 1936 and that he has known her husband ——— since the year 1938, but since said dates he has seen and talked with both ——— many times, and he has had numerous conversations with them on philosophical, political, and educational subjects. As is usual in conversations between friends and relatives the talks were frank and intimate without reservations or evasions, and affiant was in a position to learn the real opinions on social and political subjects which were held by ———. Affiant is therefore in a position to state that neither ——— were ever Communists or Communist sympathizers. On the contrary they were always strongly opposed to totalitarian systems of government whether Communist, Nazi, or Fascist.

Affiant further says that ——— and ———, her husband, have always held in abhorrence the Communist system of government under which the individual is deprived of the basic freedoms to which the individual is entitled in a democratic state. They have always been opposed to the Communist practice which subjugates the individual and makes a fearsome robot of him. They have always been contemptuous of a system under which elections are not free, but the individual is given one set of candidates to either vote for or against. On all the foregoing matters they have frequently expressed themselves in clear and unmistakable language.

Affiant further says that both ——— are persons of fine character and high intelligence. They are idealistically inclined and are keenly interested in philosophy and education. I consider them both to be worthy citizens of the United States of America, strong adherents of the American form of government, who as the parents of two children are very much interested in rearing them to be good Americans. They fully subscribe to the Constitution of the United States and I am sure they would hold in abhorrence anyone who would wish to overthrow or undermine our system of government.

JOSEPH I. KEMLER.

BRADENTON, FLA., November 1, 1948.
To Whom It May Concern:

This is to state that I have known ——— since we were small children (3 or 4 years of age) and that we were especially close friends at Lower Merion Junior and Senior High Schools, Ardmore, Pa., from 1928 to 1933. Since we lived near each other in Gladwyne, Pa., we were frequent visitors in each other's homes. I knew her mother, father, sister Bella, and her brother Norman, also. Each of her family was civic minded and a respected citizen of the community. Neither ——— nor any of her family ever participated in communistic or any subversive or radical activities either in or out of school.

During school days we sang together in the chorus, often rehearsed our numbers at each other's homes, and traveled to and from concerts together. Since we did not have a radio at our house, I recall enjoying numerous programs with ——— and her family. Our interest in needlework brought us together often for sewing and conversation centering on school and its activities. Sports was always a chief topic for we were both very proud of our school's athletic records. We were ardent fans and could be found together at most home games. We shared our enthusiasm for hiking and tennis with other girls in the neighborhood. We, also, participated together in the dramatic club activities.

Following high school, I attended State Teachers College at Buffalo, N. Y., taught home economics for 5 years near Buffalo, and in 1942, married Melvin J. Bates, also a teacher. With our two small children we are now residing in Bradenton, Fla. My husband teaches math., science, and shop in Palmetto Junior High, Palmetto, Fla. I am teaching home economics and science in the same school.

I have always found ——— to be a true and loyal person and have valued our friendship these many years.

RUTH HARRISON BATES.

My commission expires October 1, 1951.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I want the floor in my own right.

Mr. MORSE and Mr. DONNELL addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut——

Mr. McMAHON. I yielded to the Senator from Oregon, and sent him the file.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I want the Senator from Nebraska to know that I want him to have the floor just as soon as I finish this discussion.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Missouri as soon as he can.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Both the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Missouri were claiming the floor at the same time, and the Chair recognized the Senator from Connecticut instead of the Senator from Missouri, and the Chair feels under some obligation to recognize the Senator from Missouri when the Senator from Connecticut has yielded the floor.

Mr. MORSE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MORSE. Is it proper for the junior Senator from Oregon to ask unanimous consent to make a few very brief remarks on the letter which the Senator from Connecticut has introduced into the RECORD, which letter, I think, should have my comment at the time it is introduced, for very obvious reasons?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Connecticut is retaining the floor, he may, by unanimous consent, yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I wish to yield to the Senator from Oregon, and hope that the unanimous consent may be forthcoming.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Oregon may proceed.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I shall be very brief. As I have said, I understand that when I was out making a long-distance telephone call the Senator from Connecticut introduced a series of affidavits in regard to the unnamed person whom the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY] was discussing this afternoon, and that one of those affidavits was a letter written by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. President, I want the RECORD to be perfectly clear in regard to that letter, and therefore I desire to read it and disclose the persons about whom it was written, and to whom the letter was written.

The letter is dated October 26, 1948.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator state whether I heard him correctly to say that he was going to divulge the name?

Mr. MORSE. I am going to read the entire letter.

Mr. McMAHON. Giving the name of the subject?

Mr. MORSE. I most certainly am.

Mr. McMAHON. Both the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Connecticut have carefully crossed out the subject's name.

Mr. MORSE. I will assume full responsibility for the disclosure.

Mr. McMAHON. I might say that I was in communication with the subject, and I got permission from him, because I could not get it from the State Department, to read the affidavits into the RECORD, providing, of course, the name was not divulged. Of course I cannot prevent the Senator from Oregon from going into it.

Mr. MORSE. I understand how the subject might take that attitude, but the name of the Senator from Oregon has been discussed publicly on the floor of the Senate, and now the name of the subject is going to be discussed publicly on the floor of the Senate. Any statement the Senator from Connecticut made to the subject cannot be binding upon the Senator from Oregon now that his name has become involved in this debate.

Mr. President, from 1936 to 1938 or the first part of 1939 the junior Senator from Oregon was an assistant to the Attorney General of the United States under the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice. My distinguished superior officer was the present senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McMAHON]. I do not know of a more pleasant association I have ever had in my life than my association with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McMAHON] and the other members of the Department of Justice with whom I worked during those years when I served as director and editor in chief of the Attorney General's Survey of Release Procedures. Release procedures is a legal term which encompasses within its definition pardon, probation, and parole.

The Attorney General's survey started out as a WPA project for white collar workers in the United States among lawyers and statisticians and similar professional people who at that time were on relief. I was not on relief, but I was selected to direct this particular research study in criminal law administration and we employed many professional people who were on relief.

I had some 2,000 people on the payroll during the first part of the study. We made a Nation-wide study, State by State, of the administration of pardon, parole, probation, and prison administration in the United States.

The individual under discussion this afternoon happened to be one of the 2,000 or more employees on the Nation-wide staff of the survey. He was selected by and worked for the then dean of the Stetson Law School, of Florida, Paul Raymond, now a prominent attorney in Daytona Beach, Fla. He assisted Dean Raymond in the research connected with the parole volume that was subsequently published under my editorship. Dean Raymond was one of my most able associates on the survey and he is a fine lawyer and loyal citizen.

Mr. President, that is the background I wish to report to the Senate as to my connection with the individual who has been discussed at much length this afternoon by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The letter I addressed to the Loyalty Board speaks for itself.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator would yield to me to make for the RECORD some showing as to the quality of the Florida citizen who has been mentioned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon is speaking in the time of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. MORSE. When I get through with the letter, I intend to enlarge upon my remarks about Mr. Raymond. If, when I finish with that, the Senator from Florida wishes to comment further upon Mr. Raymond and the Senator from Connecticut can get permission for him to do so, I shall have no objection.

Mr. HOLLAND. I should like to have the privilege.

Mr. MORSE. The letter reads as follows:

THE LOYALTY SECURITY BOARD,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
NEW STATE DEPARTMENT BUILDING,
Washington 25, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: I have just received a telephone call from Mr. Paul E. Raymond, an attorney of Daytona Beach, Fla., formerly dean of the John B. Stetson Law School of Florida, in regard to Mr. Edward G. Posniak. Mr. Raymond informs me that Mr. Posniak, an employee of the State Department, is being investigated by the Loyalty Security Board on charges that he is or has been a Communist.

Mr. Raymond was on my staff in the United States Department of Justice from 1936 to 1938, when I was Director of the Attorney General's Survey of Release Procedures. He served as director and editor of that phase of the study which dealt with the subject of parole. One of Mr. Raymond's assistants on the editorial staff was Mr. Edward G. Posniak, who had been appointed as a sociologist to assist the editorial board with some of the sociological problems involved in parole procedures.

As director and editor in chief of the entire Survey, I came to know Mr. Posniak in connection with his work of our staff. On the basis of his professional work for the Attorney General's Survey of Release Procedures during the period of time indicated above, he gave no indication at all that he held even friendly feelings toward the communistic ideology. In fact, it would be a great surprise to me, as well as a keen disappointment if, since leaving his work in the Department of Justice, Mr. Posniak had developed even the slightest sympathy for the Communist philosophy.

Of course I did not know Mr. Posniak intimately outside of his office, but my recollection of him is that he was always a rather emphatic opponent of the totalitarian view, be it of fascism, naziism, or communism. As I recall Mr. Posniak came to the United States from Poland, but I am not certain about that. However, I do recall distinctly that he was very critical in those days of the totalitarian philosophy which was sweeping Europe in Germany and Italy as well as in Russia.

Nevertheless, I wish to make it perfectly clear that I have had no contacts with Mr. Posniak whatsoever since 1938, and I am in no position to pass any reliable judgment whatsoever upon his political, social, economic, or religious philosophy since he served on the Department of Justice staff at the same time I was there. Also, I wish to make perfectly clear that if there is any evidence against Mr. Posniak which establishes the fact that he is a Communist or a fellow traveler, then I am very much of the opinion that he and all others of like point of view should be discharged from holding any position in our Federal Government.

However, in fairness to Mr. Posniak, for whatever value it may prove to be worth in light of any evidence which has been developed subsequent to his service with the Department of Justice, I think it is only right to give you my impression that when he was associated on Mr. Raymond's editorial staff in connection with the parole phase of our study, Mr. Posniak gave no indication that he held any sympathy whatsoever for any form of totalitarianism, including communism.

Very truly yours,

WAYNE MORSE.

Mr. President, I hesitated to read this letter, but on the other hand, when a letter of mine is introduced into the RECORD—and I have no objection to its being introduced into the RECORD—so far as the junior Senator from Oregon is concerned, from that point on no names mentioned in the letter are going to be withheld from the Senate. It would not be fair to me not to make a full disclosure of the person involved in this case now that my name has been mentioned in connection with it?

Believe me, Mr. President, when I become involved in any matter of this nature, I care not how incidental or minor the involvement may be, I am going to produce, so far as I am concerned, the full record. I am not going to conceal any names. I think it is just such secrecy that leads to unfounded rumors and serious misunderstandings.

I want to say with regard to the former dean of the Stetson Law School, Mr. Raymond, that he is a very good friend of mine. He was on my law faculty in the University of Oregon for 1 year during the early 1930's. He was a teacher of superior ability. He is a former resident of the State of Iowa. He is a graduate, as I recall, of the University of Iowa Law School. He is a fine citizen, and I am satisfied, Mr. President, that the views I expressed in my letter would be the views of Dean Raymond. If Dean Raymond had any evidence presented to him which either indicated that this man or any other man was even sympathetic to communism, he would want to see to it that such a person was eliminated from the State Department. That is the view I expressed in my letter. It has always been my view. On the basis of the very limited professional relation I had with Mr. Posniak while he was serving on Dean Raymond's staff, I had no reason to believe that he was sympathetic with totalitarianism in any form, including communism. As I said in my letter to the State Department Loyalty Board, I have had no contacts with him, so far as my recollection is concerned, since 1938. I do not know what has transpired in regard to him since 1938. But believe me, if he is even a sympathizer with the Communist philosophy, then he ought to be eliminated from the State Department, as I said in my letter. If, on the other hand, he is innocent of any connection whatsoever with the Communist cause, then I think the Loyalty Board owes it to him to clear him.

I do not know officially what action the Loyalty Board has taken, but in view of the fact that, if I correctly understood the conversation here today, he is still in the State Department, and in view of the fact that a hearing was held on him, I assume he was cleared, but I do not know that to be a fact.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the Senator will have to ask the Senator from Connecticut to yield. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McMAHON] has the floor. So far as I am concerned, I should be glad to yield.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I had agreed to yield to the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND] who wishes, I believe, to make a comment regarding Mr. Raymond.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I simply wanted it to appear clearly in the RECORD, for any good purpose that may be subserved—and I wish the Senator from Oregon would give attention, if he will—that Dean Raymond is regarded in our State as a very splendid and high grade American. He came to Florida, I believe, from the University of Oregon. He was dean of the law school of the John B. Stetson University. He went from there to become an able member of the staff of the Attorney General of Florida, as an assistant attorney general, and from there went into the armed forces as an officer in the Navy during the war, where he served with ability and distinction.

I do not know how his name comes into this matter, but I wanted it clearly to appear that Dean Raymond is a citizen of undoubted patriotism and an attorney of very high reputation in our State, where he is well and most favorably known.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I want to associate myself with what he has said about Dean Raymond, and I want the RECORD to show that Dean Raymond happens to be one of my very best friends.

Mr. DONNELL secured the floor.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. McCARTHY. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri a question. As I understand, the Senator is a lawyer; is he not?

Mr. DONNELL. Well, that is my profession.

Mr. McCARTHY. And has been for a number of years?

Mr. DONNELL. Yes.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, let me say for the RECORD that the senior Senator from Missouri is a very distinguished lawyer, and has been for many years in Missouri.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri has yielded to the Senator from Wisconsin. Let Senators speak one at a time.

Mr. DONNELL. I have yielded to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. McCARTHY. Does not the Senator from Missouri agree with me that we have demonstrated here a very, very dangerous picture of the loyalty procedure? Have we not also had demonstrated a very dangerous picture of how the committee has acted? Have we not had demonstrated on the floor, for example, what has occurred after the loyalty board has received positive, uncontradicted evidence that a State Department official, together with his wife, belonged to the Communist Party; that they had in their home a man who was a known party member, with the positive admission on the part of the wife that she roomed with the two women who were "probably Communists"? We have all that positive testimony of a man having belonged to the party. Then the attorney for the accused man goes out, in this case one of Dean Acheson's law partners, and secures affidavits, negative testimony from people saying "We do not know he was a Communist." And because they have been able to find 21 persons who do not know this man was a Communist, they then use that testimony to offset all the positive testimony. Under that theory of the law, affidavits of a few hundred people that they did not know that the Senator was from Missouri would prove he was from some other part of the world.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I do not care to engage in discussion of the question at issue between the Senator from Wisconsin and those who may oppose his views. My remarks today are addressed to another question. The question is a very simple one, and I think a very important one. I trust the Senator from Wisconsin will not take offense at my not going into the subject matter of which he is speaking.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield briefly again?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Wisconsin for a question?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield for a question only.

Mr. McCARTHY. The Senator may not care to discuss this matter, but I should like to get it into the RECORD. Does the Senator agree with me that after a man such as Alger Hiss is proved to be a member of the party, an espionage agent, he is able to secure witnesses, Supreme Court Justices, if you please, prominent men to testify that they do not know he is a Communist, that they do not know he is an agent, does not the fact that he can secure such prominent men to come forth and testify for him indicate that he is much more dangerous than the Communist who is recognized by everyone as such?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, the Senator has presented in his question the point which he has in mind. Of course, I think we all realize that any individual who is capable of commanding the favorable attention of great outstanding men such as members of the Supreme Court, has it within his power to be not merely a power for good but also a power for evil if those characteristics are inherent in him. This afternoon I shall not undertake to discuss Alger Hiss or any of the other dramatis personae who have been mentioned here this afternoon.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. McFARLAND. I should like to ask the Senator to yield to me to make a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. DONNELL. If I may do so without losing the floor I shall do it with pleasure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the Senator from Missouri yielding to the Senator from Arizona, without losing the floor? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I have been trying to work out a plan by which we can give some consideration today to the appropriation bill, which is the unfinished business. I understand the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] desires to make a few remarks at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Missouri, and that the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] also desires to address the Senate.

I therefore ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that after those remarks have been concluded, that the remainder of the day be devoted to the unfinished business, the appropriation bill, and that debate upon amendments thereto be limited to 10 minutes to each Senator, and that all remarks be germane to the amendments.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota objects.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that we are going to have a night session unless we can devote 2 hours to the appropriation bill. The procedure of using all the time for speeches on matters not related to the unfinished business must cease.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I did not yield for the purpose of anything other than a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield, although I should like to proceed with the subject matter which I wish to discuss, and I do not desire to go into extraneous matters.

Mr. McCARTHY. The Senator from Missouri may not wish to discuss this question now; if so, I hope perhaps he will discuss it later: Is the Senator aware of the fact that at the time when Mr. X was working on the project described by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], Mr. X was then a citizen of Russia, and did not become a naturalized citizen of the United States until 1939?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I am not aware of the Posniak matter; but I wish to say that I have been impressed with the earnestness and stick-to-it-iveness and courage of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY] in presenting the matters he has discussed today and previous to today; and I wish to pay tribute to him for those qualities, which he has evidenced here on the floor of the Senate.

However, Mr. President, my purpose today is not to discuss the Senator from Wisconsin or the Senator from Maryland or Mr. Posniak or Mr. Hiss. Indeed, my remarks are addressed, as I have indicated, to a question which I consider to be a very important one. It is a question which arises out of recent happenings in connection with the subcommittee which was headed by the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and it relates to the report which was presented and filed, concerning which the Senate has already heard much.

The question I desire to discuss is this: Is it proper that Report No. 2108, Eighty-first Congress, second session, be circulated with its cover page containing the words "Report of the Committee on Foreign Relations"?

Mr. President, the importance of this question is inherent in the facts which have been disclosed before the Senate. If the report is a report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, it is entirely proper that it be circulated under that title. By so doing, it carries much prestige and much weight and much validity, because the Committee on Foreign Relations, headed, as it is, by the distinguished senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], has in its membership 12 other Senators, all of whom are noted and stand high in the United States. I shall not mention the names of the Senators who were on the subcommittee, although I wish to point out that I do not refrain from stating their names at this time because of any desire to discriminate against them or to make any intimation whatsoever regarding them. To the contrary, I desire to point out that in addition to them—men whose names have been so prominently featured in the debate during the last few days—the other members of the Committee on Foreign Relations include the following: the chairman of the committee, the distinguished senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], whom I have already mentioned, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], in addition—and perhaps in justice to them, I should specifically state for the RECORD all the names of the members of the subcommittee—to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

I say that if this report goes forth to the American public with the title "Report of the Committee on Foreign Relations"—a committee which consists of the eminent Members of the Senate to whom I have just referred—it will carry a tremendous amount of weight.

Of course, even if the report goes forth as a report of the subcommittee, it will carry weight commensurate with the stature of those who served on the subcommittee. However, there is a very great difference between a report of a subcommittee which is presented to the committee which has created it, a report which is subordinate to that committee, a report which can be reviewed by the committee which created the subcommittee, and a report of a full committee itself—a full committee which, after careful study and deliberation, shall have passed upon the contents of the report and shall have promulgated it to the Nation as an official report of the entire committee.

So, Mr. President, I say it is no mere idle or technical or formal question which is asked, when I inquire this afternoon whether it is proper that Report No. 2108 be circulated with its cover page containing the words "Report of the Committee on Foreign Relations."

Mr. President, I now hold in my hand Senate Resolution No. 316, which has been submitted by the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS]. It has not been acted upon as yet by the Senate; but the resolution indicates something of the importance of determining once and for all whether this report is actually a report of the Committee on Foreign Relations or whether it is merely a report of a subcommittee.

If it is a report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, there is no objection to having the report circulated as such. On the other hand, if the report is merely a report of a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations, there is all the objection in the world to sending forth the report to the people of the Nation as an official report of the entire committee of 13 members who deal with the subject matter of foreign relations.

Mr. President, the resolution (S. Res. 316) submitted by the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], was submitted on July 21 of this year, and reads as follows:

> Whereas Report No. 2108, entitled "State Department Employee Loyalty Investigation," as printed and distributed on July 21—

I pause to call attention to the fact that the report is so printed and distributed that it is described on the cover page as "Report of the Committee on Foreign Relations." I turn now to the resolution. After the words "printed and distributed on July 21," we find in Senate Resolution 316 the following—> differs from the report submitted to the Senate on July 20 in certain important respects, particularly in being called on the cover sheet a report of the committee; and

> Whereas it does not appear that the Foreign Relations Committee has adopted the report; and
>
> Whereas a false impression of the status of this report will be spread abroad by the cover which has been substituted since it was received by this body: Therefore be it
> Resolved, That said Report No. 2108 be at once withdrawn from distribution until the cover be replaced to agree with that covering the report as submitted.

Mr. President, deeming the question of whether the document which has been printed and prepared for circulation, and doubtless already to some extent has been circulated, is or is not a report of the committee whose report it purports to be, I made this statement to the Senate on the afternoon of July 21, as shown at page 10785 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

> I am going to the committee—

I was referring to the Foreign Relations Committee—> to find out, if I can what the action of the Committee on Foreign Relations was, with respect to this report, and to bring to the Senate information as to what the action was.

Mr. President, a little later this afternoon I shall tell the Senate what has been done in pursuance of that promise, as so made by me.

On July 20, 1950, the senior Senator from Maryland sent to the desk a report entitled "Report of a Subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations Pusuant to Senate Resolution 231, A Resolution to Investigate Whether There Are Employees in the State Department Disloyal to the United States, Together With Individual Views of Senator LODGE."

It will be observed that the quotation which I have just read, which appears upon the cover page of the document sent to the desk, on July 20, by the senior Senator from Maryland, includes the words "Report of a Subcommittee"—and I emphasize by my voice the word "Subcommittee." There was no statement upon that occasion, Mr. President, that the report was the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations. The senior Senator from Maryland stated, at or about the time he sent to the desk this report, that he was instructed by the full committee to submit to the Senate, "and that" he stated, "I now do." That is on page 10686 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The Vice President announced, "The report is filed."

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, speaking a few moments later, said:

> It does not mean that any members of the committee agreed to it, if I correctly understand the action that was taken. I understood that the full committee merely transmitted the report, just the same as the Post Office Department transmits a letter from one person to another. That is clear from the record.

A moment later, another member of the Foreign Relations Committee—and I refer to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] took the floor and said:

> Mr. President, as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, I rise to take issue with the statement just made by the Senator from Maryland and say that the report is not a report of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Within a few minutes, however, the chairman of the committee, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] said:

> As chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, I appointed the subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee. It made the investigation, and as a subcommittee, reported to the Foreign Relations Committee.
> That committee, as the Committee on Foreign Relations, adopted a motion that the report of the subcommittee be reported to the Senate—not as the report of the subcommittee, but as the report of the full committee. I, as chairman of the full committee, designated the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], for the full committee, to make the report to the United States Senate.

That is all there is to the matter, so far as I know. Our records show that.

Mr. President, later in the same afternoon, July 20, the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] spoke further upon this question, and I quote a portion of what he said:

As I have said, after the report had been received by the committee and the subcommittee was discharged—and we had all voted for it, because we thought it was the proper disposition of the matter—it was moved that the Committee on Foreign Relations transmit to the Senate through the chairman, or someone designated by him, the report of the subcommittee without comment one way or another. I voted for that with the distinct understanding that it was simply carrying out the wishes of the subcommittee chairman that the matter be transmitted to the Senate as a subcommittee report for such use as the Senate might see fit to make of it.

Continuing, the Senator from New Hampshire said:

I distinctly understood that it was not a report of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I doubt that anyone except the chairman of the subcommittee had read the report.

Incidentally, Mr. President, I pause to say that this report is one of 170 printed pages, attached to one, in fact, with an addendum of two further pages and appendixes, of approximately 175 additional pages. And the Senator from New Jersey said:

I doubt that anyone except the chairman of the subcommittee had read the report. I do not know that anyone else ever had a chance to read it. There was no discussion of its merits. The entire discussion was on procedure, and on the procedural question it was distinctly understood that we were merely having the report sent to the Senate by the chairman of the full committee, or someone designated by him. He very properly designated the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who had been chairman of the subcommittee. I recollect very clearly that what was to be submitted to the Senate was the subcommittee report without comment. I want to make it clear, Mr. President, that it was to be the subcommittee report without comment, because there seems to be some misunderstanding as to what the committee did. Certainly I would not have voted "yea" on that motion if in doing so it meant that the committee was accepting the report and sending it to the Senate as the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations. While there was some discussion of whether we would debate the merits of the report and approve it or disapprove it we agreed that no one knew enough about it to discuss the merits. Consequently no vote was taken to approve or disapprove the report.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] simply stated that he wanted to submit his report, to have it received by the committee, and to have the subcommittee discharged. After that we could do anything we wanted to do with respect to it. Following that a member of the subcommittee made the motion that the report be transmitted to the Senate through the chairman of the subcommittee, but only as a subcommittee report without comment. It is clear in my mind that it meant we were not passing on it, but simply sending it to the Senate without comment, because we had all agreed that we did not have time to read it or pass comment on it.

I want to make my position clear, because those are the facts as I remember them. If any other member of the committee wishes to take issue with me, he may do so, but I thought that I must make this statement. I do so because it was perfectly clear that no position was taken one way or the other by the committee. We were simply transmitting to the Senate the report of the subcommittee. The form of the document as submitted is the report of the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations pursuant to this resolution with a deletion of some language that reflected on the minority members of the subcommittee.

Mr. President, we have thus heard from several of the Senators, members of the Foreign Relations Committee, speaking promptly during the session at which the Senator from Maryland presented this report, cover-leafed as it was with the words "Report of a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations." Within a few minutes after the remarks of the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] had been completed, the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] rose, and in the course of the remarks on which he soon entered, said:

Then the motion was made, if you please, Mr. President, to transmit this document to the Senate, and the chairman was authorized to designate a member to transmit it to the Senate.

Mr. President, if Senators will read the record of the Foreign Relations Committee at that meeting they will find that there was discussion about the particular meaning of the words which were used, and that "transmit" was used to indicate that the full committee was only a conduit by which this document, developed by three members of the subcommittee, could flow onto the Senate floor. The word "transmit" was used advisedly, and in the records of the Foreign Relations Committee it will be found that the discussion of whether or not the committee should take action on this document was pushed aside, and the members of the committee said they would take no action except the transmittal of this particular document.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee never approved this document—

I am still quoting from the Senator from Iowa, a member of that committee. He said:

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee never approved this document, never adopted it as the act of the Foreign Relations Committee, and there is no statement of adoption in the record of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. President, I believe the statements I am making are accurate. They are certainly as I remember them, and I have been in some intimate association with this committee.

I invite the attention of the Senate, Mr. President, to the fact that there was a particular reason why the Senator from Iowa would remember so accurately the tenor of the discussion and what was the intent of the members of the committee, because he was one of the members of the subcommittee whose report, or the document purporting to be its report, was thus under discussion.

Mr. President, in the course of the remarks of the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] in the Senate on July 20, he also said:

Therefore, I raised the question whether it was officially a report of the subcommittee, because no meeting was held for the purpose of approving or rejecting it.

So, Mr. President, we observe that a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, who was not on the subcommittee, raised this very interesting question, not merely the one as to whether this was a report of the committee, but whether it was even a report of the subcommittee. I shall have something more to say upon that very interesting question in a moment.

In the course of the remarks of the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] on July 20, he spoke also to similar effect, raising the question, indeed putting it somewhat more strongly, and saying that, in his judgment, there was no question that it was neither a report of the committee nor a report of the subcommittee.

I should like to read what he said to the Senate on July 20:

Mr. President, we have been talking about the mechanics of this thing today. But above and beyond that, I think there can be little question; in fact, there is no question in my mind, that this is neither a report of the Foreign Relations Committee nor is it actually a report of the subcommittee, because, so far as I know, no meeting of the subcommittee was ever called to pass upon this report, at least so far as I, as a member of the minority on that subcommittee, received any notice.

Mr. President, the Senator, on the same day listened to the Senator from Iowa make this further statement, at page 10699:

Mr. President, this document—

Referring to the one which had been presented by the senior Senator from Maryland—is a mysterious and a mysteriously prepared document. It is a document whose antecedents, paternity, and maternity might be open to some serious and rather revealing facets. It is a document whose generation raises question in the mind of anyone who has followed this matter rather carefully.

So it is not particularly surprising, Mr. President, to find that both the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Iowa raised the point, not solely the one which I have presented, namely, that the report which was presented obviously was one of the subcommittee, but they raised the further question as to whether it was even the report of the subcommittee, because no meeting of the subcommittee had been called to pass upon the report.

Mr. President, it was interesting and illuminating to the Members of the Senate, I am sure, on yesterday, to have their attention invited to the fact by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that a considerable number of pages, some 35 typewritten pages of transcript of the subcommittee proceedings, had been omitted from the printed volume which I hold in my hand, and at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts the omitted portion was set forth in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, where it appears, beginning with page 10815. It have only hastily scanned portions of that RECORD, but I find in the hasty scanning which I have given to it a very interesting situation. I find, Mr. President, that the Senator from Maryland is reported at page 10817 as saying:

Make a motion, then, so we can get your point of view on paper.

He was addressing the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN]; and in response, the Senator from Rhode Island said:

Well, I would suggest that the counsel for the committee make a draft report for this committee that we can discuss, in the first place. When you once have that draft report and have been over that, then we can discuss the findings.

Then, Mr. President, we go further over and find a discussion between the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] as to whether the work was pretty well concluded. The Senator from Maryland said:

I think our work is pretty well concluded, if you want my opinion.

The Senator from Iowa said:

I do not think it is even started, Mr. Chairman.

What I am reading from is the proceedings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations, in executive session held on Wednesday, June 28, 1950, reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, after having been omitted from the official volume containing what purports to be the hearings before the subcommittee. It was the last day of the meetings of the subcommittee in the form of hearings, or the last day of the list of days set forth on the cover of the hearings. I find, as I go through, that after the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Iowa had discussed the question as to whether the work was pretty well completed, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON] said:

It seems to me like a sensible thing to make use of our counsel to give us a brief of what we have already done.

Then we find my good and distinguished friend from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] a little later saying:

We must make some sort of report, must we not?

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] said:

My position is that the thing we ought to do is to report out a resolution, setting up a trained bipartisan commission of experts to make an independent investigation.

The Senator from Rhode Island said:

That may be a conclusion, but we must make a report of what we have done, surely.

Then we go to page 10819, and the Senator from Maryland said this:

Let me suggest that counsel prepare a tentative report to submit to the members of this committee—

Listen to that, Mr. President—a tentative report—to submit to the members of this committee, that each man prepare, if he wishes, such report as he wants and such recommendations as he wants, and that we pool those here and see if we can reach collectively or individually a basis for bringing our present hearings to a close and passing it on with recommendations for further action.

(At this point Mr. DONNELL yielded to Mr. MCFARLAND to propound a unanimous-consent request relating to the appropriation bill, and debate ensued, which appears at the conclusion of Mr. DONNELL's remarks.)

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, it will be recalled in what I previously stated that the following was suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], which appears at page 10817 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday:

Well, I would suggest that the counsel for the committee make a draft report for this committee that we can discuss, in the first place.

So far as I have been able to find, Mr. President, there is nothing further emanating from the Senator from Rhode Island which could be construed to be a motion. Strictly speaking, I am not certain that what he said at that point could be considered a motion, because he says, "I would suggest." However, it is evidently treated as a motion by the subcommittee. At any rate, it is the only motion made by the Senator from Rhode Island, and his motion reads in this way:

Well, I would suggest that the counsel for the committee make a draft report for this committee—

For this committee. The Senator from Rhode Island refers to the subcommittee. Let us see what happened on this motion, if it be such, made by the Senator from Rhode Island. I quote from page 10819 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday:

Senator TYDINGS. All those in favor of the Green resolution will signify by saying "aye."

Senator GREEN. Aye.

Senator MCMAHON. Aye.

Senator TYDINGS. All those opposed signify by saying "No."

Senator LODGE. No.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. No.

Senator TYDINGS. Two votes "no" and two the other way.

Go ahead, Mr. Morgan, and prepare your report. The meeting is in recess.

Mr. President, I note with what I hope is not too obvious a sense of humor that the chairman of the committee did not actually cast a vote himself. I take it that the Senator would undoubtedly indicate that his direction, "go ahead, Mr. Morgan, and prepare your report," would be considered as a vote on his part. I make no point of that. I do make a point, however, in supplementing the line discussed by the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from New Jersey as to whether or not this is even a report of the subcommittee, that the motion or the resolution that was carried, if the action of the Senator from Maryland in saying, "go ahead, Mr. Morgan, and prepare your report," may be considered the equivalent of a yea vote, was the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] that "the counsel for the committee make a draft report for this committee."

Mr. President, as to this document, or this draft report, if it may be termed that, or, to use the language of the Senator from Maryland, this tentative report which the counsel was instructed to prepare and submit to "the members of this committee," followed by the direction of the Senator from Maryland to the counsel, Mr. Morgan, "Go ahead and prepare your report," it takes somewhat of a stretch of parliamentary imagination, to say nothing of parliamentary law, to consider that either the maternity or the paternity, to adopt the picturesque language of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], is clear. At least there is considerable doubt as to whether or not any official action was taken, so far as the record discloses, by the subcommittee toward the presentation of the report itself. That is entirely aside from the proposition as to whether or not the document is the report of the full committee as distinguished from the subcommittee.

In this state of the proceedings, as set forth in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on July 20 and the 21st, with the various statements of members of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], and the chairman of the committee [Mr. CONNALLY], all of them giving their views, we find that on July 21 there was received on the floor of the Senate copies of a report entitled "Report of the Committee on Foreign Relations Pursuant to Senate Resolution 231, a Resolution to Investigate Whether There Are Employees in the State Department Disloyal to the United States."

Mr. President, there is nothing in the record to indicate that between July 20, when the document was presented by the Senator from Maryland with "Report of a subcommittee" on the outside of it, and the time on July 21 when there was presented some copies of a document entitled "Report of the Committee on Foreign Relations" the Committee on Foreign Relations had taken any action to authorize the report to be changed from a report of the subcommittee to a report of the full committee. The document which appeared on the floor of the Senate on the afternoon of July 21 appears to be, although I have not read all the hundreds of pages, but have simply scanned through it, precisely the same as the report which had been presented on July 20 under the caption on the cover page "Report of a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations," save only for two very significant things. One is that upon the cover page the words "of a subcommittee" have been deleted. They cannot be found with the highest powered microscope, because they are not there any more. In the second place, on page numbered iii, which in the document presented and filed in this body on July 20 had read at the top "Contents. I. Report of a subcommittee," there has been deleted and eliminated the "I. Report of a subcommittee."

So, the document which we had on July 21, and a copy of which I had in my hand during the afternoon as the debate progressed, and with reference to which I spoke as I had it in my hand, differs in important respects from the one which had been received on the day previous in the United States Senate.

Mr. President, in the course of the discussion which developed after the arrival of these new copies, with the deletions to which I have referred, which suddenly transformed, in effulgent beauty, the cover page from a mere report of the subcommittee to a report of the committee, occurred this colloquy:

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. The final vote was to transmit the report of the subcommittee to the Senate without recommendation.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is absolutely in error, as he will ascertain if he will consult the transcript which he has in his hand—the original transcript. The motion was that the committee report to the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. The Senator is correct. I apologize.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well. That is what I wanted to bring out.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. The Senator moved that the Senate Foreign Relations Committee report to the Senate, through the chairman, or through someone designated by him, without comment.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. But let me remark that that is the first place where the word "report" was used because throughout these particular proceedings, when the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] was discussing the question, he used the word "transmit."

Mr. CONNALLY. The committee did not vote on what the Senator from Florida said. They voted on the question stated by the chairman.

Mr. President, before I read what the Senator from New Jersey said, I wish to say that it was obvious that the Senator from Texas thought that if he made a motion that the committee "report" to the Senate, that the words thus used transformed this action of transmittal into one of adoption and reporting to the Senate a document adopted by the committee.

In the first place, Mr. President, I take it that this is a somewhat tenuous position, even taking the word at its technical meaning. But let me read something of the substance of what the committee had understood, as the Senator from New Jersey then proceeded:

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. It was the difference betwen the words "transmit" and "report"—that is, to "transmit" or "report" to the Senate the report of the subcommittee without comment. I will not argue with the Senator about the words. Either way, it means the same thing. Everyone understood it. It was understood that we were transmitting the report of the subcommittee, and that the committee itself was taking no action on it because the members of the committee admitted that they had not read the report. So how could they make a report they had not read?

I wish to pause, in fairness, to say that there is something to the point made by the Senator from Texas on the face of the record thus far which I have read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that by the use of the word "report," to which he called the attention of the Senator from New Jersey and others, even though it be a tenuous ground, there is some basis, and perhaps some logical basis, for the Senator from Texas to take the position that what was then and thereafter being done was to report on behalf of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I wish to say, however, that a most interesting fact developed a little later from a Senator who had not been present at the meeting to which the Senator from Texas and the Senator from New Jersey referred. The Senator whom I mention as not having been at the meeting and who contributed something to the discussion was the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY]. On July 21, subsequent to the remarks made by the Senator from Texas and those by the Senator from New Jersey, the Senator from Wisconsin rose, and in the course of what he said is this exceedingly interesting statement of his recollection. After reciting that he had been out of town and just returned, and went to the Committee on the Judiciary that morning, where, if I am not mistaken, I remember seeing him myself, being a member of the same committee, he said:

My information as to what took place in the meeting of the Foreign Relations Committee came to me later. As soon as I could, Tuesday afternoon, after hearing of the session of the Foreign Relations Committee, I did consult with the clerk of the committee and was briefed on the subject. I have since looked at the minutes briefly.

This is what he then said that is of particular interest:

In the motion which was made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] in committee the word "transmit" was used. However, when the motion was stated by the chairman of the committee the word "report" was used.

In the meanwhile there had been a discussion in committee as to whether or not the committee would approve the report. As I recall, from a very brief analysis, and from what was told me, it was the consensus of those present that there could be no acceptance or approval of the report until the report had been studied.

Mr. President, I pause to call attention to the fact that I assume that we would agree that the chairman could not, by the mere change of a word, change the motion which had been made. The recollection of the Senator from Wisconsin is that in his motion the Senator from Florida used the word "transmit," but, as the Senator from Wisconsin further said:

However, when the motion was stated by the chairman of the committee, the word "report" was used. In the meanwhile there had been a discussion in the committee as to whether or not the committee would approve the report. As I recall, from a very brief analysis, and from what was told me, it was the consensus of those present that there could be no acceptance or approval of the report until the report had been studied.

Yes, Mr. President, this is a report of 170 printed pages, a great deal of it in very small type. For instance, I point at random to pages 120 and 121, which are in small type, and down at the bottom extended quotations from testimony. It would take a great deal of time to consider and deliberate on a report of 170 pages, with 175 additional pages, or thereabout, in appendices and addenda.

Then said the Senator from Wisconsin:

I shall have something to say later, but I believe in view of the general discussion here as to whether or not this is the report of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, it is important that I at least express my own views on the report. The intent seems plain. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee meant to transmit the report but not approve the same.

The page on which these statements of the Senator from Wisconsin appear is 10783 of the RECORD of July 21.

Mr. President, I refer to the question to which I addressed myself at the outset of my remarks, namely, is it proper for Report No. 2108, Eighty-first Congress, second session, to be circulated with its title page containing the words "Report of the Committee on Foreign Relations"?

In order to know whether or not it is proper to circulate this document to the public with the statement upon it that it is the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, it is essential, as I see it, to know whether the full committee did in fact adopt the subcommittee report as the report of the full committee.

The other afternoon I made the statement to the Senate, as I have previously indicated, that I was going to the committee to find out, if I could, what the action of the Committee on Foreign Relations was with respect to this report, and to bring to the Senate information as to what the action was. I did so. I went to the office of the Committee on Foreign Relations about 9 o'clock in the morning, immediately following our discussion here on the floor on July 22. I shall not give the Senate all the details of what transpired, because the Senate will observe in a moment that a letter was written by me subsequently in the morning, and a letter received back by me later on that day. I shall introduce those letters in a few moments into the RECORD.

I may say, Mr. President, that I have been orally assured by Dr. Francis O. Wilcox, chief of staff of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, that I am not required to keep confidential the contents of the letter dated July 22, 1950, from him to me, or the copy of certain comments by the distinguished senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] to the press on July 18, or the contents of the copies of certain motions which Dr. Wilcox kindly sent to me with his letter dated July 22. In a few moments I shall, however, have something to say about the use of those copies of certain motions derived, as they are, from the transcript.

Mr. President, I see Dr. Wilcox in the Chamber now, and I should like to say that with his usual and constant courtesy, he was very courteous to me. I could have not the slightest criticism of his courtesy to me on the occasion of my visit to him. I want to say to the Senate that to my mind we have, in Dr. Wilcox, a gentleman who is not only efficient, but who is trying to do his duty and who is courteous to the Members of the Senate, whether they are members of the committee with which he is connected or not.

The letter which I sent to him on the morning of July 22 reads as follows:

JULY 22, 1950.

Dr. FRANCIS O. WILCOX,
Chief of Staff of Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, the Capitol, Washington, D. C.

DEAR DR. WILCOX: This confirms the request which of you, as the chief of staff of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, I made this morning on said committee for the privilege of reading the complete transcript of those proceedings of the committee with respect to the report of a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations pursuant to Senate Resolution 231, which occurred at or after the presentation of said report to the committee. My request was accompanied by my statement to the effect that, if I be permitted to read those proceedings, I intend to copy such portion or all of them as I deem proper and present to the United States Senate such of said proceedings as I deem proper so to present. In our conversation this morning I made not only a request but a demand. On reconsideration, I withdraw the demand, but, as above stated, confirm the request.

This also confirms my request made this morning of you as the chief of staff of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations for a copy of (a) the contents of motions made before the committee concerning said report after its presentation to the committee, and (b) the contents of statement made to the press by the chairman as to what motions had been acted on by the committee with respect to said report.

Kindly give to the committee this letter.

Yours very truly,

FORREST C. DONNELL.

Mr. President, I should like to supplement the letter by saying that Dr. Wilcox had and placed before me on the table on the morning of Saturday, July 22, what he informed me was a transcript of the proceedings, and it would have been entirely possible for me to have opened it and read it. In fact, it was entirely agreeable to him that I should do so. But he made it clear to me that he deemed it to be his duty, and I respect him for doing what he thought was his duty, to inform me of what he deemed to be the practice, that information so received by Senators from reading such transcripts was to be kept confidential. I declined, Mr. President, to look inside the book to see what was in it with that confidence imposed upon me, because the purpose of my going there was to secure access to the book in order to see what transpired, and bring the information to the Senate.

I may say also with regard to the question of the demand, that I did make a demand, not merely a request but a demand but on reflection it appeared to me that perhaps I had gone somewhat too far, and that a request would be sufficient to make my point, and that it would be more respectful to the committee to confine my attitude to a request rather than to a demand. Therefore, on reconsideration, as pointed out in my letter of July 22 to Dr. Wilcox, I withdrew the demand, but, as therein stated, confirmed the request.

As I was at the luncheon table on July 22—and this shows something of the promptness of Dr. Wilcox in bringing to me a response to my letter—he personally came to me into the Senate restaurant in the Capitol and bore with him three items which he handed to me in an envelope, and which I have subsequently read. One of them is a letter dated July 22, 1950, on the letterhead of "United States Senate, Committee on Foreign Relations," listing the names of the members of the committee, and "Francis O. Wilcox, Chief of Staff," addressed to me, and reading as follows:

Hon. FORREST C. DONNELL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR DONNELL: This will acknowledge your letter of July 22, and your request to be permitted to read the transcript of the executive proceedings of the committee on July 18 when the report of the subcommittee created pursuant to Senate Resolution 231 was discussed. I note also your statement that you intend to copy such portion of the proceedings as you deem proper and present to the Senate such of the said proceedings as you deem proper to present.

As I explained to you this morning, the committee staff is always glad to make available to Members of the Senate any records of the committee sessions they may wish to see. As you know, however, it is policy of the committee to do everything possible to maintain the integrity of its executive transcripts. In line with this policy it has been the regular practice of the staff to remind Senators who wish to read the committee records that the information contained therein is confidential or secret in nature and should be treated as such.

In view of the nature of your request, it will be necessary for me to present your letter to the committee for its consideration. I will be glad to do this at the first opportunity.

I am enclosing copies of the motions made before the committee concerning the report and the comments made by the chairman of the committee to the press following the meeting.

Sincerely yours,

FRANCIS C. WILCOX.

Mr. President, in addition to this letter, Dr. Wilcox handed me a sheet of paper entitled "Votes on Senate Resolution 231 in Committee on Foreign Relations, July 18, 1950," this sheet likewise being on stationery of the United States Senate, Committee on Foreign Relations, with the names as previously indicated thereon.

Mr. President, I am not willing to reveal the contents of the copies of the motions as set forth on this sheet. Notwithstanding the assurance by Dr. Wilcox, who I know is acting in the utmost of good faith, it might nevertheless be deemed by the Senate that those contents, having been derived from the transcript, are the secret or confidential business of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. I may say I do not share the view that they are, because of various facts, one of which is that the chairman of the committee issued a press release very shortly after the close of the meeting of the committee on July 18. Nevertheless, Mr. President, in view of the fact that it might be deemed by the Senate that those contents of the motions, having been derived from the transcript, are the secret or confidential business of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, I shall not reveal the contents of the copies of those motions to the Senate, although, as I said, Dr. Wilcox has assured me that I am not required to keep confidential the contents of the copies of those motions.

I should like to state, however, that I think that in justice both to the Foreign Relations Committee and the Senate, the contents of this sheet entitled "Votes on Senate Resolution 231 in Committee on Foreign Relations, July 18, 1950"—that is the way it is titled—should be made known, and I hope that the committee, or its distinguished chairman, or such person as may be authorized by the committee, will release such if any secrecy attaches to them.

Mr. President, at this point I wish to read the third item which Dr. Wilcox kindly handed to me on Saturday, July 22. It is typewritten, and contains the following on the outside cover:

Press Conference, Senate Resolution 231, Tuesday, July 18, 1950. United States Senate, Committee on Foreign Relations, Washington, D. C. Senator TOM CONNALLY, chairman. Francis O. Wilcox, chief of staff; C. C. O'Day, clerk.

Franklin A. Steinko, stenotype reporter, 711 Fourteenth Street NW., Washington, D. C.

On the first inside page the following appears:

Press conference, Tuesday, July 18, 1950. The CHAIRMAN.—

Which, of course, is the distinguished senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]—

The CHAIRMAN. All right, gentlemen and ladies.

The Foreign Relations Committee met this morning and there was submitted to it the report, which you have seen, no doubt—the Tydings subcommittee report.

Mr. President, at this moment I call attention to the fact that in a few minutes it will be observed that the press conference adjourned at 12:48 p. m., and the chairman referred to the fact that the committee had met that morning. So the conference was reasonably nearly contemporaneous with the events to which the chairman of the committee refers at the press conference; and I think that clearly indicates, if not his recollection of the language used in the statements made in that committee meeting, or even if the language used at the committee meeting differed in some respects from what was said at the press conference, that at least the statements made at the press conference should give us accurately the recollection of the chairman of the committee in regard to what had transpired at the committee meeting, inasmuch as he was reporting, I judge, evidently sometime shortly after 12 o'clock noon on the same day.

I read further from the statements made by the chairman of the committee at that press conference:

It was moved in the committee that the report be received by the committee and the subcommittee was discharged. That was the first motion, carried 11 to nothing.

I wish to emphasize the next portion of the statements made at the press conference:

Second, it was moved that the report of the subcommittee be transmitted to the Senate. That was all made in one motion, but they asked for division, so it was voted that way. That was voted 9 to 2. Everybody voted "aye" except Senator HICKENLOOPER and Senator LODGE. They voted "no."

To recur to what was previously mentioned this afternoon, let me say that the comment made by the Senator from Texas in that connection was that the committee report to the Senate. I am not undertaking to say as to that, because I have not seen the transcript, and I am not able to say whether the Senator from Wisconsin is right or wrong when he says that the Senator who made the motion, the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], used the word "transmit" in making his motion, but that when the motion was stated by the chairman of the committee, the word "report" was used. I cannot assure the Senate which word was used.

However, I say that at the press conference held shortly after noon, following the morning when the committee meeting had occurred, on the occasion of that press conference the chairman of the committee obviously was giving what he thought was the meaning—whether or not the exact language used—of what had occurred at the committee meeting.

As I stated a moment ago, the chairman said:

Second, it was moved that the report of the subcommittee be transmitted to the Senate.

Mr. President, I emphasize the words "transmitted to the Senate," not with a view of saying that those were the words used either in the motion or in the way the motion was put by the chairman of the committee, or whether the Senator from Wisconsin is correct in his recollection that the Senator from Florida used the word "transmit" in making the motion, but that when the chairman of the committee put the motion, he used the word "report." I am not undertaking to say as to that. However, there was the chairman of the committee making the statement, almost contemporaneously with the event itself, that—

Second, it was moved that the report of the subcommittee be transmitted to the Senate.

Certainly it is reasonable to believe that regardless of the precise language used—whatever it may have been—the thought of the Senator from Texas, the chairman of the committee, in speaking to the press almost contemporaneously with the committee meeting itself, was that the meaning of the committee and the thought of the committee was that the report of the subcommittee be transmitted to the Senate.

Then the chairman of the committee proceeded at the press conference with the following statement:

That was all made in one motion, but they asked for division, so it was voted that way. That was voted nine to two. Everybody voted aye except Senator HICKENLOOPER and Senator LODGE. They voted no.

Question—

In other words, a question by some member of the press, I assume—

Did they say why?

The CHAIRMAN. I have not got an hour to tell you.

Question. Any absentee Senators?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, Senator MCMAHON was absent, but he had a proxy. Senator WILEY was absent, and, of course, Senator VANDENBERG is ill and was not here. That covers the absentees, I believe.

Question. Senators WILEY and VANDENBERG did not vote? There was no proxy?

The CHAIRMAN. No, they did not vote. There was no proxy. All right.

Third, it was moved that Senator HICKENLOOPER be authorized up to the 1st of August to file with the committee his individual views on the evidence adduced by the investigation and comments thereon and thereafter the committee will decide on whether to transmit it to the Senate.

Now, Senator HICKENLOOPER did not sign the report. Neither did he file a minority report. The majority report here says Senator HICKENLOOPER was told that the report was going to be made and was requested to submit his report, if he had one; he said he did not care to file minority views and that he would make his answer on the floor.

Now, on the other hand, Senator HICKENLOOPER claims that at that time he had not seen the majority report and that he could not very well make an answer to it or file his individual views, that he only got the copy at 6 o'clock last night.

Mr. President, this is the Senator from Texas still speaking to the press; and I continue to read from the statement he made to the press at that time:

Now, the vote on that motion that he be given until August 1 to file his views—that does not hold up reporting it to the Senate. We go ahead and report to the Senate the report which contains the minority views of Senator LODGE, and then Senator HICKENLOOPER has until the 1st of August to file here with this committee his individual views; and it is then up to the committee to decide whether or not the committee will transmit his individual views to the Senate.

On that motion, Senator FULBRIGHT's motion for Senator HICKENLOOPER's views by August 1, there were nine voting "aye" and Senator HICKENLOOPER voted "present" and Mr. LODGE voted "present." The others are those that are named, Senator VANDENBERG and Senator WILEY were not here, a 9-to-0 vote.

So that is the kettle of fish, gentlemen and ladies.

Question. This officially closes the investigation, then, Senator?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, yes, it closes it with the exception of our getting Senator HICKENLOOPER's report and deciding whether we will transmit it to the Senate or not. Of course, it is up to what the Senate does about closing the report. This committee is through with it when we file this report and any other matters that go up to the Senate it will then be up to the Senate to determine whether there will be any further proceedings in the matter or not.

Question. Will you have anything to recommend?

The CHAIRMAN. You haven't heard me say anything about it.

Question. No, I ask you, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I haven't got anything to submit at this time. It depends on developments.

Question. Are you considering making recommendations?

The CHAIRMAN. No, not yet.

Question. Were those the only votes taken, Senator?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, those were the only ones. These are the determining votes. We chewed around on a lot of things, but this is the quintessence of our discussion.

Question. Senator, are you considering making recommendations to the Senate?

The CHAIRMAN. No, I am not yet. There are some recommendations in this report now, if you want to study that.

Let me call the attention of the Senate particularly to the next questions and answers:

Question. The committee—

Meaning the Senate Foreign Relations Committee—neither approved nor disapproved this report, it just received it?

The CHAIRMAN. That is all. We did not go into that, because we want to go home by Chrismas.

Question. Did anybody propose that you accept the report or approve the report?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the motion was to receive the report and transmit it to the Senate. So I will have to do that. I appointed Senator TYDINGS to report for this committee; he is the chairman of the subcommittee, to report to the Senate, to transmit it to the Senate.

I pause to say that clearly, judging from the answer given by the chairman of the committee in response to the question—

The committee neither approved nor disapproved this report, it just received it?

The chairman said:

That is all. We did not go into that, because we want to go home by Christmas.

I read further:

Question. Did anybody propose that you accept the report or approve the report?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the motion was to receive the report and transmit it to the Senate. So I will have to do that—

And so forth. I return now to the transcript at the point where I stopped reading it a moment ago:

Question. Senator, were there not two paragraphs deleted from the report?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; there were two. Do you want that?

Question. We have them already. Page 166, paragraph 18.

The CHAIRMAN. Paragraph 18, the first two paragraphs of subdivision 18.

Question. Was that by full committee approval?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; it was unanimous. Nobody objected to that. Senator TYDINGS did not object to it, and the rest of us did not object to it. It was through an intense desire not to cast any reflections on either one of the Senators, so there was no objection to that. This is a long report, and a fellow cannot remember everything that is in it, you know, offhand.

Yes, Mr. President, I am interpolating; it was a long report, and a fellow could not be expected to remember everything that was in it, offhand.

I return to the transcript:

Question. What do you think of the report, Senator?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I think it is filed, and I am going to send it to the Senate.

Question. Did you say "vile"?

The CHAIRMAN. I say it was received by the committee, and I am instructed to transmit it to the Senate.

I want to read that again.

The CHAIRMAN. I say it was received by the committee, and I am instructed to transmit it to the Senate.

Remember, this is the chairman speaking almost contemporaneously with the event itself.

I now continue with the conclusion of the distinguished Senator's press release, which is so characteristic of him that I only wish he were here to enjoy what I know we all would—his humor. He says:

When a fellow asks me a question like that it reminds me of a man making a political speech, a man from Tammany over on the East Side, and there were some roughnecks there, some tough ones, and he got up and asked if there were any questions.

Someone asked him some embarrassing questions, and his bunch of thugs just went in and grabbed this fellow, gave him a good stiff kick in the pants, and took him to the stairway and pitched him down, and he bumped and bumped and bumped and finally out on the sidewalk, and then the orator said, "Is there any other gentleman that wants to ask a question?"

Are there any other questions? [Laughter.]

(Whereupon, at 12:48 p. m., the press conference adjourned.)

So, Mr. President, this is the document containing the comments of the chairman of the committee as to what transpired. I shall not trespass much longer on the time of the Senate. This afternoon—it may have been even this morning; I am not sure—the Senator from New Jersey happened to see me somewhere in or about the precincts of the Senate and informed me that action was taken in respect to my letter or my request—I do not recall his exact language to me, at this time, but at any rate, that action had been taken. Subsequently I saw the Senator from Texas enter the Chamber, and he said to me, in substance, the same thing, that action had been taken, and that I would hear from the clerk of the committee, I believe he said, or someone from the committee. I have not yet heard. I should not be surprised if Dr. Wilcox is waiting around here to tell me what happened. But suffice it to say, Mr. President, that I have not yet received permission to examine the proceedings of July 18, 1950, with the right on my part to use the information which I shall secure and to bring them to the Senate.

Personally, Mr. President, I could well make the point that it may well be as a general rule advisable to require that proceedings of executive sessions shall be given out, and yet, I call to the attention of the Presiding Officer the fact that the concluding portion of this voluminous document entitled "Hearings Before a Subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations, United States Senate," beginning at page 1471 and running on through to the end of the volume, page 1484—I think I am correct in saying; yes, I am—is entitled "Executive Session." And so obviously the committee itself saw no objection to giving out, in that instance, what occurred in an executive session.

Mr. President, I am not asking that the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations establish a general rule that all of its executive sessions shall be made public. I can understand how that might restrict the freedom of comment that would be made by Members in the executive sessions; I can appreciate that. But, even if it be not always, or perhaps usually advisable to make public the contents of an executive session, I submit that in this matter, of such vital importance to the Senate, yes, far more, however, to the people of the United States—where, in order to interpret correctly the meaning of the motions that were made and carried, it may not only be advisable, but it may be necessary to know the contents of the transcript. If there are some remarks here or there which the committee deems improper to make public, if someone has made an unwise remark or a hasty remark or an intemperate remark, I am sure there is no Senator who would desire to breach the proprieties by using such excerpts. But what I want to find out, and what the Senate wants to know, at least what some of us want to know, and I hope the Senate wants to know, is whether this document which was filed here and sent to us as a report adopted by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, or was merely the transmittal of a report of a subcommittee, particularly when I find in the press conference of the distinguished senior Senator from Texas, the chairman of the committee occurring almost contemporaneously with the acts, the statement, in the questions and answers that the committee neither approved nor disapproved the report and that he had just received it. Then the chairman said:

That is all. We did not go into that, because we want to go home by Christmas.

Question. Did anybody propose that you accept the report or approve the report?

The CHAIRMAN. No, the motion was to receive the report and transmit it to the Senate. So I will have to do that.

Then the distinguished Senator says further on in the press conference:

I say it was received by the committee and I am instructed to transmit it to the Senate.

So, Mr. President, I say there is no evidence so far as I can see in that transcript, nor, indeed, do I see any tangible evidence of any real moment or consequence, or certainly any conclusive evidence, if it be real or consequential, to the effect that the committee intended to approve this report.

Here we have the members of the committee, in the testimony I have recited, indicating too clearly even to raise the question, that they were not approving this report. The Senator from New Jersey, making the statements which I have quoted, to the general effect that—

I distinctly understood that it was not a report of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I doubt that anyone except the chairman of the subcommittee had read the report. I do not know that anybody else ever had a chance to read it. There was no discussion of its merits (etc., etc.).

The statements by the Senator from Iowa, coupled with the statements of the Senator from Texas when he gives out in his press conference his understanding, indicate certainly, to put it negatively, that there is substantial doubt as to whether this was ever adopted by the committee. And I am going to put it more affirmatively: I say there is no conclusive—yes, but little, if any, persuasive—evidence to the effect that it was adopted by the committee.

It seems to me that what happened was, just as the Senator from Texas in his press conference indicates, that the document was received by the committee, and he was instructed to transmit it to the Senate. That, to my mind, does not constitute the adoption, the thoughtful, the careful deliberation that should always characterize the adoption of a report by a great committee such as the Committee on Foreign Relations, dealing with a subject of such vital moment as this subject which was committed to it and, through it, to its subcommittee. Certainly the Committee on Foreign Relations could not be expected to come together, and, without reading the report, with only a short consideration of it, without proper deliberation, adopt it.

Mr. President, I now come to the end, in these concluding sentences, to the question which I asked, which was, Is it proper that Report No. 2108, Eighty-first Congress, second session, be circulated with its cover page containing the words "Report of the Committee on Foreign Relations"?

The distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] has submitted a resolution setting forth that it does not appear that the Foreign Relations Committee has adopted the report. The resolution recites, in one of its whereases:

A false impression of the status of this report will be spread abroad by the cover which has been substituted since it has been received by this body.

He takes the view, to quote his resolution—that said report should be at once withdrawn from distribution until the cover be replaced—

Namely, the cover which recited that the report was the report of the subcommittee.

Mr. President, I say this, in answer to the question which I propounded and about which I have endeavored to address myself this afternoon, that until all doubt that the report is the report of the full committee shall have been removed, the report should not be circulated as the report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. I most earnestly submit that the doubt to which I refer cannot be removed until the transcript of the proceedings of the committee on July 18, 1950, shall have been made available to the Senate free of restriction.

Mr. DONNELL subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of my remarks on the report on Senate Report 2108, made today, there be set forth a letter received subsequently by me today from Dr. Francis O. Wilcox.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
July 25, 1950.

Hon. FORREST C. DONNELL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR DONNELL: The Senate Foreign Relations Committee met this morning, and among other things, considered your request of July 22 relating to the transcript of the executive proceedings of the committee for July 18. Your letter of July 22 and my reply of the same date were read into the record. The committee approved the following motion without a dissenting vote.

"That Senator DONNELL be permitted to read the transcript of the executive session of the committee held July 18, 1950, on the same confidential basis as all members of the committee."

It is my understanding that the chairman of the committee and Senator SMITH of New Jersey have already spoken to you about the action taken by the committee. If you wish to examine the records of the committee for July 18, or the proceedings relating to other executive sessions, please do not hesitate to let me know. We on the committee staff are anxious to do what we can to help the Members of the Senate in their consideration of problems in the field of foreign affairs.

Sincerely yours,

FRANCIS O. WILCOX.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Snader, its assistant reading clerk, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 1049. An act for the relief of Amy Alexandrovna Taylor and Myrna Taylor;

S. 1792. An act for the relief of Thomas Nicholas Epiphaniades and Wanda Julia Epiphaniades;

S. 2243. An act for the relief of Tevfik Kamil Kutay;

S. 2864. An act to authorize certain administrative expenses for the Department of Justice, and for other purposes; and

S. 3937. An act to authorize the President to extend enlistments in the Armed Forces of the United States.

PROPOSED UNANIMOUS CONSENT AGREEMENT RELATING TO APPROPRIATION BILL

During the delivery of Mr. DONNELL'S speech,

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that after the conclusion of the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Missouri and the remarks of the distinguished junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], the Senate proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bill for a period of 2 hours, the debate to be limited to 10 minutes for each Senator, and that debate must be germane.

Mr. WHERRY. Reserving the right to object, I did not hear the unanimous-consent request, Mr. President, and I should like very much to know what it is.

Mr. McFARLAND. It is that after the conclusion of the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Missouri and the remarks of the distinguished junior Senator from Michigan, the Senate proceed to the consideration of the pending measure, the appropriation bill, for a period of 2 hours, and that the debate be limited to 10 minutes for each Senator, and that it must be germane.

Mr. WHERRY. Reserving the right to object, I was endeavoring to work out a unanimous-consent agreement with the acting majority leader, but I did not know that the Senate would continue for 2 hours. Does that mean that we shall wait until approximately 6 o'clock before the Senators have concluded their remarks?

Mr. McFARLAND. Let us get in at least 2 hours on the appropriation bill. I think we can take a recess a little after 6:30 o'clock. I do not know how long the Senator from Michigan will speak. I beg of the Senator from Nebraska not to object to spending 2 hours on the appropriation bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Would the Senator from Missouri permit me to ask him how long his speech will take?

Mr. DONNELL. Yes; I am perfectly willing that the Senator may do so. I should like to say that yesterday I thought 30 minutes would be sufficient, but it will not be sufficient. I shall take in the neighborhood of 25 minutes more. My judgment is that I shall require 25 or 30 minutes, but I do not promise to limit my remarks to a specific length of time.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection to working out an agreement with the able acting majority leader. I should like to ask him if he will modify his request to give consideration to the appropriation bill from the time the Senator from Michigan concludes until 7 o'clock. That would give Senators a chance to either get their dinners at home or in the restaurant downstairs.

Mr. McFARLAND. Very well. I will modify my request accordingly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, some Senators who are interested in this subject have asked that a quorum call be had before we enter into any such agreement.

Mr. McFARLAND. I hope the Senator will not suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I did not yield for a quorum call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Arizona, as modified?

Mr. MURRAY. I do not wish to object, but I should like to understand whether the agreement is limited to the time remaining today. As I understand it, it does not refer to any time tomorrow, for example.

Mr. McFARLAND. It is limited to 2 hours, and not to go beyond 7 o'clock today.

Mr. MURRAY. It does not apply to future consideration of the bill.

Mr. McFARLAND. Oh, no.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If we have a quorum call first, I have no objection. Otherwise, I must object.

Mr. DONNELL. I did not yield for a quorum call. I do not yield, Mr. President.

Mr. McFARLAND. I hope the Senator from Delaware will not insist on a quorum call. Previously only one Senator had objected to an agreement, and he has since then withdrawn his objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the right to object, I promised several Senators that I would have a quorum call.

Mr. McFARLAND. Will the Senator kindly consult them first?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I cannot do that at this time.

Mr. McFARLAND. I shall renew my request later. Will the Senator consult them and inform me later?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. McFARLAND subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] be permitted to complete the brief remarks he wishes to make, which I understand will take about 2 minutes, and that then the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes.

May I ask the Senator from Nevada if that is a sufficient time?

Mr. MALONE. Reserving the right to object, I said "about 10 minutes." I would not want to be held down to a half-minute more than that. Let us make it whatever time it takes—approximately 10 minutes.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I should like to complete my unanimous-consent request. I ask that thereafter the Senate proceed to the consideration of the appropriation bill for a period of 2 hours, and that debate on the amendments thereto be limited to 10 minutes to each Senator, and that all remarks must be germane to the amendments.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I am not going to object to the agreement, but I object to the request in the absence of a quorum, because I think other Members of the Senate are entitled to have a quorum present. My agreement to the request will be dependent upon what I think is a very good rule or custom of the Senate, namely, to first have a quorum present.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I am willing to suggest the absence of a quorum, if the Senator will permit the unanimous-consent request to go through. Then we shall have more Senators present when the appropriation bill is being considered.

Mr. MORSE. The difficulty with that, Mr. President, is that my suggestion of the absence of a quorum is to assure Senators of an opportunity to be heard if they want to object to the unanimous-consent request.

I think there should be a quorum call in advance of any such agreement. I would expect that if I were off the floor. I have had discussions in the past with the minority leader regarding the same point. I think the same courtesy should be extended to other Senators. Therefore I object to the request, unless there is a quorum call. Then I shall have no objection to it.

ALERTING THE NATION TO INTERNAL THREATS FROM THE COMMUNIST MOVEMENT

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, last night the President issued a statement calling upon all law-enforcement officers, patriotic organizations, and private citizens to report all information relating to espionage, sabotage, and subversive activities to the nearest office of the FBI.

With American forces fighting a war-like operation against Communists in Korea, and in view of the fact that communism is an international conspiracy using espionage, sabotage, and subversion as weapons of war, there certainly is a "clear and present danger" to the country which demands the utmost vigilance. I believe the President is justified in alerting the Nation to these internal threats from the Communist movement.

Mr. President, in order that the Senate may not be further delayed, I ask unanimous consent that a portion of the statement I have prepared be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, so ordered.

The statement by Mr. FERGUSON follows:

With the President calling upon every citizen to report information to the FBI, there is a strong possibility that an impossible workload may be saddled on that agency to investigate rumors, spite tip-offs, and similarly motivated information passed on to the authorities by citizens untrained in recognizing true subversion.

Nevertheless, in the face of clear and present danger in which the country now finds itself I do not condemn the alerting of our people—even in the extreme fashion suggested by the President.

But what I want to know is why the President and his administration do not themselves apply proper methods for reaching subversive activities before going to less effective extremes? Even while the President was making his announcement, Communist subversives were and still are at work in their familiar attempts to use a front device to undermine the morale of unsuspecting Americans who ought to be firm in our resolve to support the sacrifices we are making in Korea. I speak of the peace-mobilization petitions which the worker bees of the Communist conspiracy are circulating throughout this country. We know these petitions originated with the peace partisans sponsored in Moscow. We know these petitions at a time like this are instruments of psychological warfare in the Communist conspiracy to dominate the world. They are intended to soften up our home population, to create divisions among our people, and to implant the idea in their minds that while Russia seeks peace, America looks to war. This is a gross distortion of the truth, and most informed people know it; but nevertheless thousands of people are signing these petitions because they are misled by this Communist phony peace front.

This is a perfect example of how the President and this administration remain blind to the true nature of subversive activities and how to reach the heart of it. Even while the Executive is looking for reports of intended sabotage from untrained private citizens, this phony peace mobilization is eating at the basic morale of the country and nothing the administration is doing has stopped that form of subversion. It still allows innocent people to be taken in by these fronts.

Yet it turns a deaf ear to a proper and legal way to go to the root of Communist subversion in this country. We have tried again and again in Congress to get the administration to consider Senate bill 2311 which is the Mundt-Ferguson bill to protect the United States against un-American and subversive activities. Yet the administration leaders in Congress, as well as the executive department, resist the passage of this needed legislation with the same fierce determination they have shown in every exposure of subversion.

The Justice Department explains that Communist subversives will be difficult to expose because they are citizens of the country rather than aliens who can be easily rounded up. Existing laws are inadequate to deal with an insidious movement such as Communist subversion. Federal law enforcement officers have testified to that effect time and again. The fact that we have had to get at espionage and subversion by the back-handed methods of "perjury" as in the Hiss, Coplon, Marzani, and Remington cases, is ample proof that we do not have laws adequate to protect us directly from subversive operations.

The main difficulty all the way through is that we have no workable standards of determining what subversive activity is and we have no workable means of identifying subversives and the false fronts by which they deceive our people. The correction of these defects in our laws is the heart of the Mundt-Ferguson-Johnston bill to protect our people. The bill is aimed to bring professional instigators of espionage, sabotage, and subversion out into the open and to make it impossible for them to recruit innocent people and to gain financial resources to carry on their destructive propaganda.

Mr. President, this is not the time to explain the detailed provisions of this bill. But the President's statement last night alerting the country against subversives and saboteurs shows that it is high time that the administration give immediate attention to proper ways to get at this menace to our people and our institutions. Recent history has always been a step ahead of this administration. We were surprised at Pearl Harbor. Our position in the Far East was foreclosed by Communist China. We were taken off guard at Berlin. Now it is Korea. When does this administration propose to wake up and anticipate developments? Must we always be the victims of hostile actions before we prepare ourselves? Today, guerrilla forces are making many of our positions in Korea intolerable and causing untold loss of lives to American boys sent to that area. Yesterday, those guerrilla forces were Communist subversives in South Korea undermining the country in preparation for the hot war. Are we to wait here at home until our people are divided and our morale broken before we adopt proper and adequate methods to deal with this new form of war behind the lines?

Mr. FERGUSON. I hope the people's answer to the President's alert will be: "Yes, Mr. President, we shall report all information we have of subversive activities, but meanwhile let us have some protection in law to identify the menace we are looking for and to bring it out in the open." This is what the Mundt-Ferguson-Johnston bill (S. 2311) does and it should be immediately considered and passed at this time of clear and present danger.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I think it is quite apropos of what the Senator has been saying to read a telegram which I have just now received. It is signed by Harry Lundeberg, secretary-treasurer of the Sailors Union of the Pacific, and president of the Seafarers International Union of North America. It is addressed to me and is dated July 25. It reads as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF., July 25, 1950.

Senator WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Our country is in an all-out fight to stop the Communist aggressors in Korea and elsewhere in the world. Our Government has called on all Americans to stand by and aid their country in this crisis. American boys are being killed daily in Korea fighting for the principles of our great country. On the home front the tools of Joe Stalin are doing business as usual, because of the wishy-washy attitude of various Government bureaus. Commies and fellow travelers are still being allowed to sail freely. Some of these weak-kneed shipowners and union and Government bureaus do not seem to have the guts to eliminate these Commie saboteurs from the American ships and waterfront. Within the past 10 days one of the American President Lines ships, which by the way is Government-owned, carrying troops and vital war material for the fighting front in the Orient left San Francisco with 7 men abroad who had been declared bad security risks by the United States Navy Intelligence. No effort was made to take these crumbs off the ship. What we would like to know is how long is the United States Government going to allow this condition to exist? The members of our organization in a meeting last night in San Francisco with over a thousand men assembled went unanimously on record to notify the proper authorities in Washington, D. C., that if these Commie saboteurs are not eliminated from American ships and waterfronts that we will be forced to refuse to sail the ships in order to protect ourselves. It is up to the United States Government. Do they want loyal American seamen on their ships or do they want Joe Stalin's American stooges? We request your cooperation in exposing and correcting this dangerous condition.

HARRY LUNDEBERG,
Secretary-Treasurer, Sailors Union of the Pacific; President, Seafarers International Union of North America.

Mr. FERGUSON. I appreciate the Senator's reading the telegram into the RECORD, because it is most timely and it tells the public very forcibly what is going on. There is a remedy. The question is asked, "How long shall we wait?" We would not be waiting until now if action had been taken on S. 2311.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FERGUSON. I shall yield, but I am trying to limit my remarks at this point so that we may proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. McCARTHY. The Senator has been a judge, and a very able one, and his thoughts on this subject should be put into the RECORD. In the light of the President's request that people notify the Bureau of any evidence that they may have of subversives, I should like to ask a question. In view of the reasoning being followed by the loyalty board and by the Tydings-McMahon committee, that regardless of how much positive evidence is presented that a man is a member of the Communist Party or an espionage agent, if one does not see him light the fuse, and if witnesses can be found to testify, "We did not see him light the fuse, and we do not know if he is a member of the party," does the Senator think it will do any good merely to give the information to the FBI, unless we have a complete about face by the loyalty board or get a new board composed of people who know something about law.

Mr. FERGUSON. I can answer the Senator's question in this way. The courts for years have considered that positive evidence is stronger than negative evidence. Therefore the loyalty board as a court should consider positive evidence to be stronger than negative evidence.

Mr. McCARTHY. If I may ask another question: Does he agree with me that it would be impossible to ever get rid of any Communist or espionage agent if he is to be cleared merely by making a search and finding people who are willing to say, "I do not know that he is a Communist"?

Mr. FERGUSON. That is what I had in mind when I referred to negative evidence. It is the credibility of the witnesses and the knowledge that they have of the particular subject. I yield the floor.

EIGHT BILLION DOLLARS WITHOUT RAISING TAXES

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Nevada is pointing out today a way to find an additional four billion dollars for the military fund. This is in addition to the four billion dollars pointed out yesterday. This makes eight billion dollars, which is a good start on our expanded military program and which is available without raising the tax rates.

MILITARY FUNDS FROM CONGRESS—NO PROBLEM—$90,000,000,000 SINCE WORLD WAR II

Mr. President, the appropriation of funds necessary for national defense has never been a problem in the Congress, as witnessed by the approximately $90,000,000,000 which have been appropriated for military purposes since the close of World War II.

TAXPAYER LEAST REGARDED

The junior Senator from Nevada is shocked by the lack of interest in Washington in the plight of the American taxpayer. Members of this body talk glibly of passing taxes onto the already overburdened American workers, the great majority of whom are struggling to buy the necessities of life after paying already high taxes.

Washington does not seem to know this. Perhaps it is a secret from Washington residents.

We are asked for approximately $10,500,000,000 for an expanded military program because we are at war.

WAR MONEY WILL BE RAISED

Of course this money must be made available and it will be made available. To the certain knowledge of the junior Senator from Nevada an appropriation asked for by the President for military purposes has never been turned down by the Congress of the United States since the junior Senator from Nevada has been a Member of the Senate.

START DOMESTIC ECONOMY

Has the administration suggested tightening its own belt? Has the administration offered to curtail any of its peacetime expenditures in order to make up any of the $10,500,000,000? Spend, spend, spend, save nothing, boost the withholding taxes, give no thought to the American taxpayer seems to be the only program understood in Washington.

INDIRECT TAXES—HITS EVERYBODY

Mr. President, every citizen is a substantial taxpayer, directly or indirectly, whether he realizes it or not. That is evidenced by the more than 50 indirect taxes on a loaf of bread. A 17-cent loaf of bread should cost not more than 7 cents if it were not for the indirect taxes.

CORPORATIONS INDIRECT TAX-COLLECTING AGENCIES

Mr. President, for many years the Congress of the United States had used the corporations as tax-collection agencies. The corporations have simply transferred such taxes to their product, the sale of which makes up the taxes to go into the United States Treasury. The people who buy the product, whether it be bread, a suit of clothes, a woman's hat, or any other product, pay the taxes. For a long time the folks were fooled. I doubt that they are fooled now.

Are the Members of this body interested in saving any money for the taxpayers in their respective States? If so, the junior Senator from Nevada has some suggestions to make. These suggestions are intended only for those who want taxes to be no higher than necessary and who abhor wasting other people's money.

FOUR BILLION DOLLARS ECA AND UNIFICATION—20 PERCENT REDUCTION IN DOMESTIC BUDGET

The $4,000,000,000 mentioned yesterday can be found by stopping ECA, a peacetime endeavor, and by unifying our military assistance program with our own military program. What was said in yesterday's debate is not going to be repeated. We shall go on to the additional $4,000,000,000.

Three billion dollars has been made available for the peacetime expansion of industry in the 16 European countries, which is already overexpanded for peacetime production. Consequently, it was found that these countries must sell their peacetime products in our country and thus displace our own workmen. The $3,000,000,000 could be transferred immediately. The appropriation has been made. What is the reason, then, that it must be expended in wartime on an already overexpanded peacetime industry? The $3,000,000,000 additional should be made available immediately for national defense.

First I should like to read into the RECORD a brief excerpt from an editorial which appeared in this morning's Washington Times-Herald. It referred to the appropriation of approximately $3,000,000,000 to build up the European countries' civilian peacetime economy and went on to say:

Considering the lack of response from these countries when the United Nations asked for troops to help our foot soldiers in Korea, it would be a good thing if we stopped some of our dollars from going abroad next year.

There is no valid reason for putting the people in this country on a wartime basis and still keep gouging them to build up peacetime economy in Europe. We will do enough along this line when we begin spending the ten billions for military purposes. We will increase our imports of tin, rubber, and so forth, and they will get the profits. And beyond that we may expect the administration to siphon off some of the goods as well to increase European munitions production.

Therefore, we urge that the civilian foreign aid be cut to a liquidation figure.

Mr. President, in the new appropriation bill there is an item of $500,000,000 for peacetime public works. In wartime such works are unnecessary, and, in fact, undesirable. Our money and our man-hours should be devoted to the war effort. This $500,000,000 should be transferred to the military program, except, of course, a relatively minor amount retained for emergency works.

The new budget is approximately $42,000,000,000; $13,500,000,000 is for the military; $6,000,000,000 for veteran services and benefits; $5,500,000,000 for interest on the public debt; and $17,000,000,000 for the civil government, exclusive of the items mentioned.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a table showing the exact figures.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Budget, July 1, 1950, to June 30, 1951

Requested for—
National defense	$13,545,000,000
Veterans' services and benefits	6,080,000,000
Interest on public debt	5,625,000,000
Remaining	17,189,000,000
Total	42,439,000,000

Mr. MALONE. Now, Mr. President, I wish to quote from the same editorial, as follows:

Last December, Senator BYRD made a proposal to save $5,200,000,000 by cutting back Government domestic expenditures to the 1948 level.

BYRD's plan excluded any reductions in defense or any lessening of stockpiling atomic energy, veterans' aid, foreign aid, or interest on the public debt.

The Virginia Senator picked 1948 as a base because it was the soundest postwar year. The budget was balanced in 1948, Government expenditures were trimmed, and taxes were cut.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT DOMESTIC PROGRAM

In 1948, the Federal Government spent the $6,400,000,000 on its domestic program. When the distinguished Senator from Virginia recommended his plan, the country was not proceeding into a wartime economy as it is now, it was looking forward to another year in which the Government would be geared to peacetime operations. Now, with the abrupt change to wartime operations, it might be considered logical to make even deeper domestic cuts than those suggested by the distinguished Senator from Virginia. However, in order to raise the necessary funds, we need not go even as far as then suggested. The junior Senator from Nevada proposes that we save 20 percent of the seventeen billion for civil government. That would be approximately three and a half billions saved.

EIGHT BILLION DOLLARS OUT OF THE TEN BILLION DOLLARS REQUESTED AVAILABLE

Add this three and one-half billion to the half billion saved from peacetime public works and the four billions mentioned yesterday, which we can save by stopping ECA, and by unifying our military programs, and we have eight billions for the new military program.

Under this plan, Mr. President, we need not load down our taxpayers with additional burdens.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point the complete editorial which appeared in the Times-Herald of this morning.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

How To Save $10,000,000,000

Here is a way for Congress to find that $10,000,000,000 Mr. Truman is asking as a down payment on the cost the Nation is called on to pay for the administration's bonehead operations in Korea and elsewhere.

This plan does not call for added taxes. It calls for less costly civil government, and it is not dream stuff. Senator HARRY FLOOD BYRD, Democrat, of Virginia, is the draftsman of its principles.

Senator BYRD is known from one end of the country to the other as a practical authority on government. If he says a thing can be done, it can be done.

Therefore, we offer this program for consideration in full confidence that any citizen can support it who sincerely wants the United States pulled safely through the misadventures of the Truman gang without the destruction of our domestic life.

Last December, Senator BYRD made a proposal to save $5,200,000,000 by cutting back Government domestic expenditures to the 1948 level.

BYRD's plan excluded any reductions in defense or any lessening of stockpiling atomic energy, veterans' aid, foreign aid, or interest on the public debt.

The Virginia Senator picked 1948 as a base because it was the soundest postwar year. The budget was balanced in 1948, Government expenditures were trimmed, and taxes were cut.

EIGHTIETH CONGRESS ECONOMICAL

It's also worthy of note that the Republican Eightieth Congress was in power that year and received as its reward for work well done a scathing attack from Truman, who called it the "worst Congress" in our history.

In 1948 the Federal Government spent $6,400,000,000 on its domestic programs. In the 1951 budget Truman has asked Congress to give him $11,600,000,000 for the same programs, therefore a return to the 1948 budget would result in the $5,200,000,000 savings.

However, when Senator BYRD recommended this plan the country was not proceeding into a wartime economy as it is now. It was looking forward to another year in which the Government would be geared to peacetime operations. Now with the abrupt change to wartime operations it is only logical that we follow up Senator BYRD's basic program with even further cuts from the 1948 budget he proposed.

For example, there were $200,000,000 in that 1948 budget for work relief. Certainly our increased production demands will wipe out need for any such expenditures. In that budget there were also $100,000,000 for housing. The President in his message recommended knocking out all housing money. There were also in that 1948 budget, $500,000,000 for peacetime public works. In wartime such are unnecessary and undesirable.

That budget also carried $30,000,000 for agriculture support. That can't be justified. Another item on which the saving can be made is the $300,000,000 postal deficit which should be wiped out immediately, regardless of whether we are to operate a peacetime or wartime economy. The Hoover reorganization report gives a full blueprint on how to accomplish this.

If these cuts were made it would bring the savings to $6,300,000,000.

FOREIGN AID CAN BE CUT

Although BYRD did not recommend slashing the veterans' program for his peacetime budget it appears that there is sufficient room in the six billions asked by Truman in the 1951 budget to save at least 25 percent or $700,000,000. In that 1951 request, for example, there are $2,700,000,000 for the veterans' readjustment program. Certainly there will be a considerable cut in such activities as we build up the armed services.

Thus, the domestic cuts would save seven billion.

And we think that since America must tighten its belt again it would be a good time to look at the foreign-aid program for immediate relief. Since the war we have set up approximately 23 foreign-aid programs into which we have poured $35,000,000,000.

The 1950 budget carries three and seven-tenths billions to build up Europe's civilian economy over and above the military aid we are giving.

Considering the lack of response from these countries when the United Nations asked for troops to help our foot soldiers in Korea, it would be a good thing if we stopped some of our dollars from going abroad next year.

There is no valid reason for putting the people in this country on a wartime basis and still keep gouging them to build up peacetime economy in Europe. We will do enough along this line when we begin spending the ten billions for military purposes. We will increase our imports of tin, rubber, etc., and they will get the profits. And beyond that we may expect the administration to siphon off some of the goods as well to increase European munitions production.

Therefore, we urge that the civilian foreign aid be cut to a liquidation figure of $700,000,000. The three billion cut on this item will then bring the total saving to ten billions. This bill produces a complete setoff to the ten billions to be spent.

To us it seems that economy is a much sounder method of meeting the increased military costs than burdening the American people with more taxes and more Government controls.

TIME TO TAKE STOCK

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, it is time for the Congress of the United States to take stock. It is time to gather the loose ends of this Government together, furnish the requested national defense fund of ten and one-half billion, but use the available funds before raising taxes.

All will agree that the Congress has been liberal with appropriations for national defense, the appropriations having amounted to $89,124,000,000 since the close of World War II.

The junior Senator from Nevada has suggested the source of eight billion, available to be applied on the ten and one-half billion needed at this time, according to the President's request. Additional funds are available from other sources.

The junior Senator from Nevada will have more to say about this subject later.

THE WAR IN KOREA—OBLIGATION OF ALL MEMBERS OF UNITED NATIONS TO FURNISH TROOPS

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, my remarks this afternoon will be very brief.

The United Nations are in a war to win. We will win. In fact, we will win even if the United States has to do the job with its own ground troops alone. Of that, there can be no doubt.

Republicans are giving this administration full support in the Korean crisis. However, the time has come for this country to be realistic.

The United States has not unlimited manpower. We are willing to furnish more than our share of arms and munitions of war in this fight to halt communism. We are willing to furnish our share of men, but I am convinced that this administration has not done all it can to secure the cooperation of the other United Nations in furnishing their share of manpower.

England, Australia, France, the Philippines, and other countries have large numbers of able-bodied young men who should be trained right now to take their places alongside our valiant soldiers on the Korean front. It is not just or prudent for this Nation to bear the whole brunt of the Communist onslaught. I urge the administration to call immediately an emergency meeting of the Security Council to discuss means of training their young men forthwith to do their share of the fighting in Korea, and thus make more modest inroads in our supply of reservists and the use of Americans.

Trygve Lie's appeal to the United Nations for support should be followed by vigorous action on the part of the administration to translate the general desires and pious hopes into concrete results in the way of infantry troops and antitank battalions of all nations.

Let us make this in fact the fight of all the free world in the United Nations against communism.

GENERAL APPROPRIATION, 1951

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7786) making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Atomic Energy Commission," on page 287, line 1, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided further, That no part of the foregoing appropriation or contract authorization shall be used in connection with the payment of any contractor or firm of contractors engaged under a cost plus a fixed fee contract or contracts at any installation of the Commission, where the fee for community management is at a rate in excess of $90,000 per annum, or for the operation of a transportation system where the fee is at a rate in excess of $45,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Civil Service Commission," on page 287, line 21, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$80,000," and on page 288, line 4, after the word "amended", to strike out "$15,261,913" and insert "$15,761.913."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Commission on Renovation of the Executive Mansion," on page 291, line 5, after the word "Congress", to strike out "$20,000" and insert $50,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Displaced Persons Commission," on page 291, after line 109, to strike out:

Displaced Persons Commission: For expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of the Displaced Persons Act of 1948 (Public Law 774, approved June 25, 1948), including personal services and rents in the District of Columbia; travel expenses, including travel expenses outside continental United States without regard to the Standardized Government Travel Regulations, as amended, and the rates of per diem allowances under the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926, as amended; hire of passenger motor vehicles; printing and binding, including printing and binding outside the continental limits of the United States without regard to section 11 of the act of March 1, 1919 (44 U. S. C. 111); services as authorized by section 15 of the act of August 2, 1946 (5 U. S. C. 55a); payment of tort claims pursuant to law (28 U. S. C. 2672); health service program as authorized by law (5 U. S. C. 150); employment of aliens; and payment of rent in foreign countries in advance; $455,100: Provided, That allocations may be made from this appropriation by the Commission upon approval by the Bureau of the Budget to any department, agency, corporation, or independent establishment of the Government for direct expenditure for the purposes of this appropriation, and any such expenditures may be made under the specific authority herein contained or under the authority governing the activities of the department, agency, corporation, or independent establishment to which amounts are allocated: Provided further, That the Commission may enter into agreements with governmental and private agencies and may make payment in advance or by reimbursement for expenses incurred by such agencies in rendering assistance to the Commission in carrying out the purposes of this act.

And in lieu thereof, to insert the following:

Displaced Persons Commission: For expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of the Displaced Persons Act of 1948, as amended by the act of June 16, 1950 (Public Law 555), including personal services and rents in the District of Columbia; travel expenses without regard to the Standardized Government Travel Regulations, as amended, and the rates of per diem allowances under the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926, as amended; purchase (not to exceed three), and hire of passenger motor vehicles; printing and binding, including printing and binding outside the continental limits of the United States without regard to section 11 of the act of March 1, 1919 (44 U. S. C. 111); expenses incident to the primary and secondary education of American children who are dependents of Government personnel paid from this appropriation and stationed overseas; services as authorized by section 15 of the act of August 2, 1946 (5 U. S. C. 55a); payment of tort claims pursuant to law (28 U. S. C. 2672); health service program as authorized by law (5 U. S. C. 150); employment of aliens; and payment of rent in foreign countries in advance; $9,000,000: Provided, That allocations may be made from this appropriation by the Commission upon approval by the Bureau of the Budget to any department, agency, corporation, or independent establishment of the Government for direct expenditure for the purposes of this appropriation, and any such expenditures may be made under the specific authority herein contained or under the authority governing the activities of the department, agency, corporation, or independent establishment to which amounts are allocated: Provided further, That the Commission may enter into agreements with international, governmental, and private agencies and may make payment in advance or by reimbursement for expenses incurred by such agencies in rendering assistance to the Commission in carrying out the purposes of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Federal Power Commission," on page 295, line 11, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$247,500" and insert "$256,500", and in line 16, after the word "newspapers", to strike out "$3,938,300" and insert "$4,013,300."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Federal Trade Commission," on page 296, line 10, after the word "newspapers", to strike out $3,866,695" and insert "$3,916,695", and in line 11, after the word "available", to strike out "to the Bureau of Trade Practice Conferences."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "General Accounting Office," on page 296, line 21, after the word "elsewhere", to strike out "$34,500,000" and insert "$32,689,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 297, line 3, after "(28 U. S. C. 2672)", to insert "for newspapers and periodicals (not exceeding $600)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "General Services Administration," on page 297, line 15, after the word "Columbia", to strike out "$28,000,000" and insert "$22,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 300, line 17, after the word "binding", to strike out "$633,608,240" and insert "$605,000,000"; in line 19, after the word "expended", to strike out "of which not to exceed $25,000,000 may be expended in accordance with the purposes of said act of July 23, 1946, through purchase contracts negotiated with operators within the United States, its Territories and possessions, and in making advance payments on such contracts to the extent determined to be necessary to the performance thereof, and"; and on page 301, line 5, after the word "of", to strike out "$100,000,000" and insert "$125,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 302, line 24, after the word "vehicles", to insert a semicolon and "and in addition, the General Services Administration is authorized to enter into contracts in an amount not to exceed $4,000,000 for the purposes of this appropriation"; and on page 303, line 3, after the amendment just above stated, to strike out the colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for expenditure on any project until a certificate has been received from the Secretary of Defense that the installation of such facility will be of value in connection with national defense.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 303, line 12, after the word "expended", to strike out "$28,000,000" and insert "$20,000,000", and in line 19, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$32,000,000" and insert "$27,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 304, line 2, after "(62 Stat. 1155)", to strike out "$900,000" and insert "$750,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 304, line 12, after the word "books", to strike out "$60,000" and insert "$52,285."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 304, line 15, after "(58 Stat. 827)", to strike out "$1,300,000" and insert "$1,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 307, line 12, after the word "War", to strike out "$76,500,000" and insert "$82,725,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 309, after line 6, to strike out:

During the current fiscal year, no part of any money appropriated in this or any other act shall be used during any quarter of such fiscal year to purchase typewriting machines (except bookkeeping and billing machines) at a price which exceeds 90 percent of the lowest net cash price, plus applicable Federal excise taxes, accorded the most-favored customer (other than the Government, the American National Red Cross, and the purchasers of typewriting machines for educational purposes only) of the manufacturer of such machines during the 6-month period immediately preceding such quarter.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 309, after line 17, to strike out:

No part of any money appropriated by this or any other act for any agency of the executive branch of the Government (which shall include all departments, independent establishments, and wholly owned Government corporations) shall be used during the current fiscal year for the purchase within the continental limits of the United States of any typewriting machines (except typewriting machines for veterans under public laws administered by the Veterans' Administration) unless the Administrator of General Services certifies that he is unable to furnish such agency with suitable typewriting machines out of stock on hand. The Administrator of General Services is authorized and directed at such times as he may determine to be necessary to survey and determine the numbers and kinds of typewriting machines located in the continental limits of the United States which are at any time surplus to the requirements of any agency in the executive branch of the Government (which shall include all departments, independent establishments, and wholly owned Government corporations). Upon such determination the Administrator of General Services is authorized to direct, upon such notice and in such manner as he may prescribe, the head of any such agency to surrender to the General Services Administration any and all typewriting machines surplus to its requirements, the costs of packing, shipping, and handling thereof to be charged to the general supply fund. Each such agency shall furnish the Administrator of General Services such information regarding typewriting machines, wherever located, as he may from time to time request. The General Services Administration is authorized and directed to receive, hold, sell, exchange, or supply to any branch of the Government, including the District of Columbia, typewriting machines surrendered to it hereunder. The Administrator of General Services is authorized to charge each agency to which typewriting machines are supplied hereunder amounts equal to the fair value thereof, as determined by him, and such amounts shall be credited to the general supply fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Housing and Home Finance Agency—Office of the Administrator," on page 311, line 22, after the numerals "1949", to strike out "$4,200,000" and insert "$4,900,000"; and on page 312, line 3, after the word "amended", to insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That necessary expenses of inspections of projects financed through loans to educational institutions authorized by title IV of the Housing Act of 1950 shall be compensated by such institutions by the payment of fixed fees which in the aggregate in relation to the development costs of such projects will cover the costs of rendering such services, and expenses for such purpose shall be considered nonadministrative, and for the purpose of providing such inspections, the Administrator may utilize any agency and such agency may accept reimbursement or payment for such services from such institutions or the Administrator, and shall credit such amounts to the appropriations or funds against which such charges have been made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public Housing Administration," on page 312, line 20, after "(42 U. S. C. 1410)", to strike out "$7,500,000" and insert "$9,250,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 313, line 15, after the word "Administration", to strike out "$8,750,000" and insert "$11,500,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Interstate Commerce Commission," on page 314, line 13, after the word "binding", to strike out "$9,889,600" and insert "$10,002,600."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 315, line 10, after "(28 U. S. C. 2672)", to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$1,016,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 315, line 19, after "(28 U. S. C. 2672)", to strike out "$700,000" and insert "$718,600."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Motor Carrier Claims Commission—Salaries and expenses," on page 316, line 12, after "(5 U. S. C. 55a)", to strike out "$175,000" and insert "$227,800."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics," on page 317, line 4, after the word "all", to strike out "$40,890,630" and insert "$44,225,630", and in line 11, after the word "reimbursement", to strike out the colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the operation of a field office outside the continental or territorial limits of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 317, line 24, after the word "of", to strike out "$10,000,000" and insert "$12,500,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "National Capital Housing Authority," on page 318, line 5, after the word "Act", to strike out "$35,000" and insert "$39,600", and in line 7, after the word "monthly", to insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That so long as funds are available from appropriations for the foregoing purposes, the provisions of section 507 of the Housing Act of 1950 (Public Law 475, 81st Cong.) shall not be effective.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Philippine War Damage Commission," on page 320, line 18, after the word "Philippines", to insert "or, in the absence of such finding by such court, the Commission after hearing finds upon evidence that such person was guilty of such collaboration or act of disloyalty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Securities and Exchange Commission," on page 321, line 11, after "(5 U. S. C. 55a)", to strike out "$6,130,000" and insert "$6,330,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Smithsonian Institution," on page 322, line 20, after the word "publications", to strike out "$2,606,490" and insert "$2,770,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 322, after line 20, to insert:

Paleontological investigations: For payments to non-Federal agencies for cooperative paleontological investigations in accordance with the act of August 15, 1949 (Pub. Law 228), to remain available until expended, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 323, line 25, after the word "proper", to strike out "$1,153,000" and insert "$1,200,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I should like to go back for a moment to page 282 under the heading "Independent Offices," the item "American Battle Monuments Commission." I am satisfied that I know the answer to the question which I want to put to the chairman of the subcommittee, but I should like to make it a matter of record at the present time. My question is this: Is there anything in the section starting on page 282 dealing with the American Battle Monuments Commission that would in any way limit any agency of Government which has jurisdiction over existing battle monuments and battlefields to continue to maintain the battlefield at Balls Bluff, near Leesburg, Va.?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the operations under this appropriation are primarily those which are carried on as the result of World War No. 2. The cemetery to which the Senator refers is, I think, the subject of a bill which was introduced by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the chairman of the Armed Services Committee, earlier in the year, and which has been favorably reported by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs and is now on the calendar.

Mr. MORSE. What does it provide?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It provides for the elimination of certain cemeteries and the extension of others.

Mr. MORSE. Is there anything in this appropriation which would give the Government officials who have jurisdiction over the battlefield at Balls Bluff an excuse for not continuing to maintain that battlefield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Oh, no, there is nothing in this bill that would.

Mr. MORSE. I simply wanted to know that.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The question the Senator from Oregon raises is wholly a question of legislation.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I want to take a minute—half a minute, really, to state my position.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Oregon to the bill which was reported favorably on Monday by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, and it is possible that when that is reached upon the call of the calendar the Senator may wish to discuss it.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I shall discuss it for half a minute now. I hope the bill which was reported by the Senator's committee does not provide for the elimination of the battlefield at Balls Bluff, because if it does the Senator from Oregon will oppose it. He is sure that he will have support from very high Government officials outside the Senate. The battlefield of Balls Bluff happens to be the battlefield in which Oliver Wendell Holmes was first wounded in the Civil War, and it happens to be the battlefield on which Senator Baker, of Oregon, lost his life.

It is a very small battlefield, involving almost a nominal sum for support. I think it would be most unfortunate if the few hundred dollars it takes a year to maintain that great historic monument cannot be supplied by the Congress of the United States. I wish to make the RECORD now because, while information was given to me privately that this bill did not cover it, yet having found myself in controversy with some of the Government agencies over that battlefield, I wanted the RECORD to be perfectly clear that they could not hide behind any action we take this afternoon in the matter of continuing to maintain the Balls Bluff battlefield as a historic monument.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say that there is nothing in the world in the bill that affects that battlefield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Tariff Commission," on page 324, line 8, after "(5 U. S. C. 55a)" to strike out "$1,290,700" and insert "$1,340,700."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "The Tax Court of the United States," on page 325, line 4, after the word "services", to strike out "$820,000" and insert "$826,900."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "United States Maritime Commission," on page 325, line 17, after the figures "$63,000,000", to strike out the colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation or contract authorization shall be used to start any new ship construction for which an estimate was not included in the budget for the current fiscal year, nor to start any new ship construction the currently estimated cost of which exceeds by 10 percent the estimated cost included therefor in such budget unless the Director of the Bureau of the Budget specifically approves the start of such ship construction and the Director shall submit forthwith a detailed explanation thereof to the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and of the House of Representatives; and, as used herein, the term "budget" includes the detailed justification supporting the budget estimates" and in lieu thereof to insert "Provided, That no part of this appropriation or contract authorization shall be used (1) to start any new ship construction for which an estimate was not included in the budget for the current fiscal year or (2) to start any new ship construction the currently estimated cost of which exceeds by 10 percent the estimated cost included therefor in such budget unless, in either case, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget specifically approves the start of such ship construction and the Director shall submit forthwith a detailed explanation thereof to the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and of the House of Representatives; and, as used herein, the term "budget" includes the detailed justification supporting the budget estimates: Provided further, That not to exceed $64,875,000 of the funds and contract authority made available for new ship construction, including reconditioning and betterment, in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1950, shall continue to be available until December 31, 1950."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 326, line 24, after the word "amended", to strike out "$26,450,000" and insert "$30,108,000", and on page 328, line 11, after the word "contracts", to strike out the colon and the following additional proviso: "Provided further, That no part of the foregoing appropriation shall be available for obligation, nor any obligation made, for the payment of an operating differential subsidy for any number of ships in excess of the number of ships which are entitled to receive an operating differential subsidy pursuant to provisions of any contract, authorization, commitment or obligation by the Commission in existence on January 1, 1950, including within said limitation as to number any ships being constructed or contracted for on said date under a construction-differential subsidy contract and including also any ships the operation of which may be authorized by the Commission under any contracts which may result from any formal applications filed with the Commission prior to January 1, 1950."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 330, after line 2, to strike out:

Maritime training: For training personnel for the manning of merchant marine (including operation of training stations at Kings Point, N. Y.; Sheepshead Bay, N. Y.; Alameda, Calif., and the United States Maritime Service Institute), including not to exceed $2,229,300 for administrative personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; purchase of three passenger motor vehicles, for replacement only; printing and binding; health service program as authorized by law (5 U. S. C. 150); not to exeed $2,500 for contingencies for the Superintendent, United States Merchant Marine Academy, to be expended in his discretion; not to exceed $77,000 for transfer to applicable appropriations of the Public Health Service for services rendered the Commission; $3,342,660, including uniforms and textbooks for cadet midshipmen, to be provided in kind at an average yearly cost of not to exceed $200 per cadet: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for compensation or allowances for trainees or cadets.

And in lieu thereof, to insert the following:

Maritime training: For training personnel for the manning of the merchant marine (including operation of training stations at Kings Point, N. Y.; Sheepshead Bay, N. Y.; Alameda, Calif., and the United States Maritime Service Institute), including not to exceed $2,477,000 for administrative personal services (exclusive of pay of cadet midshipmen and other trainees) in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; purchase of three passenger motor vehicles, for replacement only; printing and binding; health service program as authorizd by law (5 U. S. C. 150); not to exceed $2,500 for contingencies for the Superintendent, United States Merchant Marine Academy, to be expended in his discretion; not to exceed $77,000 for transfer to applicable appropriations of the Public Health Service for services rendered the Commission; $3,930,520, including the pay of cadet midshipmen and other trainees.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I have an amendment to offer. I am not sure of the page on which it comes, and I do not want action to be taken at the point at which my amendment should be offered. The amendment is at the desk and I ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 331, line 3, after the word "elsewhere" it is proposed to insert "which may be used to provide pay and allowances for personnel of the United States Maritime Service comparable to those of the Coast Guard as authorized by law (46 U. S. C. 1126, 14 F. R. 7707)".

On page 331, line 10, it is proposed to strike out $3,930,520 and insert $4,348,520.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, this is an amendment which I have discussed with the senior Senator from Wyoming. It relates to the pay of the officers and personnel of the Maritime Training School. As I understand, these men have always been paid by law on the same basis as the Coast Guard is paid. The Coast Guard received an increase in pay by the act passed a year ago. By mistake in the committee the act did not include the same raise in pay for the maritime officers and men who are at this training school. Provision was made for pay for the cadets but the amount appropriated was not sufficient to cover an increase. If my amendment is not adopted, these men will have a decrease in their present pay rather than the increase to which they are entitled.

I believe the Senator from Wyoming is thoroughly informed with the situation and is in accord with the amendment I have just offered, but I should prefer to have him speak for himself.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I think I should say for the RECORD that the committee in its search for ways and means of reducing the appropriation to the lowest efficient amount cut $418,000 from the appropriation for maritime training in the belief that the officers to whom the Senator from Massachusetts has referred were not entitled to the increase in pay which was granted to them by the administrative action of the Maritime Commission at the beginning of the year. We checked the pay-increase law of last year and found that it did not deal specifically with this group.

Later, however, after the committee had acted upon the measure, my attention was called by the Senator from Massachusetts and by others to the fact that the law establishing this organization specifically provides that the officers in maritime training shall receive the pay which is provided for Coast Guard officers in similar grades. So it would be legislation for us to cut out the appropriation, and I have no objection to the Senator's amendment.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Does the Senator consider it legislation if the amendment is allowed to be acted upon?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No.

Mr. FERGUSON. But it would be legislation to attempt to cut it out, that is, to change the law which provides that the men in question shall receive the same pay as the others.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Inasmuch as the law provides that they shall receive the same pay as the officers of the Coast Guard, I think there is nothing we can do about it on an appropriation bill.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. May I inquire if the officers assigned to the maritime training schools are employed on the same basis as the officers of the Coast Guard? In other words, are they officers who have enlisted for a period of years or are they employed as instructors, as college and high school instructors are employed?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. They are employed on the same basis as other officers in the Coast Guard. That is true of the men also.

Mr. AIKEN. And they enlist for a period of years?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes.

Mr. AIKEN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. LEHMAN. I simply wish to say that I believe the committee amendment is very definitely a proposal in the national defense. One of the largest of the merchant marine academies is situated in the State of New York, at King's Point.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is discussing the committee amendment, to which there is no objection. The question now before the Senate is on agreeing to an amendment offered from the floor by the Senator from Massachusetts, to restore $418,000, which was voted by the committee to be stricken out. In taking that action, the committee was under a misapprehension as to the existing law.

Mr. LEHMAN. I thank the Senator for guiding me in this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] to the committee amendment on page 331, in line 3.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the second amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts to the committee amendment, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. To the committee amendment beginning on page 330, after line 2, and ending on page 331 in line 11, the following amendment is proposed: On page 331, in line 10, strike out "$3,930,520", and insert "$4,348,520."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 331, after line 11, to strike out:

State marine schools: To reimburse the State of California, $50,000; the State of Maine, $50,000; the State of Massachusetts, $50,000; and the State of New York, $50,000; for expenses incurred in the maintenance and support of marine schools in such States as provided in the act authorizing the establishment of marine schools, and so forth, approved March 4, 1911, as amended (34 U. S. C. 1121–1123); $153,000 for the maintenance and repair of vessels loaned by the United States to the said States for use in connection with such State marine schools, and $340,000 for uniforms, textbooks, and subsistence of cadets at an average yearly cost of not to exceed $475 per cadet; $668,000, together with not to exceed $25,000 of the unobligated balance for this purpose contained in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1950.

And in lieu thereof, to insert:

State marine schools: To reimburse the State of California, $50,000; the State of Maine, $50,000; the State of Massachusetts, $50,000; and the State of New York, $50,000; for expenses incurred in the maintenance and support of marine schools in such States as provided in the act authorizing the establishment of marine schools, and so forth, approved March 4, 1911, as amended (34 U. S. C. 1121–1123); $153,000 for the maintenance and repair of vessels loaned by the United States to the said States for use in connection with such State marine schools, and $749,050 for the pay of 710 cadet midshipmen at $65 per month and $275 per annum for the subsistence of each cadet midshipman; $1,102,050.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 332, line 22, after the word "the", to strike out "Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1950" and insert "Third Deficiency Appropriation Act, 1949."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Veterans' Administration," on page 336, line 12, after the word "appliances", to strike out "$875,847,795" and insert "$887,621,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 340, line 1, after the word "application", to strike out "therefore" and insert "therefor."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 342, line 16, after the word "exceed", to strike out "4" and insert "6.7"; and on page 343, line 3, after the word "exceed", to strike out "7" and insert "10."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "War Claims Commission—Administrative expenses," on page 345, line 15, after the word "Commission", to strike out "$600,000" and insert "$700,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Independent offices—General provisions," on page 349, after line 5, to insert:

SEC. 110. None of the sections under the head "Independent offices, General provisions" in this title shall apply to the Housing and Home Finance Agency, the Inland Waterways Corporation, or the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Housing and Home Finance Agency," on page 353, line 24, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$17,724,000" and insert "$17,524,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes chapter VIII of the bill.

The clerk will state the first committee amendment appearing in the next chapter.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, have we passed from the portion of the bill dealing with independent-offices appropriations, and are we now considering the portion of the bill dealing with civil-functions appropriations?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Yesterday the Senator from Illinois was granted permission to offer any amendment he might wish to offer to the committee amendments from page 277 to page 283. Accordingly, the Senator from Illinois is recognized at this time.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield to me for a moment?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Certainly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. At the close of consideration by us of the committee amendments in this chapter, it had been my intention to advert to a certain matter.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, on page 304, beginning in line 19, is a section, referring to public works advanced planning. It reads as follows:

Public works advance planning: The unexpended balances on June 30, 1950, of funds made available for public works advance planning under title V of the War Mobilization and Reconversion Act of 1944 (58 Stat. 791), are hereby continued available for expenditure until June 30, 1951.

I have been checking into this matter since the conclusion of the consideration of this section of the bill by the committee; and I find that it will be possible to make a reduction there.

So I now move that on page 304, in line 19, the word "The" be stricken, and there be inserted in lieu thereof the words "Not to exceed $4,000,000 of the," so that this action by the Senate will result in cutting out $2,000,000 of the unexpended appropriation.

Then in line 24, after the——

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, may we act first on the amendment already stated by the Senator?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is all one amendment.

Mr. McFARLAND. Is the Senator from Wyoming going to ask that all of it be handled as one amendment?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes.

Mr. FERGUSON. On what page does this amendment appear, Mr. President?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is on page 304.

Then, Mr. President, in line 24 on that page, after the numeral "1951", I move that the following be added:

The sum of $2,000,000 carried in the said unexpended balance shall be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury immediately upon the approval of this Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator offer that as a committee amendment?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment just stated by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yesterday the Senator from Illinois was granted permission to offer amendments to certain items, and he is recognized at this time.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, to permit me to ask a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of this portion of the bill whether any provision is made in the bill for the stockpiling program.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. MURRAY. On page 300, in line 19, I notice that the language stricken from the bill, as the bill is reported by the committee, seems to indicate that no provision is being made for a stockpiling program under which provision would be made to permit the purchase of materials for stockpiling in the United States.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No; the language which came over to us in the bill as it was passed by the House of Representatives, I am sure, was a technical error. In line 19, on page 300, after stating the amount of the appropriation, it read as follows:

> Of which not to exceed $25,000,000 may be expended in accordance with the purposes of said act of July 23, 1946—

And so forth. That would have meant that there would have been a limitation upon the expenditures for stockpiling within the United States. However, I am sure that was not the intention of the House committee or of the House of Representatives when they acted upon this matter.

In the Senate committee we voted to strike all of it out, because the Stockpiling Act of July 23, 1946, in securing the passage of which the Senator from Montana was of such great help, provides specific authority for the purchase of strategic and critical materials within the United States. Indeed, that Act specifically encourages the development of such materials.

So I am sure that any difficulty can be straightened out in conference.

Mr. MURRAY. I thank the Senator for that explanation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has been recognized. Does he wish to offer an amendment at this time?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I regret that I was not present when consideration of the appropriation bill was resumed today. I have been in my office, keeping somewhat close tab on the probabilities in regard to the time when consideration of the bill would be resumed.

At 5:10 p. m. this afternoon, I was informed that the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] was speaking, and that the probability was that he would speak for some time thereafter. Therefore, I did not think that the consideration of the appropriation bill would be resumed here so suddenly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the reservation made yesterday, the Senator from Illinois has received permission——

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I understand about that, but I should like to make a further statement at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may proceed, certainly.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Continuing Mr. President, at 5:15, I received a telephone message that the appropriation bill was again being considered by the Senate. So I hurried here, arriving here at 5:20 p. m. When I arrived, I found that in that space of 5 minutes the Senate had moved from the consideration of the committee amendments on page 283 to the consideration of the committee amendments on page 329, or 46 pages, in 5 minutes. So I wish to congratulate the reading clerk for the speed and celerity with which he moved through those complicated pages of the bill. Yesterday in open-eyed amazement, I saw him move from page 277 to page 283—some 6 pages—in 6 seconds. However, I was not certain that he could maintain that pace over a long period of time. [Laughter.]

Nevertheless, Mr. President, today I find that due to the great ability of the reading clerk, the Senate covered over 45 pages in 5 minutes. So I can say that the Senate's reading clerk not only is qualified as a dash man, he is not only a verbal Jesse Owens, but he is also qualified as a middle-distance runner, for in running the half-mile he has demonstrated that he can sprint all the way. At the appropriate time I am going to move that we award to the reading clerk a medal for the celerity with which he has helped us get through this measure. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the result of this speed—almost exceeding as it did the velocity of light—is that I missed being on the floor of the Senate at the time when the Senate was considering the committee amendments from page 283 on. Accordingly, I must throw myself upon the mercy of the Senate in craving its indulgence and pardon for not having been here while the committee amendments on those pages were being read by the reading clerk and while the Senate deliberated at high speed upon them.

I believe that the Presiding Officer has ruled—and very properly—that because of the understanding arrived at on yesterday, I am privileged to request the reconsideration of the items up to page 283. However, I think I should now serve notice that I am going to request the reconsideration of a number of items from page 283 on. Whether the Senate will permit those items to be reconsidered, of course, is a matter for the Senate itself to determine.

Mr. President, on page 280, in line 9, in the item dealing with appropriations for the Bureau of the Budget, let me say that I hope we do not grant the $26,000 increase, but, instead, hold to the amount voted by the House of Representatives.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Illinois that the House of Representatives cut this appropriation by $100,000. In its report the House committee explains that it was intended to deny funds to open a new central office in the field. However, upon examination of the figures it was discovered that only $76,000 had been allocated to that purpose. The Senate committee agreed that the new field station should not be opened, but the additional $26,000 reduction above the $74,000 which was intended to be cut out would, in the opinion of the committee, be a matter for the Bureau of the Budget, which actually has served a perfectly splendid purpose in cutting down the budget estimates.

I am glad to be able to tell the Senator that we went into the matter of the budget estimates at great length. The estimates which have come to the Congress on this bill were, by reason of the action of the Bureau of the Budget, some $3,000,000,000 less than the requests made by the various bureaus and agencies. I think it would not be a wise reduction to cut that additional $26,000.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I want to thank the Senator from Wyoming for his very clear and, of course, very accurate statement of the amounts to be appropriated for the Budget Bureau, which the Budget Bureau itself proposed. But I should like to point out that the House figure was $86,000 above the amount for last year. The Senate figure will be $112,000 above the amount for last year. Mr. President, we are in a situation where we must cut virtually every bureau, in order to release energies for the war. The Budget Bureau is a very fine organization, but like most other governmental agencies it should absorb some reductions. There is fat in the Budget Bureau. They will deny it, but there is certainly some fat there, as elsewhere. I do not wish to prolong the discussion, but I hope we can save $26,000 and reject the committee amendment. I move that we reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote may be reconsidered, but that the argument of the Senator from Illinois be denied, and the committee amendment be again approved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to is reconsidered. The question now is upon agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I now move that on page 281, line 6, the Senate reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to which substituted $215,500 for $160,000 on the appropriation for the Philippine Alien Property Administration. I hope we may hold to the smaller House figure of $160,000.

Mr. President, the work of this organization has diminished.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Certainly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I merely wish to ask unanimous consent that we reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to, in order that the Senator may make his argument.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator may now proceed.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, the amount appropriated by the House was $160,000. The committee increased this by $55,000, bringing the total to $215,000. The House committee, in its report, on page 201, states that the bulk of the $55,000 cut which it imposed, as compared to the budget request, was for funds requested for terminal leave. In the judgment of the House committee, these funds can be absorbed in the 1950–51 funds, and therefore they put into effect their cut below the budget estimate. The Senate committee has restored this figure, but, in view of the diminished work which the Philippine Alien Property Administration is carrying on, I hope that we shall reconsider the committee amendment and will not approve it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I should like merely to say that the committee restored the budget estimate, and upon this estimate, after having examined the members of the Philippine Alien Property Administration, and in the belief that providing the budget estimate, that is to say, by increasing the amount that the House had cut, we would expedite the completion of the work. War claims have dragged out in past instances to a great period. This, I think, will expedite the disposal of all the work of this commission, and will be decidedly in the public interest. In any event, it will be clearly before the Congress. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I must now throw myself on the mercy of the Senate, from now on, because the pages 283 to 329 were covered in the 5 minutes between the time I left my office and the time I arrived on the floor of the Senate. I may say that I am going to ask reconsideration of appropriations as follows:

Page 288, line 4: This is an item for salaries and expenses of the Civil Service Commission. We should reject the committee increase of $500,000 because the House committee report on page 204 pointed out the degree of overstaffing in this agency which was borne out in the House hearings, especially on pages 1459 and 1460. By rejecting the committee amendment we would save $500,000.

Page 303, line 19: This is an item for advance planning of public works by the General Services Administration. I hope we may reconsider this item so that I may offer an amendment to reduce the amount to $17,000,000, which would leave this program at last year's level. I do not believe we should increase these funds at the present time since this program was designed to get works planned in case of a depression and since, under the old program, we still have $2,000,000,000 in works already planned not counting those for rivers, harbors, flood control, reclamation, and a host of others. If my amendment is adopted we will save $10,000,000.

Page 307, line 12: This is an item for operating expenses of the General Services Administration. This new category of expenditures should be able to absorb the 7 percent cut provided for by the House. If we reject the committee amendment we will save $6,225,000.

Page 314, line 13: An item for general expenses of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The House has already increased last year's appropriation by $290,000. I see no reason for giving this agency its full budget request, as the committee has done, when we have not done so for most agencies. I hope we can reject the committee's amendment and save $113,000.

Page 321, line 11: An item for salaries and expenses of the Securities and Exchange Commission. The House figure has already allowed an increase of $380,000 for this Commission over funds expended last year should be enough. By rejecting the committee amendment we can save $200,000.

Page 322, line 20: Salaries and expenses of the Smithsonian Institution—another case of allowing the full budget request while we have not done so in most agencies. We should reject the committee amendment and save $163,510.

Page 325, line 17: If we accept the amendment which I shall offer, for reasons I hope to develop, we will save $41,000,000.

Page 326, line 24: I hope we will reject this amendment and save $3,658,000.

The sum total of these amendments which I hope will be adopted would save approximately $60,000,000 in funds and contract authorizations I now move that the Senate reconsider the action by which it has approved these items, and that we take them up one by one.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I hope that I am not indulging in an excess of optimism in what I am about to say in my appeal to the Senator from Illinois. I hold in my hand the volume of the hearings by this committee on this chapter of the bill. It contains 1,136 pages of printed testimony. I assure the Senator that the members of the committee went into these items with the greatest care, and with the purpose of cutting appropriations wherever there was a possibility of cutting them. We had new estimates which were not before the House. Nevertheless, we have reported to the Senate a bill which is below the amount appropriated by the House.

The very unusual aspect of this chapter, different from any other chapter which is before the Senate, is that of the total amount of cash carried in the bill, 90 percent is for war-connected expenditures, and with respect to contract authorizations, 93 percent is for war-connected expenditures.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be very glad to yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The amendments I am proposing do not deal with war-connected expenditures, unless we can take the Maritime Commission expenditures to be of that nature. The proposals I am now making are largely for a reduction of administrative costs.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I may suggest that the Maritime Commission certainly is war-connected. There are many vessels in storage which may very shortly be used. I think it would be very unwise at this moment, when we are engaged in transporting men and materials across the Pacific Ocean because of what is going on in Korea, to cut the appropriation for the Maritime Commission below that which is provided for in the bill.

I am quite sincere in saying to the Senator that I am confident that in asking for the reconsideration of these various items, he is asking the Senate to reject the considered opinion of the members of the subcommittee on independent offices who carefully and judiciously, if I may say so, examined every one of the appropriations for the purpose of cutting wherever we could cut.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I may say to the Senator from Wyoming that, of course, we all respect him and we also respect the work of his committee, and one of the things which has always endeared him to the other Members of the Senate has been his constant willingness to listen to points that are made both on and off the floor, and to preserve an open mind regarding matters in dispute.

I want to make it clear that I do not pretend to omniscience. I make many mistakes, myself. It is quite possible that I am in error regarding some of the amendments which I am going to propose. But I should be grateful if the Senator from Wyoming, with his usual courtesy and gentleness, would at least allow me briefly to make my proposals for economy, and then he, doubtless, will be able to refute my arguments; and I am sure he probably has the votes to support him, no matter what may happen in the course of the argument itself.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator from Illinois feels that way, to conserve time would the Senator mind making his motion to reconsider all the amendments en bloc, and then if to any one of them the Senator wants to move an amendment, that may be done.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That would permit my proposals to be killed all at once, rather than their dying a slow death one by one. I had been hoping that one or two of my suggestions might appeal to the Members of the Senate and that my efforts would not be entirely unavailing. I am not merely trying to make a record, Mr. President; I am hoping to save some money. I can promise the Senator from Wyoming that I shall try to be brief in discussing each one of the items, with the exception of the Maritime Commission. In that case there are enormous sums of money involved and both the General Accounting Office and a subcommittee of the House have indicated gross waste, negligence, or even worse in the payment of the construction and operation subsidies.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Chair kindly state the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Illinois to reconsider the vote by which the amendments which he has mentioned were adopted. His motion was to reconsider them en bloc.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield for a question, but before I yield may I say that if unanimous consent is going to be refused, I should like to have an opportunity to make an argument on the largest item, which is that for the Maritime Commission. So, before the guillotine falls, I shall be glad to yield to my good friend, the gentle and able Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank my distinguished friend for his customary courtesy.

I am interested in an item involving the maritime program, at page 330 of the bill, and it well may be that I would approach the subject from a little different angle, because I should like to add an item rather than to subtract one. Nevertheless, since we have an identity of geographic interest in this bill, I should like to concur with him in the hope that he might let it be open for consideration.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am glad the able Senator from Florida finds his interest coinciding with mine in the desire to reconsider this item, although, unfortunately, I regret that he is trying to increase the amount in the bill and is not joining in an effort to diminish it.

Mr. PEPPER. I propose construction rather than subtraction.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, may I suggest that we eliminate that one item, and vote on the others?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I think that is a very constructive suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois to reconsider the action by which the amendments have been adopted, with the exception stated by the Senator from Arizona. [Putting the question.] The "noes" have it, and the motion is not agreed to.

The question now is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois to reconsider the action of the Senate in adopting the amendment relating to the Maritime Commission.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I should like to have the Members of the Senate turn to pages 324, 325, and 326 of the bill which is before us. It will be noticed that line 17 on page 325 carries an appropriation of $63,000,000 for new ship construction, which was made by the House and continued by the Senate.

If Senators will turn to page 326 they will note that on line 17 there is a further authorization of $64,875,000 made available, or a combined total of $127,875,000. The figure of $64,875,000 is, presumably, merely to carry over previous authorizations which have been made. But, Mr. President, we are, putting at the disposal of the Maritime Commission a total sum of more than $127,000,000 for subsidies on new ship construction. It should be realized that these sums are not all directly connected with any immediate war effort. They were put into the budget and inserted by the committee prior to the war situation. They were designed to carry out a permanent merchant-marine and not to meet any sudden need for shipping in connection with the Korean war. If additional maritime shipping is needed in connection with hostilities, it can be covered in any war appropriations bill which is introduced.

So that the issue before us, Mr. President, deals really with the long time merchant-marine policy of the Nation.

The Members of this body are aware of the investigations of the Maritime Commission which have been made by the General Accounting Office under the direction of Mr. Lindsay Warren, and also, on two occasions, by a House subcommittee headed by Representative Porter Hardy of Virginia. We are all acquainted with the head of the General Accounting Office, Mr. Lindsay Warren, of North Carolina, a fellow North Carolinian of the distinguished Senator who is presiding at the moment. He is a man of great integrity, a man of great ability, and is a noble public servant.

Mr. Warren has found that the Maritime Commission made gross overpayments in connection with construction subsidies and in connection with operating subsidies, and these charges by the head of the General Accounting Office, the Comptroller General of the United States, were investigated by the House committee headed, as I have said, by Representative HARDY of Virginia.

Representative HARDY comes from a district close to the great shipbuilding center of Norfolk. Therefore certainly he is not a man who would be prejudiced against the shipbuilding interests.

Yet on two occasions, last year and this year, the House committee, I believe, unanimously made its report saying that excessive operating and excessive construction subsidies had been paid by the Maritime Commission apparently involving many of these same items that are included in the appropriation bill.

It will be remembered that last year the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] mentioned a similar item in the appropriation bill for that year, involving the ships Mariposa and the Monterey. We had a long colloquy on that subject on the floor of the Senate.

I have gone into this matter in some detail and some weeks ago I addressed a letter to the Acting Administrator of the Maritime Administration, because, as we know, the organization has changed somewhat in the last few weeks. I wrote to Mr. John T. Koehler, and in the letter I asked four questions concerning the $63,000,000 item for construction subsidies:

1. What are the vessels to be covered by the contract authority?
2. Have formal applications been filed by the companies which would benefit from this contract authority?
3. According to present calculations, is it reasonable to assume that these contracts will be let before June 30, 1951?
4. What is the status in detail of these negotiations?

On July 18, Mr. Koehler replied to my letter. I ask unanimous consent that at this point in my remarks a copy of my letter to Mr. Koehler and his reply be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JUNE 29, 1950.

Mr. JOHN T. KOEHLER,
Administrator of Maritime Administration, Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. KOEHLER: In my studies of the pending appropriations bill I find an item of $63,000,000 in contract authority for maritime subsidies. This has raised four questions in my mind and I would be grateful for the answers to the following questions:

1. What are the vessels to be covered by this contract authority?
2. Have formal applications been filed by the companies who would benefit from this contract authority?
3. According to present calculations is it reasonable to assume that these contracts will be let before June 30, 1951?
4. What is the status in detail of these negotiations?

I would very much appreciate a reply to this letter as early as possible.

Sincerely,

PAUL H. DOUGLAS.

UNITED STATES
DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
MARITIME ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., July 18, 1950.

The Honorable PAUL H. DOUGLAS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR DOUGLAS: Reference is made to your letter of June 29, 1950, concerning an item of $63,000,000 in the 1951 appropriation bill.

Our 1951 construction budget as submitted to Congress after approval by the Bureau of the Budget called for contract authority of $75,000,000, made up as follows:

1 prototype naval auxiliary vessel	$10,000,000
2 passenger vessels for New York and east coast South America service	65,000,000
Total	75,000,000

The cash required with respect to the above was estimated at $5,000,000 for fiscal year 1951. The remaining contract authority balance of $70,000,000 was reduced to $63,000,000 by the House, which represents a straight 10 percent reduction.

We shall endeavor to answer your questions in the order listed by you.

"1. What are the vessels to be covered by the contract authority?"

There is now being operated on Trade Route No. 1, between New York and ports on the east coast of South America, under bareboat charter to Moore-McCormack Lines, Inc., the Government-owned "Good Neighbor Fleet" (comprised of the steamships Argentina, Brazil, and Uruguay). The vessels included in our 1951 budget as listed above would replace the "Good Neighbor Fleet," all three vessels in this fleet having already become 20 years old.

"2. Have formal applications been filed by the companies who would benefit from this contract authority?"

No formal applications have been filed for the construction of passenger vessels by any company or companies for operation on Trade Route No. 1. Further in this connection see answer to question No. 4 hereinafter.

"3. According to present calculations is it reasonable to assume that these contracts will be let before June 30, 1951?"

At the time our 1951 budget was filed, it was believed that it would be possible to execute contracts for the construction and sale to a private company of the necessary passenger-carrying vessels to replace the "Good Neighbor Fleet." Our latest and very recent estimate is that contracts with respect to such new vessels cannot be awarded until about November 1, 1951. Further in connection with this question see answer to No. 4 hereinafter.

"4. What is the status in detail of these negotiations?"

The former Maritime Commission having been unsuccessful in effecting an agreement with the present charterers of the "Good Neighbor Fleet" whereby they, prior to the expiration of their current charter, would agree to purchase new vessels for this service, the Maritime Administration is preparing to send out an invitation for bids with respect to the charter of the "Good Neighbor Fleet" after the expiration of the current charter, which charter, as recently extended, will expire not later than June 30, 1951. The invitation for bids, will also require that each bidder submit such replacement program as will, in its opinion, adequately replace the "Good Neighbor Fleet." The three vessels have a total passenger capacity of 1,557. As each bidder will be given some leeway as to the general characteristics of the replacement vessels, it is possible that the successful bidder will be required to build anywhere from two to four vessels. However, the amount requested for this project appears to represent as close an estimate, as can be made at this juncture, of the total construction cost of all of the vessels to be constructed for Trade Route No. 1. The delay in getting out bids for a new charter of the "Good Neighbor Fleet" and thereby extending the possible date for letting a contract for replacements has been due to a combination of circumstances not foreseen when the budget in question was prepared, which delay is the reason why we now estimate that it is not likely that the replacements will be contracted for during the fiscal year 1951.

H. R. 7786 as it passed the House carries the following proviso with respect to the $63,000,000 item: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation or contract authorization shall be used to start any new ship construction for which an estimate was not included in the budget for the current fiscal year, nor to start any new ship construction the currently estimated cost of which exceeds by 10 percent the estimated cost included therefor in such budget unless the director of the Bureau of the Budget specifically approved the start of such ship construction and the director shall submit forthwith a detailed explanation thereof to the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and of the House of Representatives; and, as used herein, the term budget includes the detailed justification supporting the budget estimates."

Some of the 1949 appropriation authority was earmarked for the construction of a combination vessel for account of the Mississippi Shipping Co. estimated to cost $16,000,000. However, the 1949 appropriation authority lapsed before a construction contract could be executed.

In the 1950 Appropriation Act, the following contract authority also lapsed as of June 30, 1950:

2 combination passenger vessels for Grace Line Inc. for operation in New York to Caribbean service	$31,500,000
2 trailerships for the Pacific Coast Steamship Co. for operation in the United States west coast intercoastal service	22,000,000
Design for national defense vessels	3,900,000
Miscellaneous betterments	875,000
Total	58,275,000

We have applications on file with respect to the construction of the trailerships, without construction subsidy, as listed above and also applications from the Arnold Bernstein Line for the purchase of war-built vessels, the General Pope and General Weigel, and for a construction-differential allowance with respect to the conversion of these two vessels for commercial operation, the total cost of such conversion having been estimated at a maximum of $9,500,000. While Grace Line Inc. has indicated a strong interest in the construction of two combination vessels, with the aid of a construction-differential, for its Caribbean service, no formal application with respect thereto has been filed as yet. The American President Lines, Ltd., under date of April 13, 1950, filed applications for construction-differential aid in the construction of four combination vessels for operation in its round-the-world service.

It is our understanding that, subject to the prior approval of the Bureau of the Budget, the provision in H. R. 7786, quoted above would make it possible to use any or all of the $63,000,000 with respect to the construction or improvement of vessels not listed in the 1951 budget should it develop, as it now appears, that no contract authority will be utilized in connection with the vessels for replacing the "Good Neighbor Fleet" until after the close of the fiscal year 1951.

Based on the latest estimates of our staff, it does not now appear possible to award contracts with respect to any of the vessels mentioned herein prior to July 1, 1951, except contracts applicable to vessels for the Pacific Coast Steamship Co., the Arnold Bernstein Line and the construction ($10,000,000) and design ($2,500,000) of the Navy prototype vessel. However, since contract authority cannot be used until and unless there are properly executed contracts and as it is more satisfactory to consider and dispose of applications for new construction on their merit under the 1936 act where the contract authority is available, we suggest that it would be desirable not to reduce the $63,000,000 contract authority now in the 1951 appropriation bill. Moreover, by not reducing same it would give us more leeway in dealing with new applications, if any, that may be filed in the meantime and also in meeting the situation, should it develop that a better schedule can be met, than we now contemplate, for executing contracts with respect to applications now pending.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN T. KOEHLER,
Acting Administrator.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I want to say that I think Mr. Koehler is to be commended for his frankness and for his cooperation in helping to provide Congress with information which is necessary for our purposes.

He stated that the $63,000,000 in contract authorizations—and that is the amount provided by the House—were to be used to replace Government-owned "Good Neighbor Fleet" operated by the Moore-McCormack Line between New York and South America. However, no further applications have been filed for this program. While at the time the 1951 budget was filed the Maritime Commission thought it could execute these contracts, the present estimates of the Maritime Administration are that they cannot be awarded until about November 1, 1951. This means that all of the $63,000,000 authorization provided by the House cannot possibly be reached during the ensuing fiscal year for the purpose for which it is provided. It should therefore be eliminated. However, we can now deal with the matter in part by continuing the House appropriation and cutting down on the additional contract authorizations provided in the Senate amendment.

Subject to the approval of the Bureau of the Budget the provisions of the bill would allow the Maritime Commission to use $63,000,000 in authorizations for other contracts. According to the last paragraph of Mr. Koehler's letter it does not now appear possible to award before July 1, 1951, any contracts presently under consideration except the following: $22,000,000 for the Pacific Coast Steamship Co. for trailer ships on the west coast. Now note the next item in the case of the Arnold Bernstein Line: Conversion of two war-built troop vessels for commercial use—$9,500,000 for that. Not for the conversion of commercial ships to troop use, but conversion of troop ships to commercial use.

Construction of Navy prototype vessels, $10,000,000. Design of Navy prototype vessels, $2,500,000.

Mr. President, the total amount that can possibly be awarded for the fiscal year 1950–51 on the basis of contracts under consideration is $44,000,000, not $63,000,000. The pending Arnold Bernstein contract calls for the conversion of two troop ships, the General Pope and the General Weigel, to commercial use.

In the face of the present world situation I cannot believe that the Maritime Administration would permit the conversion of troop transports into commercial vessels. So it seems that the total amount of $44,000,000 could be reduced by the further amount of $9,500,000, leaving $34,500,000 for contracts now pending, and about which information is now available. Furthermore $6,600,000 of the $64,875,000 extension allowed by the committee has already been awarded, so that will not be needed. This is a total of $41,100,000 not needed.

Mr. President, I therefore intend to offer an amendment to the committee amendment striking the figure of $64,875,000 and inserting in lieu thereof the figure of $23,775,000.

I think that explains a somewhat complicated situation in as few words as it is possible for me to explain it. It would effect a saving of $41,100,000.

I now move to strike out "$63,875,000," and to insert instead "$23,775,000."

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I wish to support the amendments of the Senator from Illinois. With the possible exception of the RFC, the operation of the Maritime Commission has been probably the greatest scandal of government in the last 10 years. I believe it is due to the fact that those who have profited by the misspending, wastefulness, and looting of the appropriations for the Maritime Commission have been in effect running the Commission. I do not think any more temptation than is necessary should be put in their way. When Congress approved the reorganization plan of the President transferring the operation and functions of the Maritime Commission to the Commerce Department, it was made possible for the President to correct the very unsavory situation in the Martime Commission. It is my belief that the President has failed to take advantage of the opportunity to perform this duty. I feel that we are going to see a continuation of the same wasteful and illegal—according to the Comptroller General—manipulations of the maritime affairs that we have seen over the past 10 years. It is safe to say that the Maritime Commission expenditures have cost hundreds of millions of dollars, and perhaps even billions of dollars, to the taxpayers. Through their manipulations we have put the merchant marine in a state of absolute dependency on Government so that very few ship lines will go on the high seas and attempt to operate a shipping business as it should be operated. There are a few notable exceptions.

Mr. President, I do not know whether we are in an emergency. I understood the President to ask for emergency war powers, but he has not proclaimed any emergency. If there is an emergency, as the Senator from Illinois says, then the amount provided here will in the long run be only a drop in the bucket, and might as well not be considered at all. I believe the President should tell the people of the country whether there is an emergency or whether there is not, and proclaim one if there is.

I believe that here is a chance to save forty or fifty million dollars from a peacetime program and which will have a great deal of labor and material for the war effort.

I think the Senate should support the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, and I for one would like to see a record vote on it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I sympathize completely with everything that can be said for congressional action to prevent waste. I submit that it is perfectly clear that the action of the President in sending a reorganization plan to the Congress for the Maritime Commission was a step which was intended to inject a very much higher degree of efficiency and care in the administration of the funds appropriated for the activities carried on formerly by the Maritime Commission, and now to be carried on under Reorganization Plan No. 21 of 1950, which became effective on May 24, 1950.

The committee in examining the appropriations for the Maritime Commission had in mind the fact that we did have a legislative reorganization, and the committee felt that while scrutinizing these expenditures and these estimates it should not undertake to destroy the effectiveness of the agency of the Government which, under the reorganization plan, the President and the Congress are trying to reform.

I say to the Senator from Illinois that the commitee reported an appropriation which was $63,000,000 below the estimates. There was no charge of waste leveled before our committee with respect to the current administration. No representation was made to us, except through our own examination of the witnesses, which prompted us to make cuts. We are dealing here with a program which extends over a period of years. It is impossible to build an ocean lines in a month, or 2 months, or 6 months, or a year. Sometimes the operation takes several years, because the building of a modern liner which plies the ocean is a great engineering undertaking.

In providing cash, we had a program of $13,700,00 to pay for obligations for the years 1947 and 1948. No one had charged that there was anything wrong about those obligations.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. Did the obligations include any payment to the owners of the Mariposa or the Monterey?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No; not a penny. We went into that question, I will say to the Senator from Vermont.

The bill also provides cash for the 1949 program. The House reduced the cash appropriation, to which the Senator from Illinois referred, from $70,000,000 to $63,000,000, as I recall the figures.

So, I say to the Members of the Senate, let us not condemn the program and the new administrators of the program upon the basis of charges which were made against a commission which no longer exists.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to ask to what new administrators of the program the Senator refers. The President has appointed the old administrator, whom the House committee roundly condemned for failing to carry out his work properly for the last 2 years.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The reorganization plan divided the functions into the Federal Maritime Board and the Maritime Administration. Of course, General Fleming has been reappointed to a position of importance in the new organization, but General Fleming was not in the other administration for a long time.

Mr. AIKEN. I understand General Fleming was the chairman of the Maritime Commission.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. For scarcely a year.

Mr. AIKEN. I like General Fleming personally. I did not have the heart to vote against his confirmation even though I did not consider him qualified for the post. But the Senator must be familiar with the House report on maritime affairs, which cited case after case in which money was wasted, squandered, spent illegally under the General's administration.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I point out to the Senator that those cases all took place before General Fleming was appointed.

Mr. AIKEN. According to the House committee, they continued at an accelerated rate even after he took over the chairmanship.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am not ready to acknowledge that to be a fact. I would say to the Senator from Vermont that the members of the subcommittee who heard the testimony this year and last year, feel I am sure, as the Senator from Vermont has just said he feels, that General Fleming is a man of character and ability. The Senator from Vermont, though he did a very excellent piece of work in the criticisms he voiced upon the floor of the Senate with respect to the administration of the Maritime Commission in times past, was unwilling to condemn General Fleming by voting against his nomination. All I am saying now is, do not deprive the reorganized group of the funds which they need to carry on the work which the legislative authority of the Government has directed them to do. If there is any change of policy, to be made it should be made, not in the appropriation bill, but by proceeding before the legislative committee in charge.

I will say to the Senator from Vermont and to the Senator from Illinois that if I am correctly advised an opportunity will be presented to them before we are through with this appropriation bill to give their views and exercise their right to oppose amendments which, if agreed to, will greatly increase the expenditures.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I would first like to say that I hold President Truman wholly responsible for the work of the Maritime Commission from now on. It is his appointees that will have this work to do. What I want to ask the Senator from Wyoming—and I ask him this question as chairman of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report—Does the Senator from Wyoming believe that this Nation is in a state of emergency at the present time, and is that emergency likely to last until the next Congress convenes?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Indeed I do believe it is in a state of emergency, and I think the emergency will last throughout the life of the next Congress.

Mr. AIKEN. Does the Senator believe it would be good business to start the construction of ocean liners, which scarcely can be completed for years, in competition with the war effort, which may require all the men and materials which otherwise would be used in starting the construction of these long-range projects?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If this emergency develops, as every indication would suggest, we will certainly need the vessels which are authorized in this program.

Mr. AIKEN. Does the Senator then believe that we are in for a permanent emergency?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is merely bandying words when he asks that question.

Mr. AIKEN. Considering the length of time it takes to build a liner I would say that that is probably the Senator's assumption.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, if there is going to be a prolonged discussion of this particular amendment, may I suggest that we pass it over and come back to it later?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I do not know whether there will be prolonged discussion. I have finished speaking.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I should like to point out one feature. The total of $127,875,000 which will be provided for the Maritime Administration by these two amendments is vastly in excess of the amounts which the Maritime Administration itself says it can spend during this period. It is approximately $41,000,000 more than the Maritime Administration can spend.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. KERR. Do I understand the Senator to say that it is that much in excess of either what the Commission can spend during the 12 months, or contract to spend at a later date under contracts made within that period?

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is correct. The Senator from Oklahoma has put the situation very well.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LEHMAN. I should like to ask whether the amounts set forth in the appropriation bill, $63,000,000 and $64,000,000 are earmarked for specific purposes? In other words, must the amounts be used for the construction or repair or reconstruction of specifically named vessels, or can the amounts be used for the construction of an entirely different set of vessels?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I may say that the $63,000,000 was to be used to replace the "Good Neighbor Fleet" operated by the Moore-McCormack Line, but that no formal applications have been filed for the program; and the present estimate of the Maritime Commission is that it cannot award such contracts until about November 1, 1951, or after the expiration of the current fiscal year for which we are appropriating. In effect, these two appropriations and authorizations would give to the Maritime Commission $41,000,000 which they could use for any purpose that they personally see fit without proposing any program to Congress for approval. And carrying out the point made by the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], I want to say that I do not believe that the record of the Maritime Administration personnel is such that we should give them $41,000,000 of blank checks with which they can carry out further subsidies beyond those which they themselves now say they can implement.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I may point out that the management of the maritime operations of the country has not been changed materially by the recent transfer. The most striking change has been the firing of Commissioner McKeough, of Illinois, who over the years has been struggling against odds to maintain some degree of integrity and efficiency in the Maritime Commission, and he has fought against overwhelming odds to do that. Yet when the time came when the President could revamp the Maritime Commission in accordance with the desires of the Congress, he fired Commissioner McKeough and left most of those responsible for the sins of the past in a position to continue to commit those sins in the future.

I had hoped that Secretary Sawyer, if he remained in the Cabinet, would be able to exercise some degree of control over the operations of this ex-commission. But I understand that whenever the Director or the Under Secretary in charge of transportation matters is in Washington, Secretary Sawyer will have very little to say about it. It is only when the Director is away that an Assistant Director, who is appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, will have some control over the situation.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I shall yield to the Senator from Massachusetts in a moment. First I want to comment on the remarks of the eminent senior Senator from Vermont. No one regretted more than I did the dropping of Commissioner McKeough from the Maritime Commission. We in Illinois are very proud of him because of the courageous fight he made to eliminate unnecessary and even illegal subsidies. We regret very much that he was dropped. In justice to the President it ought to be said, however, that the other members of the Commission, with the exception of the chairman, General Fleming, were also dropped. General Fleming was made Assistant Secretary of Commerce in general charge of transportation. My feeling is very similar to that of the Senator from Vermont. The general had given good service prior to the time he went on the Maritime Commission, and I personally did not have the heart to vote against confirmation of his nomination although I did not approve of his policies on the Maritime Commission.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I may add that most of those in charge of operations in the past have been continued in the new set-up, except some of those who tried their best to assist Commissioner McKeough in maintaining, as I said, some degree of integrity and efficiency in the Commission, have been demoted.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is precisely the point to which I was coming, that although some good men have been put in at the top of the new Maritime Administration, the personnel down below is in the main the same personnel that operated under the Maritime Commission, and whose work was accompanied by the gross scandals which Mr. Lindsay Warren and the House committee said existed. It is in view of that fact, as well as the need for economy. I do not want to see the United States giving them a check for $127,000,000, when the new administrator says that about all that he can possibly spend under existing proposals will be about $81,000,000. I do not think the record of the personnel of the Maritime Administration group is such that we should put into their hands these great powers to spend additional sums of money for purposes not at present contemplated. I feel that these sums would probably be spent but also probably not for the right purposes.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. LEHMAN. As I have stated on the floor of the Senate on a number of occasions, I am going to vote against the construction of public works so far as it it possible to do so, whether such public works are flood control, rivers and harbors, or construction of buildings. I shall vote deep cuts in those appropriations. But, as I have also stated, I am unwilling to vote against anything that is a defense measure.

Even though it may not be possible for some months to use these moneys under the schedules that have been read by the Senator from Illinois, nevertheless, in view of the fact that the appropriation is not limited to the particular projects set forth in the language of the bill, it would appear to me that this is a defense measure pure and simple, and it is my opinion further that we are going to be required to spend a great deal more money, vastly larger sums, for the development of our merchant marine during the emergency.

I wonder why the Senator from Illinois should be opposed to a measure which to me looks like a defense measure, regardless of the fact that the particular projects, or the particular purposes enunciated in the bill may not be carried out, because there is no limitation with regard to the purposes which these sums can be used for in this emergency as a part of our defense mechanism.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from New York that this proposal did not originate as a defense measure when these items were inserted in the bill, which was before the Korean situation developed, so that the original purpose was not keyed to any national emergency. It was keyed to ordinary peacetime cold-war needs. My amendment would not cut any defense programs.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. If I may finish, I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Florida.

Fundamentally, I suppose what it boils down to—and this is a hard thing to say—is that I simply do not sufficiently trust the personnel running the Maritime Commission to be willing to give them a blank check for $41,000,000, in excess of the amounts required for the ships which are under consideration, for them to do with as they wish. Their past record is not such as to justify any such public trust.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield for a question.

Mr. HOLLAND. Is not it true that, instead of being a defense measure, a goodly portion of this proposed appropriation is exactly the reverse, in that it proposes that some millions of dollars be used to convert into commercial ships some ships which now are troop ships, and are qualified for the moving of troops, and were built for that purpose?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida is entirely correct as to that.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, first let me reply to the Senator from Florida.

The Senator from Florida is completely correct in his suggestion that, as I said originally, this is a proposal in the case of the Arnold Bernstein Line, that two troop ships, the General Pope and the General Weigel, be converted for commercial purposes, as the Senator from Florida has pointed out. So part of this program is one for national defense in reverse.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think I should first yield to the Senator from Massachusetts, and I do so now.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I was going to ask the Senator from Illinois if he would yield to me for the purpose of permitting me to make a very brief statement, and then perhaps I shall end up by asking a question of the Senator from Wyoming, who is in charge of the committee's report on this portion of the bill.

I sat on the subcommittee which listened to a great deal of the testimony regarding this portion of the bill. As I understand, the program for 1947 through 1952 calls for estimated obligations in the amount of $321,737,830, and there have been cash appropriations of $141,878,685, leaving unfinanced obligations of $179,859,145.

What we are appropriating this year, if we carry through with the program, will cut down the unfinanced obligations by the amount of the cash appropriations made now, and reduce delay on work already started. On that point we do not have much to say.

But, as I understand the matter, this item calls for the building of two new passenger ships and one Navy prototype vessel. I do not recall just what that vessel is to be. However, the two passenger ships are for the South American and Caribbean trade, if I recall correctly.

My question is this: If we adopt the committee recommendation, there will be nothing to be taken to conference in regard to this item, because the figures as reported by our committee are the same as those voted by the House of Representatives.

However, if we adopt an amendment to this item, then in the conference it will be considered, and at that time there will be a question as to whether the construction of the two passenger vessels should be begun at the present time or whether the program should be changed.

Under those circumstances, would it not be advisable to accept an amendment—I do not say that the amendment of the Senator from Illinois is the correct one—in order that there may be something in connection with this item to be considered by the conference committee, so as to give it an opportunity to determine what should be done in this matter, and thus giving the Senate another opportunity to act and to see whether the present proposal is the correct one, in view of the situation which has developed since the committee considered this item?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to speak now, let me say that the Senator from Massachusetts has always been a most persuasive member of my subcommittee in dealing with these matters. Of course, the program is based on the premise that maritime construction is in the interest of the national defense.

As the Senator from Massachusetts has said, it is true that the plan calls for the construction of two passenger vessels and a prototype naval vessel. I should like to read the first paragraph of the material which we obtained in support of this item:

> In the interest of national defense and a well-balanced American merchant marine, it is proposed to contract in fiscal year 1951 for the construction under title V of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, two or three passenger-carrying vessels and for the construction, under title VII, of a prototype craft which, in an emergency, may be massed-produced as naval auxiliaries.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is the Senator from Wyoming referring to the possibility of replacing with new vessels the ships in the so-called "good neighbor fleet?"

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is a part of the matter, yes. However, I was about to say——

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming has a copy of the letter from Mr. Koehler, I believe, in which Mr. Koehler says that he does not believe those contracts can possibly be executed during the ensuing year. Does not the Senator have a copy of that letter? I ask that question because the letter which Mr. Koehler addressed to me had a notation to the effect that a copy was being sent to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes. It was understood, of course, that the House made some reduction.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. LEHMAN. Is it not true, as I have stated, that in the use of these funds the Maritime Commission is not limited to using them for any specific projects?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Not unless a contract is made.

Mr. LEHMAN. Yes. But in these matters it is not limited to using these funds for the good neighbor fleet or for the Arnold Bernstein vessels or for ships of the character of those to which the Senator from Massachusetts has referred. Is not that correct?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes.

Mr. LEHMAN. But the Commission can use these funds for the development of vessels or for the construction of vessels in the national defense; is that correct?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes. Let me say that I think it is extremely unwise to reduce this appropriation, because I believe that at the present moment the United States is in a position in which it must maintain an adequate merchant marine. If, unfortunately, we should find ourselves compelled to transport more men and more materials for military purposes, then vessels will be of great value.

However, when Senators on this side of the aisle and Senators, such as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], on the other side of the aisle rise and ask, "Why should we build a passenger vessel at this time?" I am moved to reply that I would be quite willing to take an amendment of this kind to conference, so that in the conference we may determine whether to construct the passenger vessels.

So, Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Illinois, if I may do so, how he obtained the figure of $34,500,000 which he offers in his amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, that is the amount that can be awarded during the applicable fiscal year. It is taken from the letter written by Mr. Koehler. If the Senator from Wyoming has a copy of the letter with him, he will find this statement appearing on page 3 of that letter—and I refer now to the final paragraph, as follows:

> Except contracts applicable to vessels for the Pacific Coast Steamship Co., the Arnold Bernstein Line and the construction ($10,000,000) and design ($2,500,000) of the Navy prototype vessel.

Those totals, including contracts in regard to the Arnold Bernstein Line, come to $44,000,000.

However, I could not believe that at this time any of us would vote to carry through the Arnold Bernstein project for the conversion of troop ships into commercial ships.

So if from the $44,000,000, we eliminate $9,500,000, that will leave $34,500,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I call for a vote on this amendment.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, on that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. KERR. Was the amount reported by the committee in contemplation of the building of the vessels to which the Koehler letter refers?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. We allowed the measure in this respect to stand in exactly the same way it stood when the House passed it. The Koehler letter itself was not before our committee. It has been written since then, and I have not had an opportunity to examine it. But I feel very strongly that we should not at this time suspend the funds for the construction of vessels which we may certainly need upon the seas within the next couple of years.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. KERR. Does the Senator think that authorizations should be made for an amount of money which the agency itself says cannot be spent within the period of time for which the authorizations are made?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is a very pertinent question, I may say to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment on page 325, line 17, was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I ask that Senators seconding the request for the yeas and nays be asked to rise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators desiring to second the demand for the yeas and nays will rise.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, may I suggest that this amendment go over to the end, and that we proceed with the other committee amendments?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There is no reconsideration involved. The Senator from Illinois is moving to amend the figure in the bill, which was not touched by any Senate amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, this is a parliamentary question. The Senator from Illinois made a motion to reconsider a number of amendments, and omitted from the motion the amendment relating to the Maritime Commission. The Senate voted against reconsideration of the other amendments.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Precisely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois then moved to reconsider the vote by which this amendment was agreed to, because it has to be reconsidered, if the Senator from Illinois is to be permitted to offer his amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I may be in error, but I have before me the printed amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DOUGLAS. May I say, Mr. President, that the amendment which I offered from the floor differs from the printed amendment. The amendment I have just offered is directed to page 326, and it proposes to strike out $64,875,000 and to substitute $23,775,000, and thus to effect a saving of $41,100,000, the amount in excess of the sums which the Maritime Administration has committed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois relates to the Senate committee amendment.

Mr. McFARLAND. I ask that this amendment be passed over for the time being, and that we proceed to less controversial matters.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I understand this is the only amendment which remains in this chapter.

Mr. AIKEN. May I ask what would be gained by passing it over? When would the vote be taken? The Senator from Vermont must be absent from the Senate one day and was hoping this amendment would be taken up today.

Mr. McFARLAND. I suggest that we proceed with the other amendments, and then if the Senator insists on taking up this amendment this evening we can return to it later on.

Mr. AIKEN. May I inquire what the other amendments are which are more important than this? And if this concludes one chapter of the bill, why not finish it now?

Mr. McFARLAND. I did not say that the other amendments were more important than this. I said "less controversial."

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, it seems to me we are ready to vote on the question, and if it is delayed some Senator may have a happy thought and enter into another argument.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois to reconsider the vote by which the Senate adopted the committee amendment.

Mr. McFARLAND. Then if we are going to vote, I am going to have to suggest the absence of a quorum. That is what I wanted to avoid at this time. I thought we could proceed with other amendments and then return to this a little later, if the Senate insists upon that being done.

remaining amendment in this chapter.

Mr. McFARLAND. I know it is the only remaining amendment in this chapter, but there are three or four other chapters.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming accept the amendment which has been suggested and take it to conference? It is an entirely new amendment on the part of the Senate, and will be in controversy.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, one of the best subcommittees in the Appropriations Committee considered this chapter of the bill. They heard the proof. They took the evidence. They have gone through weeks of hearings, and I say that I am unwilling to agree to take the amendment to conference. In my opinion, it would not be right to do so. I should be opposed to it, and so, probably, would most of the other Senators. If the amendment were taken to conference and not retained we would then be put in a false position. Someone would say, "We are not treating the Senate fairly, because the Senate voted to include it in the bill." If Senators agree to the amendment, very well, but I oppose it.

Mr. AIKEN. Is it not true that the hearings on this peacetime program were held by the committee before the start of the Korean war, or the Korean police action?

Mr. McKELLAR. That made it all the more necessary that the committee amendment be agreed to. Those ships are vitally needed in the defense, not of Korea, but of the United States. Senators are voting against the United States, when they vote for what is now proposed.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I resent that statement. The Senator from Tennessee knows that these ships cannot be finished for 3 years. Does the Senator think it will take 3 or 4 years to put an end to the Korean invasion? That is a silly thing to say, and it is an unkind thing, too.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is also a very improper thing for one Senator to rise and say that another Senator is acting silly or talking in a silly manner.

Mr. AIKEN. It is no more appropriate for the Senator from Tennessee to say that the Senator from Vermont is working against the United States than it is for the Senator from Vermont to say the same thing about the Senator from Tennessee, and to say that he is trying to force an unnecessary burden on the country.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if that is the attitude of the Senator from Vermont, and if that is the way he feels about it, I refuse to yield further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion, as the Chair stated it. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. McFARLAND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hoey	Maybank
Anderson	Holland	Morse
Bricker	Humphrey	Mundt
Bridges	Hunt	Myers
Byrd	Ives	Neely
Capehart	Johnson, Colo.	O'Mahoney
Chapman	Johnson, Tex.	Pepper

Hill	Martin	Young

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment appearing on page 326 was adopted. On this motion the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, does the proviso on page 326 apply to the amount involved?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is a part of the committee amendment.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BENTON], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LEAHY], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from Arkansas

[Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WITHERS] are absent by leave of the Senate.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], and the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] are detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—34

So Mr. DOUGLAS' motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I move on page 326, line 17, to strike out "$64,875,000" and to substitue in lieu thereof "$23,775,000", making a saving of $41,100,000 and giving the Maritme Commission along with the $63,000,000 provided on page 325, a total of $86,775,000 with which they can carry out all the construction for which they have made commitments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I insist that the yeas and nays were demanded before the result of the vote was announced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the demand for the yeas and nays sufficiently seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have the question stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois to the committee amendment, on page 326, line 17, to strike out "$64,875,000," and to insert in lieu thereof "$23,775,000."

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FERGUSON. Is it not true that the Chair had announced the vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had announced it, but it was brought to the attention of the Chair that the demand for the yeas and nays had been made before the announcement was made, and the Chair wants to be fair to every Senator.

Mr. TOBEY. Does not the Chair think that was a figment of the imagination?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would not pass on that.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, the amendment about to be voted on is most important. The appropriation recommended should not be eliminated at this time, when the United States needs ships for both troops and supplies. I insist that a vote in favor of this reduction in the appropriation would be a vote against the defense of the United States of America.

Senators may say what they care to about 3 or 4 years being required to build these ships; suppose it takes 5 or 6 years. We may need them 5 or 6 years from now more than we need them today.

Merely because some of us might not have liked the work of the Maritime Commission is no excuse for the Senate to take action which will adversely affect the defense of the United States. If Senators want to do that—and I do not believe they do—then they will cast their votes in favor of the proposed reduction.

To say that this appropriation was placed in the bill before the Korean war broke out is not a valid argument. If the appropriation was needed at the time the bill was drawn, it is needed threefold today, and I plead with the Senate not to vote against the defense of the country, not to vote against giving supplies which are needed by the boys who are fighting in Korea.

Mr. President, we hear question raised as to whether the President has declared an emergency. That is immaterial. We know that the United States is in a period of emergency. There is no dispute about that. There is no dispute that the boys of the Nation are dying on the battle front, and I say for the United States Senate to vote to cut down appropriations with which to build ships and furnish supplies is to vote against the defense of the Nation, to vote against those who are fighting for us in Korea.

Mr. President, I plead with my colleagues with all the power at my command to stand by the committee which heard the evidence. There are many items which could be cut with more reason than this one. The people will be looking at this vote. They are going to look to see whether the Senate is willing to support the boys on the battle front. I hope the item will not be cut.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I intend to vote for the reduction in the appropriation for a completely different reason from that referred to by the Senator from Arizona. I am just as strongly in favor of providing adequate defense as he is—and we all are for that. But the situation is simply this: Since 1947 there has been for ship construction an estimated obligation of approximately $321,000,000. I am speaking from memory, and these figures may be somewhat out of line. All that we have paid in cash is about $141,000,000, leaving approximately $179,000,000 still to pay.

For new ship construction this year there is appropriated, approximately, in contract authority, $63,000,000 and $5,000,000 cash. That money is for two new passenger ships to go into the South American and Caribbean trade; a third ship, to cost $10,000,000, is a Navy prototype ship. I believe that is a ship that is an experiment, intended to go from San Francisco to Los Angeles. It will take on trailer trucks in San Francisco, and put new mules on the trailers in Los Angeles. I may not be correct in that, but I believe I am.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Let me complete a very brief statement. The amounts agreed upon by the House and the Senate committee are the same. I believe we should send this matter to conference, not necessarily with the idea of ultimately cutting down the appropriation, but of keeping control of the situation so that we can see what is going to be built in this time of crisis. The Senate committee approved these ships prior to the Korean crisis. If we put this matter into conference by this reduction, we can work out the question of what kind of ships should be built, and keep control of it in Congress.

If my understanding is correct, and we approve the committee action, as I did approve it in the subcommittee, we will have no more control over what ships shall be built, we will leave it entirely to the Maritime Commission and the administration to decide.

Mr. President, I believe we should keep our control on this subject up to the last minute.

Mr. FERGUSON and Mr. O'MAHONEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield first to the Senator from Michigan, and then I will yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. FERGUSON. I wish to ask whether or not the evidence shows that the contracts have been let on the two South American vessels for the South American service?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator is sure these vessels are not for our war effort, is he?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. If my memory of the testimony is correct, they are newer, faster passenger ships, for the trade with South America.

Mr. FERGUSON. The one vessel that was to carry trailers from Los Angeles to San Francisco, and back and forth, would not be considered a defense vessel, would it?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. It might be considered a defense vessel. It could be used for carrying tanks, and that sort of thing, if a war came. As I understand, they take the trailer aboard in San Francisco, and put a new mule on it in Los Angeles.

Mr. FERGUSON. Would it not be used for shipments to and from San Francisco? It is for the local traffic, is it not?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. It is for local traffic, but it could be used in time of war by being taken over by the Navy. That is my understanding, but I may be wrong.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think the Senator is mistaken in his idea of the amendment which is under consideration. We would be taking this matter out of the hands of the conferees by supporting the amendment. We are dealing with the language which appears in italics on page 326, line 17. Of the amount there, $5,500,000 has already been obligated for certain cargo prototype ships, and $1,100,000 has been assigned to some other work. Of course, there are the two trailer ships to be run by the Pacific Coast Steamship Co. This appropriation was carried in last year's appropriation bill at a very much larger sum, but the committee in approving it did so with the purpose of taking the matter to conference, where we could then decide exactly how much was needed.

I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that in voting to reject the committee amendment he would merely be voting to deprive the Senate and the Congress of the opportunity to examine the whole matter in conference, as we had intended to do. The vessels of which the Senator spoke to me earlier in the evening are covered in an appropriation item on the previous page. So this is evidence that we are legislating by guesswork, and I suggest to Members of the Senate that it is much better and much wiser to accept the judgment of the committee, and work the matter out in conference.

The argument here would seem to convey the impression that the members of the committee were not concerned with saving money for the United States; that they were concerned only in making appropriations which could be wasted by a Maritime Commission no longer in existence, which has been reorganized out of existence. Whereas the committee was motivated solely by the idea of providing the funds by which the United States should acquire the maritime fleet necessary in the judgment of the legislative committees for the national defense.

The amendment should be defeated.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. KERR. No Member of this body has a higher regard for the great Committee on Appropriations than I have, and no Member of this body has any deeper consciousness of the need for every provision for the national defense. As I understand, we are voting on a motion to reduce the amount of an authorization in the bill, and we are doing so after the evidence has been brought before us that the agency to which the authorization is being made has told a Member of the body that they are unable to commit the $64,000,000 either within the 12 months for which the appropriation is made, or to give the committee or the Senate information as to what they would do with it if the money were made available to them.

The Senator from Oklahoma asked the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] if that was correct, and if information was before him that this amount was in excess of that which the agency had advised him they were either able to spend or to contract within the fiscal period. The distinguished chairman of the subcommittee replied that that was a very pertinent question, for which he complimented the Senator, and then he ignored it. I see no reason, Mr. President, to vote for an authorization with reference to which the agency to which it is authorized is unable to spend it or commit it in the period for which it is made.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Oklahoma that when he asked me that question, for which I complimented him, he was talking about an altogether different section of the bill.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee may have misunderstood the Senator from Oklahoma, but his statement just made has to be either a misunderstanding or a statement based on the wrong impression.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KERR. I yield to the great Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator spoke of the amendment as an authorization. It is not an authorization at all. It is an appropriation of cash.

Mr. KERR. Then the answer goes to the amount of the cash, because the agency has said it can neither spend it nor contract for it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KERR. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Does the Senator from Oklahoma know that our shipping capacity today is less than it was at the beginning of World War II after Pearl Harbor? Does the Senator realize the deplorable condition of our shipping? How does the Senator figure that we can raise more troops, spend more money, prepare for war across many seas, over great distances, and neglect the important point of shipping? How can the Senator reconcile those great differences?

Mr. KERR. The Senator from Oklahoma does not understand the wisdom either of authorizing or appropriating money to an agency which says it can neither spend it nor contract for it within the period for which it is made. With reference to its being an appropriation or an authorization, as I read the language of the bill, it is:

> That not to exceed $64,875,000 of the funds and contract authority——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KERR. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator read the testimony which has been furnished him to the effect that the agency will not use this money? There was no such testimony before the committee. I am wondering where the Senator obtained the testimony.

Mr. KERR. I believe the Senator was on the floor when the letter was read, and if it was inaccurate, the chairman of the committee has not so advised the Senate or the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KERR. I yield the floor, and the Senator from Wyoming may claim it in his own right.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that a few moments ago I told the Senator that he was talking about a different amendment from that about which he was talking when he addressed his inquiry to me.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma is probably the best judge of what he had in his mind both when he addressed the question to the Senator from Wyoming and when he addressed his remarks to the Senate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am not altogether certain about that matter.

Mr. KERR. Then let me assure the Senator from Wyoming that I accord him the privilege of telling this body what is in his mind, and I reserve the privilege of telling the Senate what is in my mind.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If I may ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question or two: Did he address an inquiry to me which was based upon the letter of Mr. Koehler, which was read by the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. KERR. It was related to it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have a copy of it in my hand now and I will read from the letter:

> Reference is made to your letter of June 29, 1950, concerning an item of $63,000,000 in the 1951 appropriation bill.

The Senator is talking about an item of $64,875,000.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The two items have to be considered together, the authorization for $63,000,000 made by the House, and the additional authorization of $64,875,000 made by the Senate committee.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That might be.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Or a total of $127,875,000.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Very good.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, the total possible appropriations for ships which the Maritime Commission, according to its own statement, can consider, would be $86,000,000, or $41,000,000 less than the sum total in these two features.

Since we at present are considering only committee amendments, and it is not appropriate at this time to consider House language, my amendment strikes out the committee authorization by reducing it by $41,100,000 in order to bring the global or total sum provided on pages 325 and 326 to the maximum amount which the Maritime Administration, according to its own statement, says it can spend, namely $86,775,000.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, that is precisely the point to which I am addressing myself. It is highly technical. It indicates the difficulty of coming to an understanding about matters of this kind in a hectic debate upon the floor of the Senate. But the issue arose here: "Where is the evidence that the money is not to be expended?" The evidence was the letter of Mr. Koehler. That is the evidence that was cited by the Senator from Illinois. All in the world I am saying is that the Senator's inquiry to Mr. Koehler, and Mr. Koehler's reply refer solely to an item on page 325, whereas we are now discussing an amendment on page 326.

It might be advisable to cut appropriations. I am not discussing that question now. But I am merely pointing out the confusion to which the debate has led. I cite that confusion as evidence of the fact that in my judgment the Senate would do much better to trust the judgment of its committee and take this matter to conference than merely to cut the appropriation on the basis of an argument which is obviously not based on evidence.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The statement by the Senator from Wyoming respecting the amount of page 326 is entirely correct. I thought we were dealing with page 325, and that this item will be taken to conference, will be considered in conference.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am very happy to have the Senator say that. So I say let us vote down the amendment, and take the matter to conference.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, the amount in line 17, page 326, is a carry-over. It is a carry-over of both kinds of funds.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would prefer to say "extension."

Mr. FERGUSON. At any rate, the money is now committed for that purpose, and they have the money.

I think the Senator from Illinois is correct in saying that if we cut that figure, our action will be the same as cutting the figure on page 325.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is correct. We thus reduce somewhat the total amount.

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes, we reduce somewhat the total amount.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is correct.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I think the testimony on page 180 indicates that these contracts are not let at the present time, because Mr. Marshall said:

> The budget presentation, Mr. Chairman, was to provide for the construction of either two or three combination passenger-cargo vessels for use in the North Atlantic, East Coast, South American trade, to be purchased by Moore-McCormack Lines with a construction differential subsidy.

They are not even sure whether the Moore-McCormack Lines will purchase them, at the present time. Certainly they will have no connection with the war effort at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois to the committee amendment on page 326, in line 17.

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, of course there is some point to the remarks made by the Senator from Wyoming to the effect that there are two items here, one in line 17, on page 325, in the amount of $63,000,000, which should be a new appropriation for the construction of new commercial ships, not defense ships, but new commercial ships for passenger traffic, in the main; and one of the next page, page 326, where there is an almost equal item—in the amount of $64,875,000—that being a limitation on the amounts previously appropriated in the 1950 act to be permitted to be expended for a particular subject, namely, the construction of new ships, including reconditioning, betterment, and so forth.

The Senator from Illinois has addressed his amendment to a proposed reduction which certainly is justified on the basis of the specific statement of the Acting Administrator of the Maritime Commission. The amendment is certainly justified by that statement. The Senator has addressed his amendment to the latter amount, rather than to the former one.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, if the Senator from Tennessee will not permit me to make my statement on this matter without interruption.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to call the Senator's attention to the proviso on page 326, to which reference has been made. Objection has been made on the ground that these ships will not be built because the appropriation will expire at the end of the fiscal year.

However, the language there is:

> Provided further, That not to exceed $64,875,000 of the funds and contract authority made available for new ship construction, including reconditioning and betterment, in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1950, shall continue to be available until December 31, 1950.

So that extends the time, and therefore the ships can be built.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. McFARLAND. The Senator has said that these ships are to be used for commercial purposes. However, does the Senator think for a moment that every ship needed for the transportation of troops or for other military purposes will not be converted, if conversion is necessary, just as was done in World War I and in World War II? Does the Senator think that the ships needed for such purpose will be used for other purposes?

As was well pointed out by the distinguished chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], who has given careful consideration to this matter, our supply of ships now is smaller than it was at the beginning of World War II.

So I simply cannot understand the Senator's argument that these ships would not be available and valuable for national-defense purposes.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I appreciate the remarks of the Senator from Arizona. If he were correct in his understanding—but he is not—that this appropriation would be used for defense shipping, I would be in there pitching with him. However, the Senator from Arizona is incorrect in his understanding. No mere statement on the floor of the Senate that this particular appropriation is a defense appropriation makes it so. This is not by any manner or means a defense appropriation.

As a matter of fact, Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois to the committee amendment is addressed to a carry-over from an appropriation made in 1950. It could more properly have been addressed to the appropriation of $63,000,000 proposed to be made this year. In either case, it would not have been a defense appropriation, because in either case it was an appropriation for the building or the reconditioning of merchant vessels; and instead of being a defense appropriation, I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that it is crystal clear from the statement of the Acting Administrator that some of this item is actually defense in reverse, as was stated by the Senator from Illinois, because it is proposed to spend $9,500,000 in converting ships now available for troop transportation, ships which were built for use as troop transports, and to convert them into use as commercial liners. So instead of having accomplished something in the national defense, we would have gone in reverse, away from national defense.

Therefore, Mr. President, I wish to say again to the Senate—because I think every Senator wishes to support defense appropriations and defense spending and planning—that this particular appropriation is not a defense appropriation.

In making this statement, I address myself again to the distinguished Senator from Colorado. This appropriation is one addressed to the last amount mentioned, which is a carry over from 1950, or to the first amount mentioned—the amount of $63,000,000. In either case the appropriation is not a defense appropriation. To the contrary, it is an appropriation for the construction of commercial vessels or for the conversion of troop ships into commercial ships.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, let me ask whether he is referring to the construction of the vessels General Pope and General Weigel.

Mr. HOLLAND. I do not believe that is what is involved. I do not believe the Senator was present when this matter was first discussed.

Let me say that I do not believe this is an occasion for heat; and if I appear to be heated, certainly I do not mean to be.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. However, the Senator from Illinois tells me that this item relates to the General Pope and General Weigel.

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, they represent a part of it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. But those ships have been ordered out.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, the fact is that this has to do with two items, one appropriated in 1950—and certainly it was not a defense appropriation—and the other proposed to be appropriated this year, on the basis of a budget submitted last fall, and certainly that item is not a defense appropriation.

The best proof of the fact that it is not a defense appropriation is the letter obtained by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] specifically answering special questions with reference to what was proposed to be done with the $63,000,000 item of newly requested funds under the appropriation bill to go into effect at the beginning of the coming fiscal year.

Mr. President, I shall not weary the Senate by rereading each of those provisions. However, it will be found that in answering the questions, the Acting Administrator stated to the Senator from Illinois that the vessels which were to be covered by the contract authority, under the $63,000,000, were new vessels for the "Good Neighbor Fleet" vessels to replace some vessels now 20 years old, operating along the east coast of South America.

The second question was:

Have any formal applications been filed by the companies who would benefit from this contract authority?

The answer was:

No formal applications have been filed for the construction of passenger vessels by any company or companies for operation on Trade Route No. 1. Further in this connection, see answer to question No. "4," appearing hereinafter.

Mr. President, under those first two questions, the plan is to construct two new ships for the "Good Neighbor Fleet," to operate along the east coast of South America, in the Atlantic Ocean; and it is said that up to the time of the writing of that letter on July, no application for replacement ships had been filed by any of the companies which now are using the 20-year-old ships. So this item is proposed in connection with looking a good long way ahead.

The next question was:

According to present calculations, is it reasonable to assume that these contracts will be let before June 30, 1951?

In other words, before the end of the fiscal year for which the appropriation bill now before the Senate is to be passed. I particularly call this matter to the attention of Senators, Mr. President.

The answer was:

At the time our 1951 budget was filed, it was believed that it would be possible to execute contracts for the construction and sale to a private company of the necessary passenger-carrying vessels to replace the "Good Neighbor Fleet." Our latest and very recent estimate is that contracts with respect to such new vessels cannot be awarded until about November 1, 1951.

That is after this fiscal year has passed and the fall of next fiscal year is at hand.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. KERR. What is the date of the letter containing that statement?

Mr. HOLLAND. The date of the letter is July 18, 1950, and it is written by the Acting Administrator of the Maritime Commission to the distinguished junior Senator from Illinois, replying to specific questions; and those questions were designed to bring out—I call this to the attention of the Senate—whether this was defense construction; if so, how soon it could be gotten under way; and, if it was not defense construction, then what type it was, and how soon they would expect to get that under way. If there ever was a clear showing of the fact that this is not defense construction but is a construction project for the future, and some of it for the very remote future, a construction of commercial liners, not at all designed to take part in the defense effort, of course, this letter is crystal clear on both those points.

I shall not continue to read the rest of the information that is in the letter. It is perfectly clear, at least to the junior Senator from Florida, that the wise thing to do is to lay the predicate for a real conference on the amount—I emphasize, on the amount—between the House and the Senate.

So far as the junior Senator from Florida is concerned, if by the time this bill is in conference there are items of proposed defense construction or proposed defense conversion—reminding Senators again that the conversion here is nondefense, it is away from defense—if there are specific items which can be approved by the conference committee in its judgment, of course the Senate I am sure will want to approve them, and the entire Congress will want to approve them.

We are being asked here to approve the extension of a large number of peacetime appropriations made last year, for the fiscal year 1950, and a great deal of new appropriation proposed to be made this year for peacetime construction and peacetime conversion. I say to the Senate that instead of being a defense measure, this is operating in reverse, exactly as the Senator from Illinois has said, and that it seems to me that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] has indeed put his finger on the real prospect of getting something constructive out of this; that is, to take this amendment to conference and insist upon there working out a defense program for Maritime Commission conversion, and, if necessary, construction.

Mr. O'MAHONEY and Mr. MCKELLAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield, and if so to whom?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield first to the distinguished chairman of the committee.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I may say that if the amendment of the Senator from Illinois goes to conference, the $64,000,000 item will not then be in conference. The only thing that will be in conference will be the $23,000,000; and the House has already fixed it at that sum. The conference will be able to do nothing with it. The Senator is just not familiar with it. The members of the committee who had it in charge were familiar with it. They worked hard on it. They gave their best judgment to the matter, and the full committee, regardless of whether they were Democrats or Republicans, overwhelmingly voted to report the committee amendment; and now we find Senators who voted in committee to report the bill, with this amount, now opposing it.

Mr. HOLLAND. I share the remarks of the Senator from Tennessee. I may say, however, I think some Senators on this floor know a little more about this appropriation than the distinguished Senator seems to think. We know that the 1950 appropriation was a peacetime appropriation for peacetime work, and we know that the budget submitted last year for appropriation this year was again a peacetime budget for peacetime construction. We also know the letter which is before the Senate, and the facts in it are within the knowledge of every Senator. Every Senator in his own conscience must have knowledge that this program is a peacetime program, that it is a civilian prorgam, and that, so far as defense is concerned, it operates in reverse.

We have an official statement from the Acting Administrator to the effect that a large part of this appropriation cannot be employed, the contracts cannot even be made until November 1951, and other large parts of it, parts relating to conversion, have to do with conversion in reverse, from troop ships into commercial carriers. We also know, Mr. President and Senators, that if we are in a critical defense situation—and certainly we have many reasons to make us think so—any construction of large peacetime liners is not going to be permitted; they are not going to be laid down; they are not going to be constructed, because the shipyards are going to be utilized in repairing, rehabilitating, reconditioning, and converting the large number of ships laid up and available but not now of course ready to be used overnight.

Mr. O'MAHONEY and Mr. HUMPHREY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield, and if so to whom?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield first to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Florida to turn to page 326 of the bill, where in line 17, he will see the item to which the amendment of the Senator from Illinois is directed. The Senator will observe that that item is in italics. All that item, from line 4 down to line 21, will be in conference, and by any amendment that the Senate now makes with respect to that figure, we shall be reducing the area of the conference. The Senator from Massachusetts was of the opinion that we were dealing with a provision which the House had passed, but when I called his attention to the fact, he saw that it was an amendment added by the Senate committee, and that the elimination of this amendment would be removing the matter from conference.

Now, I can understand a Senator's voting to reduce an appropriation; I can understand arguments that may be made for that. But I want to assure the Senator from Florida, and all who have listened to his very eloquent argument, that if, as he said a moment ago, it is a constructive thing to take this matter to conference, then the only way to do it is to allow the amount reported by the Senate committee to remain in the bill.

Of course, if it is reduced—I must be quite frank, then the amount that may be allowed will remain in conference. But if Senators think we are wasting money, or trying to waste money, I should like to read some of the other language of this amendment: Beginning in line 4 I read:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation or contract authorization shall be used (1) to start any new ship construction for which an estimate was not included in the budget for the current fiscal year or (2) to start any new ship construction the currently estimated cost of which exceeds by 10 percent the estimated cost included therefor in such budget unless, in either case, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget specifically approves the start of such ship construction and the Director shall submit forthwith a detailed explanation thereof to the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and of the House of Representatives.

I am pointing that out because I want the Senate to realize that its committee has been endeavoring to protect the Treasury.

I do not pretend, Mr. President, that we are building warships. When I read the showing with respect to defense, I was not pretending we were building troop ships. But I say to the Senator from Florida, and to every other Senator, that by the degree we build up communication by sea with other areas and other lands, we shall be serving the interests of the United States. The fund which would be provided by the $64,875,000 would cover the following items: Some passenger vessels for the Caribbean service; two trailer ships for the Pacific coast.

The Senator from California pointed out to us that with respect to those trailer ships for the Pacific coast, through no fault of the shipowners, the contracts were delayed, and they asked specific action by the committee not to make it available for 12 months, but to make it available until December 31, 1950.

So, Mr. President, we can act wisely and intelligently only by a parliamentary method. Arguments may be made for the reduction of an appropriation which the House approved and the Senate did not touch but such an amendment would go to conference, of course, and would fall into an utterly different category from that of this amendment; and if we strike it out, we deprive the conferees of the opportunity of determining whether the money should be spent for those vessels.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I think the distinguished Senator has fallen into error, and if he will follow me I believe he will see that I am correct.

The House bill does not end with the $63,000,000 figure on line 17, but has itself a proviso somewhat of the same nature, covering the same subject matter of the committee amendment down to line 17. But on line 17, the Senate committee, and I think it was very wise, began to treat as one great, going matter the business of the Nation, with the hold-over or carry-over appropriation from last year with the proposed new one for this year. There is, of course, some change in the proviso, and I should not want to be considered as saying that there is not. There is some change in the first part of the amendment over the House provision, but the second part of the amendment is entirely new matter, so far as this bill is concerned.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is quite correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. The result of making this reduction would be to cut down the amount of the carry-over, or that part of it which would be applied to new construction, by the amount which is so clearly shown by the letter of the Acting Administrator to be not needed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. And the Senate would be taking that much commerce from the Nation.

Mr. HOLLAND. It seems clear to the junior Senator from Florida that while that amendment could very properly have been addressed to the $63,000,000, and while, in his judgment, as he stated a while ago, that would have been the preferable place to apply it, at the same time, that was not pending. The matter pending was the adoption of a proposed committee amendment which, if it were adopted and the House provision left undisturbed, would have provided for $63,000,000 plus a carry-over of $64,875,000 for new construction, which is not, by any stretch of the imagination, defense construction.

It seems clear that the item which the letter from the Acting Administrator says is not needed, which does not apply to defense, and will not be used because the contracts cannot be let, according to his letter, until 1951, should be omitted. So there are left in the lap of the conference committee two things: First, what the specific provision shall be as to the limitations based on the $63,000,000; and, second, how much of the preceding carry-over appropriation shall be left available for new construction. It seems to me there is no question about that, and, so far as the junior Senator from Florida is concerned, without further debate he is perfectly willing to vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator says that by no stretch of the imagination can this appropriation be considered a defense measure. All the ships as they are constructed must, in every case, be approved by the Navy. I am sure that if the Secretary of the Navy were here tonight and were permitted to testify on the floor, he would say to the Senate, "These are the kinds of ships we need—fast, new, modern ships, which can be converted to the carriage of troops." I am sure that is exactly what he would say. I do not believe he would agree with the Senator from Florida that by no stretch of the imagination can they be considered defense ships. They are certainly defense ships. They are approved by the Navy in each case, and they cannot be constructed unless the Navy approves them.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, despite the desire of Senators to vote, I should like to have some information. The purpose is to provide for the reconditioning and repair of vessels, in other words, the so-called Liberty ships. I should like to know whether this amount of money is for new construction or whether all or a part of it is to be used for the purpose of repair or renovation of ships now lying in dock and which are not in a good state of repair.

Mr. HOLLAND. In reply to the Senator, I would say that the portion of the construction provided for under the 1950 appropriation act, which is stated in the letter to which I have referred, does not touch the item the Senator has mentioned, but, instead, relates to various passenger vessels for the Grace Line and trailer ships for the Pacific coast. It has no relation whatever to the subject matter which he mentions.

I think the Senator has put his finger on exactly the same question on which the Senator from Massachusetts put his finger, namely, that by adopting this amendment we can leave it in the discretion of the conference committee, with the guidance which it will have from the Maritime Commission and the Navy, to convert the program, in as great an amount as it can be converted, into a defense program

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is what the Senator from Minnesota wanted to know.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I should like to answer the Senator by reading the law. The Senator will not take my opinion; he will take the law. The trouble with this debate is that we talk without facts and do not depend upon the law. The amendment which is before the Senate is as follows:

Provided further, That not to exceed $64,875,000 of the funds and contract authority made available for new ship construction, including reconditioning and betterment, in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1950, shall continue to be available until December 31, 1950.

I have in my hand Public Law 266, Eighty-first Congress, and I read from it as follows:

New ship construction, including reconditioning and betterment, as authorized by title V of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (except for construction of two prototype vessels under title VII of said act), $26,875,000, of which $12,000,000 is for payment of obligations incurred under authority granted under this head in the Supplemental Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1949, to enter into contracts for new ship construction an amount not to exceed $75,000,000; and in addition, the Commission is authorized to enter into contracts for new ship construction in an amount not to exceed $50,000,000.

So the amendment now before the Senate would provide the authority for $14,000,000 for reconditioning and betterment, and $50,000,000 for new construction. That can be any sort of construction the Government may deem essential in the present crisis.

Mr. HUMPHREY. In other words, the Senator is saying that we can use $14,000,000 of the $64,000,000 for the purpose of repairing the Naval Reserve ships.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Absolutely.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Or $14,000,000 of the $23,000,000, which would be provided under my amendment. So the reconditioning of ships would be taken care of under my amendment as well as under the committee amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. And $50,000,000 for new construction, which may be very essential.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I invite the attention of the Presiding Officer to page 326, line 17, to the figure "$64,875,000." If the amendment of the Senator from Illinois is agreed to, and $23,775,000 is substituted for the $64,875,000, what amount would go to conference?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair, the conferees could not consider a greater amount than is included in the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, if adopted by the Senate.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I merely wish to point out, in the light of the question asked by the Senator from Minnesota, that the Reserve Fleet is covered on page 330, line 1:

Reserve Fleet expenses, $8,978,600.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois to the committee amendment on page 326, line 17. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BENTON], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LEAHY], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WITHERS] are absent by leave of the Senate.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], and the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] are detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—30

Aiken	Hickenlooper	Schoeppel
Bridges	Holland	Smith, Maine
Byrd	Humphrey	Smith, N. J.
Capehart	Kem	Stennis
Douglas	Kerr	Taft
Eastland	McCarthy	Thye

Connally	Johnston, S. C.	Thomas, Okla.
Cordon	Kefauver	Thomas, Utah
Downey	Leahy	Vandenberg
Dworshak	Long	Wherry
Ellender	Lucas	Withers
Flanders	Magnuson

So Mr. DOUGLAS' amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the committee amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I should like to inquire of the Chair whether the amendment which I offered to the provision on page 326, line 17, has been rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I should like to inquire whether it would be appropriate, after the consideration of committee amendments has been concluded, to offer the same amendment to the House appropriation of $63,000,000 on line 17, page 325, of the House text?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That language would be open to amendment after the committee amendments have all been completed.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I shall offer the amendment at that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 326, line 17.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, does that complete the committee amendments in this chapter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the amendments in this chapter, and up to page 358.

INVITATION TO SENATORS TO VISIT WILLIAMSBURG

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a letter from the executive vice president of the Jamestown Corp., Mr. Allan R. Matthews, in which he extends a very cordial invitation to all Members of the Senate to come to Williamsburg next Sunday, July 30, at the fourth annual legislative day, to be the guests of the corporation for the beautiful historic pageant, The Common Glory. Each Senator who can go will be furnished with two free tickets to the pageant. The letter states that ample accommodations can be secured for those who wish to spend the night in Williamsburg. Any Senator who wishes to take advantage of this offer should let me know, so that I can make reservations for the tickets to the pageant.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE JAMESTOWN CORP.,
Williamsburg, Va., July 24, 1950.

Hon. A. WILLIS ROBERTSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR ROBERTSON: On July 30, 1950, the Jamestown Corp., in cooperation with the Governor of Virginia, will be host at its fourth annual legislative day, a day which commemorates the date on which the Virginia House of Burgesses, the first freely elected governing body on the North American Continent came into existence.

In observance of the day, the General Assembly of Virginia will hold a commemorative session at the Old Jamestown Church at Jamestown Island, site of the first permanent English colony on this continent. Speakers will include Vice Admiral J. Leslie Hall, former Commandant of the Fifth Naval District, and Virginia's Governor Battle.

After that meeting, members of the general assembly and other guests will participate in a picnic-box supper on the grounds at Jamestown, and at 8:15 p. m., that day, the same group will be guests of the Jamestown Corp. at a performance of Paul Green's historical drama, The Common Glory, which tells the story of American Colonies' fight for independence.

In view of the nature of the observance and of the significance at this time of the drama's message, the Jamestown Corp. will be happy if you will invite your colleagues in the United States Senate to attend both the commemorative session and the performance of the play and we earnestly hope many of them will be able to be present. We should like to hear from those who plan to come in order that arrangements may be made for their suppers. Two complimentary tickets to The Common Glory will be set aside at our box office for each Senator who is able to be here.

For your information, I am notified that sufficient space is available at the Williamsburg Inn on Sunday to accommodate those who would like to remain overnight in Williamsburg.

Looking forward to having you with us on Sunday, I am,

Sincerely yours,

ALLEN R. MATTHEWS,
Executive Vice President.

MISSION OF STANLEY EARL TO KOREA

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to ask to have an editorial inserted in the RECORD, and have a minute or two to explain the insertion.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a part of my remarks in the body of the RECORD an editorial which appeared in the Portland Oregonian of July 21, 1950, entitled "Mr. Earl's Mission."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MR. EARL'S MISSION

It has been inevitable that Stanley Earl, of Portland, returning from his duties with the Economic Cooperation Administration in Korea and speaking out with admirable frankness on the conditions which have existed in South Korea and which have abetted Communist penetration, should be quoted and misquoted in the Communist press of the United States and the world.

This page also, having pointed out in a number of editorials that all was not well below the thirty-eighth parallel, has been quoted and misquoted by the rats among us who lie in wait for such opportunity.

Mr. Earl's position seems to be exactly the position which this page has taken—that the laboratory test of war has shown that we had neglected reform during our period of Korean occupancy and that consequently there was no loyalty for us among the masses of the people. These people had, and have, no desire for communism. Generally speaking, they appear to detest it. But they have been under a police state from which American occupancy had failed to release them, and apathy has been the result.

This is unsavory stuff, but it is material that all of us need to assimilate, and particularly our Government. We have to make the decision as to whether, when we go back into command of Korea, we are going to make democracy a true force for reform. Or is it to be a repetition of our lending ourselves to what Mr. Earl has described as a police state.

Mr. Earl has been called to Washington. We hope he continues to tell the facts as he sees them. It is a mission of the highest patriotism.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to say, in regard to this editorial, that Mr. Earl, an Oregonian, was appointed some months ago as the representative of ECA in behalf of the labor mission of ECA in Korea.

Mr. Earl found conditions in South Korea very unsatisfactory so far as the free-labor movement was concerned, and upon his return to the United States some days ago he made some statements in an interview with a newspaper correspondent of the Portland Oregonian concerning conditions in South Korea as he found them to be. The Daily Worker picked up Mr. Earl's comments and gave widespread publicity to them, seeking, of course, to give the impression that Mr. Earl was in effect a witness for the Communist position in Korea. This editorial of the Portland Oregonian goes to that question.

Mr. President, I desire to say that I have known Mr. Stanley Earl for a great many years. He is an avowed enemy of everything communistic. He has fought the Communists in the CIO, both in Oregon and in the country generally. He is known as a labor leader within the right wing of the CIO. I happen to know that his appointment as a labor representative for the labor mission in Korea by ECA had the support of the A. F. of L. and of the CIO, and when he spoke in South Korea he spoke for the American labor movement, the CIO, the A. F. of L., the brotherhoods, indeed, the entire American labor movement.

Any criticism of Mr. Earl because of any statement he has made in regard to conditions as he found them in South Korea is not justified on the basis of any ground that Mr. Earl in any sense is the least bit sympathetic to communism. It is true that as we read his interview—and I understand it is also true if we will read some of the reports which Mr. Earl during the past few months has sent back to ECA and the State Department—we discover he found some conditions in South Korea in need of great improvement, just as the junior Senator from Oregon some time ago on the floor of the Senate tried to forewarn the Senate with regard to some of the internal conditions in South Korea which needed the immediate attention of the United States, which they did not get, but, instead, apparently we withdrew from Korea, when, in my judgment, we should have been moving into Korea with both military aid and economic aid. Our failure to do so raises a question which calls for an answer, in my opinion, on the part of the State Department.

Let me say, in this great hour of crisis, as one who is going to give unlimited support to the administration in meeting the crisis, that I am not going to justify any of the mistakes in Korea, and particularly the mistakes of the State Department, which I think helped augment the seriousness of the situation in which we now find ourselves in Korea.

For my part, I am glad there was someone in the Korean Mission who, when he returned to the United States, in an interview with an Oregonian correspondent spoke out and told what he found to be the conditions in Korea.

It behooves us to take steps now to see to it, not only in Korea, but in some other parts of the world where we find ourselves coming to the assistance of some very reactionary governments, that American principles are put into operation, so that we will not have a repetition of some of the causes of the Korean crisis which now confronts us, causes which are leading now to the death of American boys in Korea.

Mr. President, it is a pretty serious matter when we find that conditions existed in South Korea as they did exist prior to this conference.

I want the RECORD to show that I enthusiastically support the finding which the Portland Oregonian hands down in its discussion of Mr. Earl's mission, when it defends his Americanism, and when it points out very clearly that he is anti-Communist not only in his beliefs, but in his whole record as a labor leader in the United States.

THE CASE OF MR. KRIPS—EDITORIALS FROM THE NEW YORK TIMES AND NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have placed in the body of the RECORD two editorials, both entitled "The Case of Mr. Krips," one from the New York Times of July 21, and the other from the New York Herald Tribune of July 20. I shall read the concluding portion of both of them.

At this time there is a great deal of talk about rearming western Germany. Yet when two of the outstanding men of Germany and Austria come to the United States they are met by the Immigration and Naturalization Service and sent back by the Department of Justice, without one single word of testimony being introduced against them. How do Senators suppose the German people felt when Walter Giesinger was sent back? How do Senators suppose the Austrian people felt when the great Austrian musician, Mr. Krips was sent back to Austria? The editorials will give some idea of what these great newspapers, the New York Herald Tribune and the New York Times, think about it. I read the last paragraph of the editorial from the Herald Tribune as follows:

There is no excuse for someone to be granted permission to come here on one side of the ocean and be deprived of it on the other. When as in this case, the person involved is a man of eminence, the affair makes America appear downright ridiculous. Surely some explanation is due in the case of Mr. Krips, and possibly an apology as well.

I read the last paragraph of the New York Times editorial as follows:

Rumor, hearsay, slander—these may be the bases on which an alien is excluded, and under our present practice he may not merely have no chance to fight back but he may not even know the nature of the charges. This is an outrageously undemocratic procedure. It demands revision. Surely, if they put their minds to it, Congress and the State and Justice Departments could work out a better and more democratic method of protecting the security of the United States against aliens suspected of subversion.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the two editorials may be printed at this point in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of July 21, 1950]

THE CASE OF MR. KRIPS

Refusal of the authorities to reveal why they barred Josef Krips, conductor of the Vienna State Opera, from entering the United States is the latest but not the worst in a long series of incidents that have made certain aspects of our immigration procedure look little short of ridiculous.

Josef Krips was scheduled to make his American debut leading the Chicago Symphony Orchestra Tuesday night, and to return to Austria within a few days. He received his visa from the American consul in Vienna without trouble; but on arrival here Sunday was detained without explanation by the immigration authorities for further investigation. Rather than wait at Ellis Island for the investigation to be completed, with the possibility that he would be deported without a hearing anyway, Mr. Krips decided to return to Europe without further ado. The upshot of this case is that no one—except perhaps the Immigration and Naturalization Service of the Justice Department—knows why he was barred from this country, nothing has been proved for or against him, a blot is inferentially left on his record, and an American audience has been deprived of becoming acquainted with a gifted conductor.

There is no question but that the Attorney General and the Immigration and Naturalization Service are acting within the law. The Attorney General has the power to deny admission to the United States of any alien whose presence he feels would be prejudicial to the interests of this country, and to deny admission without a hearing. But there is a very large question as to the wisdom of refusing to hold such a hearing, except perhaps in the most extreme emergency. What we are doing is to say to aliens who seek access to our shores that our democracy functions for everyone within our borders, but our democratic principles do not necessarily apply to those knocking at the gates.

Rumor, hearsay, slander—these may be the bases on which an alien is excluded, and under our present practice he may not merely have no chance to fight back but he may not even know the nature of the charges. This is an outrageously undemocratic procedure. It demands revision. Surely, if they put their minds to it, Congress and the State and Justice Departments could work out a better and more democratic method of protecting the security of the United States against aliens suspected of subversion.

[From the New York Herald Tribune of July 20, 1950]

THE CASE OF MR. KRIPS

The departure from these shores of Joseph Krips, conductor of the Vienna Opera, points up anew the curious lack of liaison that exists between the State Department and the Justice Department when it comes to allowing foreigners into the United States. Mr. Krips was invited here to conduct the Chicago Symphony Orchestra; he received a visa from the American Embassy in Vienna. Yet when he arrived he was taken to Ellis Island and told he must either depart voluntarily or else be detained pending an investigation of certain unspecified information against him. Mr. Krips, who shortly will begin to conduct at the Salzburg Festival in Austria, chose to leave.

Mr. Krips obviously is no nazi. He evidently was one of the few conductors with clean enough hands to be allowed to lead the Vienna Philharmonic immediately after the liberation; he has taken it on tour of all western Europe; he has achieved wide popularity in England; his phonograph records are well known here. He conducted in Russia in 1947 under the auspices of the Austrian Government, and in the absence of any statement by the immigration authorities, it must be presumed that this is the stumbling block to his admission. If this is so, the people who want to hear this musician perform are entitled to have the objection specified, so that they may judge its validity for themselves. There is no excuse for someone to be granted permission to come here on one side of the ocean and be deprived of it on the other. When, as in this case, the person involved is a man of eminence, the affair makes America appear downright ridiculous. Surely some explanation is due in the case of Mr. Krips, and possibly an apology as well.

THE WRECK OF A ST. LOUIS-BOUND FRISCO TRAIN—ARTICLE FROM THE WASHINGTON TIMES-HERALD

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, yesterday we heard a great deal from the junior Senator from South Dakota about the Mundt-Nixon bill. He said that one of the reasons we should immediately act upon the bill was that there had been a train wreck, he first said, in Maine, but when the distinguished Senator from Missouri rose and reminded him it must have been in Missouri, then the Senator from South Dakota changed the location to Missouri. But time and again during his speech he referred to the train wreck, and suggested that, in his opinion, subversive elements caused the wreck. I have here the Washington Times-Herald of this morning, in which there is an article entitled "Boy Confesses Train Wreck." The article is from Holland, Mo., July 24, and reads in part as follows:

Pemiscot County authorities arrested a 15-year-old sharecropper's son today and said he has admitted throwing a switch which caused the wreck of a St. Louis-bound Frisco lines train yesterday.

That is the first paragraph of the item, Mr. President. It all goes to show that in a time of hysteria, anything which may happen anywhere in the United States, no matter how bad, may be blamed on some organization or some person who is not at all guilty. To my mind what was said yesterday is a perfect example of what happens in a time of hysteria.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article may be printed in the body of the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOY CONFESSES TRAIN WRECK

HOLLAND, MO., July 24.—Pemiscot County authorities arrested a 15-year-old sharecropper's son today and said he has admitted throwing a switch which caused the wreck of a St. Louis-bound Frisco-lines train yesterday.

The train's engineer, Ira H. Woods, was killed and the fireman seriously injured when the locomotive struck the open switch. Thirteen passengers were slightly injured.

The boy reportedly told officers that he got the idea of wrecking the train from a moving picture he had seen. He said he stole a saw and threw it in a field after using it to saw the lock on the switch Saturday afternoon.

The saw was recovered when the boy led investigators to the scene.

He was taken to jail at Caruthersville pending the filing of formal charges.

BILLS TO BE INCLUDED IN THE CALL OF THE CALENDAR

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, in connection with the call of the calendar tomorrow may I ask the Senator from Arizona whether there has been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a list of bills which will be called, which appear on the calendar prior to the point at which the call of the calendar was ended on the last call?

Mr. McFARLAND. Yes; such a list was ordered printed in the RECORD earlier today.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I thank the Senator.

RECESS

Mr. McFARLAND. I move that the Senate stand in recess until noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 8 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, July 26, 1950, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JULY 25, 1950

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou whose resources of grace are inexhaustible and abundantly adequate, we pray that we may be numbered among the seekers and finders of God, for we need Thee so greatly and desperately in all the strange and various experiences of each new day.

Thou hast given us victory in days gone by and we are committing and commending ourselves to Thy care and keeping in the days to come.

May we have the courage to believe that the kingdom of God, the kingdom of brotherhood, will be established upon the earth, and may we be eager to hasten the coming of that blessed day of prediction when peace and good will shall prevail everywhere.

Hear us in the name of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on July 22, 1950, the President approved and signed a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 3532. An act for the relief of Mrs. Sirvart Arsenian.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. LANHAM asked and was given permission to address the House for 20 minutes on tomorrow, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

BRITISH OIL POLICY IN CHINA

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Speaker, on July 17 I called attention of the House to the report from Hong Kong that the British Asiatic Petroleum Co. was continuing sales of petroleum products to Chinese Communists and in fact were expanding sales to fill some of the gap left when two American companies, Socony and Caltex, quit doing business on the Chinese mainland.

I now arise to call attention to the news report of July 18 to the effect that the British policy on oil sales to China had been reversed.

It is my hope that this will continue to be the policy of the British and of the companies which are under the influence of the British Government. In these critical days every precaution should be taken to see that no materials and supplies from the United States or any of the countries allied with the United States in the effort to confine communism should reach the forces arrayed against us.

TAXES, TAXES—WHERE TO GET THE MONEY

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Truman did not spell out a tax program in his speech, although he indicated that additional taxes should be raised in order to pay for this Korean war in which he has entered our country.

Now, his first suggestion should be that he eliminate his $50,000 a year tax-exempt salary, which he receives in addition to his regular yearly salary of $100,000 and $40,000 expense money. He should also suggest the elimination of the $20,000 a year tax-exempt expense money which the Vice President and the Speaker of the House receive. These items were included in the first bill the President of the United States signed in the early days of the Eighty-first Congress. The $2,500 tax-free money all Members of the Congress receive in addition to their yearly salaries should also be taxed.

Let the pinch come to those who are behind this war and let them show that they are willing to lead the way. There is no better way to set an example to the people who are not responsible for this Korean expedition, as Mr. Truman calls it, but which seems to me to be a war of great magnitude. Let us lead the way in taxes, Mr. President and Mr. Speaker.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and include excerpts from a letter from a constituent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa.?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, an illustration of the contradictions found in our foreign policy is found in the foreign exchange field. For example, from Canada, I am informed United States citizens are permitted to bring in only $12,500 annually. At the very same time this administration can be expected to try to get Canada to participate more heavily in the present military effort in Korea by larger sharing in war contracts.

Certainly this ought to be an opportune time to secure exchange concessions from our neighbor on the north. Doubtless additional war contracts in Canada will ease the alleged dollar shortage there, and make possible much freer transfer of Candian funds to the United States.

I feel sure there are thousands of American citizens who would like to withdraw capital from Canada, but cannot now do so.

In addition, relaxation of exchange controls would encourage investment in Canadian enterprises. Who will send capital there knowing they cannot get it back, except in small annual amounts?

Relaxation of exchange controls throughout the world, and especially in English-speaking countries, would be a real contribution to better economic conditions and greater international stability.

Under unanimous consent granted by the House, I include portions of a letter on this subject received from a constituent:

DEAR MR. DOLLIVER: There is talk that Canada will obtain a bigger share of United States war contracts and certainly Canada will make a contribution in line with the Atlantic Pact.

In that event Canada will receive a large volume of dollar increase. This will enable her to buy American products needed for her own economy and she should ease foreign exchange regulations.

I am interested because I have been penalized due to Canadian foreign exchange regulations. * * * I am only allowed to export $12,500 annually and I am seriously hampered due therefrom and would like the use of this capital in Iowa now.

There are thousands of people in the United States similarly situated who want to withdraw capital from Canada but are prevented due to Canadian Foreign Exchange Board regulations.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE PROGRAM

Mr. SCUDDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCUDDER. Mr. Speaker, the United States Government today owns the dried equivalent of two dozen eggs for every man, woman, and child in the country. These eggs have been bought under a Department of Agriculture program designed to insure prosperity on the farms of this country through maintenance of high prices.

While the Agriculture Department has carried on this program, another Government department—the State Department—has continued its downward revision of tariff rates on eggs, as well as on many other products. At Geneva 2 years ago, the 27-cents-a-pound duty on dried eggs was reduced to 17 cents. The 27-cent figure was established in 1931 after an investigation of foreign egg production costs.

What happened after this decrease in import duty? In 1948, the United States imported 235,061 pounds of dried eggs from China. The following year—1949—that figure shot up to 1,903,038 pounds. For the first 5 months of 1950, the United States imported 1,744,285 pounds of dried eggs from China. A Department of Agriculture circular forecasts an increase in these figures.

American dollars are pouring into that Soviet satellite while our own Government buys surplus American eggs and stores them in a Kansas cave. Every pound of Chinese dried and frozen eggs bought in this country decreases the purchases from American farmers on the open market. This increases the Government's purchases, boosts our taxes, and increases the farmer's reliance upon the Government for his livelihood.

Mr. Speaker, we can do two things to end this intolerable situation. We can—and we should—call upon the State Department to take immediate action to restore the tariff rate to its former level. And, as a safeguard against future situations of this kind in our entire import trade, we should enact my bill, H. R. 6902, to restore the peril point and escape clause to the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. This would protect the American farmer, producer, and worker from competition by the cheap labor markets of the world.

CURSE OF COMMUNISM

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Speaker, the curse of communism threatens the liberty of all people throughout the world. The job of fighting its tyranny belongs to every person and every country which desires to preserve democracy and freedom.

On June 24, when the Communists of North Korea inexcusably attacked the South Koreans, the United Nations promptly called on the Democratic countries of the world to join together and resist that aggression. The people of the United States responded to that call. Today our young men are fighting and dying in the cause of freedom. Today our resources are being mobilized for whatever sacrifice may lie ahead.

It is a deadly serious struggle that is taking place in Korea, and the time has now come when all the nations who wish to preserve their independence should begin to assume their proportionate share of the burden of resistance. I am sure that no one wishes to ask a nation to do that, which because of its lack of resources or limited manpower, it is incapable of doing, but we must remember that the free peoples of the world are faced with a common threat to their liberty, and that they have a common task to perform.

Surely the sense of fairness which motivates the member nations of the United Nations will prompt them to make the same proportionate sacrifice in manpower and in resources as are the people of the United States.

We, here in America, are mobilizing our industry and our wealth; we are drafting our manpower, and the time has arrived when all the other countries of the United Nations believing in the ideals of freedom must take similar steps to ready themselves to meet their fair share of the job of turning back the Red forces of tyranny and oppression.

Let us hope that it will not be long before the combat troops of the various countries in the United Nations will be standing shoulder to shoulder as symbols of continuing democracy and freedom.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. DOLLIVER asked and was given permission to address the House for 15 minutes on Thursday next, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL ON INTERNATIONAL MONETARY AND FINANCIAL PROBLEMS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 658)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed, with illustrations:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a Report of the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems covering its operations from October 1, 1949, to March 31, 1950, and describing in accordance with section 4 (b) (5) of the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, the participation of the United States in the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development for the above period.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 25, 1950.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CAMP asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a letter from an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Georgia.

Mr. FLOOD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in three instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

Mr. FARRINGTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in three instances and include extraneous matter.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE asked and was given permission to extend her remarks and insert four separate articles by Frank C. Waldrop.

Mr. COLE of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and include newspaper articles.

Mr. CANFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a newspaper article.

Mr. PATTERSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and include newspaper articles.

Mr. McGREGOR asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a speech he made before the American Road Builders Association.

Mr. SHAFER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in three instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. MASON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. JONAS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include extraneous matter in connection therewith.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 315 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF ENLISTMENTS IN THE ARMED FORCES

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3937) to authorize the President to extend enlistments in the Armed Forces of the United States.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3937, with Mr. YOUNG in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this is the first measure to come before the House in response to the war in Korea. It is legislation of a type that Congress has previously enacted in similar times in World War I and World War II.

However, before discussing the bill, I want to make a few general observations on the present world situation as I see it.

To me it looks like our country is in this kind of shape.

Let us take the international picture first.

In international affairs, all the world today is a tinder box. Global war could begin at any time. Communist partisans have resorted to the use of arms in Korea and Indo-China. They have just conquered China. Malaya is in trouble. Burma is in trouble. Late news indicates that we may have trouble in Formosa, despite the President's warning to the Chinese Reds. Iran is a potential battlefield. The Balkans are, as usual, a powder keg. Border incidents are occurring all along between Yugoslavia and Bulgaria, Rumania, Hungary, and Albania. Greece is being threatened. The Russians keep the pressure on in Berlin. The Germans in the eastern part of that nation are organized into a Red army of dangerous size.

Russia has, in effect, walked out of the United Nations. Russian propaganda is violently attacking all western nations. Despite the United Nations action in respect to Korea, Russia is apparently furnishing military assistance to the northern Koreans. A Russian fifth column is working actively in all of the free nations of the world.

So, in the international arena, there is dynamite everywhere. We could have a world-wide explosion at any time. And no one knows what may happen tomorrow.

I think the international picture is as grim as it was at any time in the late 1930's when Hitler and Mussolini and Japanese leaders were completing their plans for World War II.

And how about the military picture? It is not much more encouraging, to be frank about it.

Russia has almost 300 submarines. That is about six times as many as Nazi Germany had on the outbreak of World War II, and with her less than 50 submarines Germany almost ran us off the high seas before we could get our anti-submarine warfare well under way.

Russia has some 40,000 tanks. She outnumbers us in tanks at least by 7 to 1, and some of her tanks are far superior to ours.

Russia has some 175 ground divisions, as contrasted to our 10, with only one of our 10 at battle strength.

Russia has a vast air force well trained to work with the Russian ground forces. The tactical air support for our Army is notoriously weak, due mainly to our failure to carry forward our 70-group program for the American Air Force.

Russia is situated in an enviable strategic position. She is right on the edge of western Europe and can concentrate vast military power there much more rapidly than it can be provided from the United States. She has satellite armies rimming her whole border. She can use satellites here and there in the world—in Germany, in the Balkans, in the Near East, in Asia—and, if we let her, she can pin American forces down here and there to such an extent as to prevent serious resistance in western Europe.

Moreover, Russia has a police-state organization. She can do as she pleases, and when she pleases, with her people and her armament. She can attack without warning. She can thereby gain the great advantage of initiative and surprise and concentration of force that is denied the nations which refuse to commit acts of aggression.

Our potential allies in Europe are still far from recovering from the last war. Britain has only recently been able to relax her extremely strict economic controls. Her budgetary situation has been very weak. Vast strides have been made there and in western Europe since 1946, but those nations have been almost prostrated by the past war and have needed far more time than they have had to get back on their feet. We were well on our way to getting them there, but still had far to go.

By contrast, the Russian economy is state controlled. Dollars and money are responsive to the dictates of the rulers of the state. Budgetary considerations have little meaning, as compared with our own problems. In Russia it has been guns in place of the necessities of life during and since the war. Civilian discontent is ruthlessly suppressed. The discontented are brutally eliminated, and the secret police and propaganda controls place the entire nation in a straitjacket so that the entire national effort can be channeled in this or that direction according to the desires of the rulers.

All of these things face us today in the world. It is one of the most dangerous—in my opinion, the most dangerous—situation ever to confront the American people. It is a situation that demands the utmost concentration of effort, the greatest forbearance, the greatest willingness to sacrifice we have ever had.

Above all, it requires that for the indefinite future our people and this Congress must keep as our first thought the maintenance of an adequate defense. If we fail to do so, our very national existence may be critically jeopardized.

And what are our strengths in this dangerous world today?

Governmentally we are far stronger than our potential enemies, for any system of government responsive to the will of the people has a broader, firmer base than a government controlled by a dictator. In any long-term effort, I am certain that our system can outlast and surpass the dictated, regimented system of the Communists. Moreover, our competitive system has produced an industrial potential which is the envy of the world. Even though our standing military strength is very inadequate today, American potential is feared and respected the world over. Once our Nation turns to in an all-out military effort, near miracles of military production are achieved, and will again be achieved in case of another world-wide war. That lesson is not lost on the rulers of Russia, and we ourselves must not forget how tremendous that advantage is.

Our sea power is vastly greater than that of Russia and her satellites. Our strategic air power is unmatched anywhere in the world. We are still far ahead in the atomic-arms effort and will probably stay ahead for some years in the future.

Our transportation system, our industrial system, our communications system, the intelligence and educational level of our people, our magnificent scientific institutions and research laboratories, the level of development of our natural resources—all of these are a vast reservoir of strength unmatched on earth.

And let us not forget that these things are not unmeasured by Russia.

So to sum it up, this is our situation today.

We are seriously short at this critical moment in standing military strength. We have to build up, just as fast as we can, our ground troops in the Army, enlarge our Marine Corps, increase and improve our tactical air arm in the Air Force and enlarged the Marine Corps air arm, activate aircraft carriers, build many more tanks for the Army, activate destroyers and enlarge the antisubmarine patrol squadrons of the Navy, build more artillery for the Army and marines, expedite production of the newest antitank weapons, increase the number of transport vessels in the Navy—all of this over and above our efforts in Korea. And, of great importance, we must do all of this as rapidly as we can, because, as we have seen in Korea, weakness invites aggression, and there is little doubt that we have let ourselves get far too weak in the light of existing world conditions.

To do this, the President has asked the Congress to make available some $10,000,000,000 more during this fiscal year. Part of these funds must defray the cost of the Korean effort; the remainder must go into the rebuilding and strengthening of our Armed Forces to meet the threats so evident in other parts of the world. In addition, the President said more funds must be provided for the military support of other nations in the world.

So that means well over $10,000,000,000 to be added to the 1951 Federal budget of about $43,000,000,000.

Now, that puts us in this kind of a situation.

We have to ruthlessly eliminate unnecessary projects from the Federal budget. We have to stand up to the pressures that will come to continue projects in our congressional districts even though those projects have no direct relation to the defense effort. We have to do away with business-as-usual attitudes here in the Congress, in the executive branch, and in industry. We have to give military items first priority. We have to produce fewer television sets and automobiles and radios and such like and turn out more planes, guns, tanks, ships, and artillery, and it must be done in a great hurry. We must grimly respond to the dangerous times in which we are living, and do, without delay, what we know must be done in order to preserve the security of our Nation.

Later on, I am sure we will have to increase taxes. It is likely to be necessary to authorize the President to impose various controls over our economy to prevent runaway inflation, to prevent hoarding, to prevent deferment of essential military work, to prevent strikes in war industries, and so on.

But all of this readjustment in our national habits and outlooks has, I am convinced, the wholehearted support of the American people. There is not an American but who knows that the chips are down today in international life. Brute force respects only force, and it is up to us to obtain adequate force as quickly as we can.

In my judgment, if we build up the required force quickly, we can save peace in the world.

But if we falter, if we refuse to do the job quickly, if we cling to business-as-usual attitudes in the Congress and in industry, our weakness and indecision will surely invite further aggressions and ultimately foment the very world-wide crisis we are so anxious to avoid.

So I call upon the House to rise as one to insist upon a stern, a strong, a vigorous national program—to demand the elimination from the Federal budget of the frills and nonessentials—to replace optimism with realism—to reject peacetime, business-as-usual attitudes in the Government and in industry and get the necessary armed strength created just as quickly as possible.

As for the military side of the problem before us, my great concern is not that our military expansion is going to be too large, but I am apprehensive that it may be too small.

I feel, for example, that it is very unrealistic to limit the size of the American Army to below its authorized strength of 837,000 in view of the stupendous ground armies available to potential enemies in today's world.

I am unsatisfied with present plans for increasing the size of the Navy and Air Force, for I believe there is too much conservatism in the program. The Navy needs more aircraft carriers in commission—and needs them swiftly—and naval air requires prompt expansion.

The marines must be substantially enlarged, and their budgetary ceiling of 16 squadrons must be lifted.

The Congress should return at once to its goal of 70 air groups in the Air Force so that provision can be made for reasonable air support for the Army.

The Army tank program must be enlarged many times and greatly expedited.

Our antisubmarine warfare program, in both ships and planes, must be greatly enlarged in view of the size of the submarine fleet available to Soviet Russia today.

I think many of us have been a bit too complacent. This is no time to run around trying to shift the blame for this or that deficiency to this or that person in the executive branch. Let us be realistic about it.

Our great need right now is to get the ox out of the ditch—not spend a lot of time and effort trying to find out who pushed him into the ditch. Let's not spend our time looking backwards while Americans are being killed in Korea and our defenses urgently need strengthening. It is time to get action. Let us get on the road and get up speed. This is no time to take a detour to hunt for scapegoats.

The simple truth of the matter is—and it is high time the Congress gave full consideration to it—yes; the grim and unpleasant truth is that a global war is a real, a distinct, possibility at any time. No one can tell what tomorrow may bring.

It is equally a real possibility, members of the committee, that we are to be treated to the new strategy of using the armies of satellite countries here and there in the world instead of the great military power of Soviet Russia herself.

Either of these contingencies requires a mighty, an immediate national effort to augment our national defense and to channel major parts of our industrial might into essentially military activities. The Korean war is going on right now. American boys are fighting it this very moment on the battlefield of a foreign country. Armament, equipment, men are needed urgently, and the strength directed there must be immediately replaced here. We must not have any side efforts as we try to meet this crisis. We have to build a mighty force at once.

And let me offer this thought to the Committee on Appropriations.

If we do too much in the way of arming, we will just lose dollars.

But if we do too little, we may lose American lives, we may lose vital engagements with an enemy, we may bring on global war through our indecision and weakness.

So, when the $10,000,000,000 program is before the Appropriations Committee, I am hopeful that the committee will consider it a minimum, not a maximum. I hope that the Committee on Appropriations will look into these concerns I have mentioned—concerns as to the proposed size of the Army, the number of aircraft carriers to be in commission, the number of aircraft for the Marine Corps and Air Force, the antisubmarine effort, the tank program of the Army, the organization and equipment of the tactical air arm of our Army, and so on.

And if the members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, individually or collectively, indicate dissatisfaction with any element of the program but go along with it—as they have in the past—simply on the ground that considerations of economy must still prevail, then I hope and trust that the Committee on Appropriations will themselves exercise their proper initiative and demand the fulfillment of a well-rounded, ample military program that will truly provide this mighty Nation the defense it must have.

It is high time that the American people be done with this emphasis on the so-called calculated risks we have heard so much about in the past 2 years.

Let us have much less risk, and much more calculation, in our defense program.

Let us have less talk about dollars, and more talk about strength, in our defense program. The defense of this country must not be measured in dollars. Its measurement must be what a potential enemy has, what he can do with it, what it looks like he wants to do with it, and when he wants to do it. I need not remind the Members of this body that Russia and her satellites have been working night and day for the past 5 years on their armaments—and I regret to say that, in some areas, we have not kept pace.

Now, I will tell the Committee briefly what is in this emergency measure.

This bill involuntarily extends enlistments in the Armed Forces. It potentially involves about 300,000 men, for that many enlistments will expire in the next 12 months. Forty-four thousand of them are General MacArthur's command—so that he might lose some 4,000 men a month during this critical period.

The figures break down this way.

In the next 12 months, in each service, these will be the following number of enlistment terminations: In the Army, 145,000; in the Navy, 62,000; in the Air Force, 88,000.

That makes a total of 295,000 enlistment terminations in the next 12 months.

The situation is, therefore, that these men must be held temporarily beyond the term of their enlistments until trained replacements can be provided. The committee approved a 1-year extension, as contrasted to a 21-month extension proposed by the executive branch. It was our view, and the military testimony supported the committee's position, that a 12-month extension would be sufficient, for in that period of time the trained replacements could be made available and these men released.

Now, by way of background, there is ample precedent for this type of legislation. The Congress did it before on August 18, 1941, except that at that time—4½ months before Pearl Harbor—the Congress extended the enlistments for 18 months instead of for 12 months, as proposed in this bill. The same thing was done in World War I. So the bill is not a precedent. Twice previously, in response to a critical world situation, the Congress has found it necessary to extend enlistments for a temporary period.

I think the Committee should also know that General MacArthur has urgently requested this legislation. He is very anxious for its immediate enactment so he can get on with the Korean effort without the heavy attrition and administrative burdens produced by enlistment terminations in his theater.

The other provisions of the bill are administrative in nature. I will mention one of them—section 3 of the bill. That provision suspends old Navy law which gave pay and a quarter to persons whose enlistments expired while they were at sea or abroad. Its purpose was not to take care of any situation of the type now confronting the United States. Its purpose was to provide the additional pay on the ground that the men could not be discharged since they happened to be away from the country at the time of the enlistment expirations. They were kept at their stations until their return to the country and during that period received pay and a quarter. Other existing law will give the men kept in involuntarily under this bill the normal enlistment bonuses if they reenlist instead of submitting to involuntary retention.

Now, I wish to leave with the House this final thought.

We have heard about too little too late. We have heard that it is later than you think. We have heard time and again that weakness invites aggression. We have been told over and over again that Russia respects only force. So much have we heard these things in recent years that I am afraid we just accept them now without much thought and tend not to do much about them.

Well, let us get down to the job.

Let us think long and hard and grimly about this statement "too little too late" in today's world. Let us think about its meaning to our boys on Korea—maybe later in Germany—maybe later in Formosa—maybe later somewhere else on this troubled globe.

Let us ponder on the real meaning, in this atomic age, of the saying that "it is later than you think." In modern war there is no second prize for the runner-up. Let us not let time run through our fingers. Again, I say let us get down to the job and get this program into action and get it completed just as promptly as possible.

And, once again I say to the House, as I have said so many, many times in the past, "weakness invites aggression." Upon our speed of preparation, upon our determination in the Congress to give the Nation the strength it must have, depends the peace of the world.

Let us get America's muscles hardened to the point where the international bullies will respect what America stands for.

In that way, we can preserve peace.

In that way, we can preserve America.

Mr. COUDERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COUDERT. I want to say to the gentleman from Georgia that I am sure the House has heard with great interest his very interesting and instructive exposition of the difficult and dangerous situation that faces us. I am sure what he has said about our position strategically in the world and the strong position of Russia and the difficulties that we face, was heard with interest. I am sure we all agree that the time is certainly here to strengthen the military forces of the United States. But I think the Members of the House and the people of the United States will be interested in an answer that he might make with respect to an omission in the gentleman's statement. Can the gentleman advise the House whether at this time the administration has as yet been able to evolve a consistent foreign policy and has it as yet been able to evolve a strategic plan?

Mr. VINSON. Let me answer the question.

Mr. COUDERT. This is just as important. The mere development of the great Armed Forces that we are going to develop and must develop is only half the game. The other half of the game is intelligent use of the military power available.

Mr. VINSON. I will say to the distinguished gentleman that the next time I have permission to address the House I will try to answer his question.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Relative to the intent that is contained in the bill as it relates to men who are going to receive their discharge in the Regular Service within possibly the next months, and who wish to make a profession of a military career, what will be involved in their getting their emoluments under the discharge procedure that has heretofore prevailed if this bill is enacted?

Mr. VINSON. If anyone whose term of enlistment expires, and who is frozen in the service, reenlists, he gets the reenlistment bonus provided by law.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I am very much interested in the gentleman's statement, as I always have been because he knows his subject. As far as preparation for any eventuality is concerned, I think the gentleman is most sincere. I am interested in knowing what our policy is, and what we are going to raise this big army for.

Mr. VINSON. I am trying to lay down here in the House of Representatives a policy of preparedness. I am trying to get the gentleman from Pennsylvania to stop measuring the defense of this country by dollars and, instead, measure the defense of this country by the potential strength of our enemy.

Mr. RICH. Are we expected to go at this alone? Are we going to get the aid and assistance of foreign countries under the United Nations?

Mr. VINSON. I hope the nations that are members of the United Nations will meet the call the United Nations has put upon them as speedily as possible.

Mr. RICH. Suppose they do not?

Mr. VINSON. If they do not, then we have to assume the responsibility as one member.

Mr. RICH. Are we going to go it alone?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Over and above all, we have the duty and responsibility of looking out primarily for our own national interest.

Mr. VINSON. Of course; that is right.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA].

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time in order to ask a couple of questions of the gentleman from Georgia, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Armed Services. My first question is with reference to what, as I get it, has particularly disturbed the minds of the people of this country and my own as well. They are asking what is the trouble in Korea that we are being beaten as we are and being continually driven back. Is it a question of lack of tanks and heavy artillery, or what?

Mr. VINSON. I may say to the gentleman that the main trouble is 5,000 miles of distance from our base of supply. Of course, when the Korean trouble broke out there was no equipment in Korea of the kind necessary to fight a modern war. The Government is doing everything humanly possible, as rapidly as distances will permit, to put forces there to meet the forces of the Reds.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. One other question: Is it not true that at the start of the war over there our forces had to depend only on what could be flown in; consequently none of the heavy tanks or heavy artillery was in Korea or probably is in Korea today? Is not that true?

Mr. VINSON. I think the gentleman is as well aware of all that information as I am. I think the gentleman gets his information from the same source I get a great deal of it, from the newspapers.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I am sure the gentleman flatters me out of all measure if he thinks I can get as much information as he can.

Mr. VINSON. Let me say this: We are doing everything humanly possible to get equipment and men into Korea, but you have to bear in mind one thing: This Nation must not be sucked in at this and that point of the globe. We have to be cautious in what we do.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. One further question, if I may: Who made the decision that Korea was defensible at the time of the outbreak of this war?

Mr. VINSON. I regret that I cannot advise the gentleman as to that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman from Georgia, whom we all love and for whom we have great respect, has left on my mind the impression that he thinks this Congress has been stingy with dollars.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Yes; that is true.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask the gentleman from Georgia if during the past 5 years he has brought to this House a single bill for the defense of the United States that this Congress and this House have not supported?

Mr. VINSON. May I say to the gentleman from Michigan I appeared, speaking for the Committee on Armed Services, before the Committee on Appropriations on March 30, 1949. I was the spokesman for the Committee on Armed Services and accompanying me were the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DURHAM], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS], and others. I asked that the budget at that time be increased. We appeared before the Committee on Appropriations and asked for $2,674,000,000 more than was in the budget.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That does not answer my question.

Mr. VINSON. Of course it answers the gentleman's question.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That does not answer my question.

Mr. VINSON. The Armed Services Committee has no authority over the money. We have authority only over the legislative authorizations.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is correct.

Mr. VINSON. That is all we have.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And this House has passed your bill. I do not recall in 16 years the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] bringing a bill to the House for the defense of this country that the House has failed to sustain.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I do not recall it in the past 10 years that I have been here.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not recall it for at least 16 years.

Mr. VINSON. May I say I am very grateful for the confidence that the House has shown in the Committee on Armed Services during that period of time and to the former Committee on Naval Affairs. The point is that there are certain things that the Committee on Armed Services has been fighting for. Only 90 days ago we pointed out certain things. But we could not get the money. We did not get the money.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to speak a word on this particular measure because I am wholeheartedly in favor of it, as I am the next bill we will consider to lift the ceilings on the personnel of our armed services, and I think practically every Member of this body on both sides of the aisle is. It is a very simple measure, similar to the one we passed, both at the outbreak of World War I and at the outbreak of World War II.

Realizing that there will be approximately 300,000 members of our armed services—the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Air Force—whose enlistments will expire during the next calendar year, our committee, and I am sure the Congress, are thoroughly convinced, that it is imperative and inescapable that we extend the enlistments for the next 12 months. In ordinary peacetimes over 50 percent of those whose enlistments expire would reenlist. They are trained personnel. They are experienced personnel. It is not easy, indeed it is next to impossible to supplant them overnight with raw, green recruits. Many of them are now fighting in distant parts of the world, or are stationed for security reasons at different posts all over the globe, and it is exceedingly difficult for us to bring back these men, as their enlistments expire from day to day and week to week and month to month when a war is raging.

So the whole purpose of the bill S. 3937, a bill to authorize the President to extend the enlistments in the Armed Forces of the United States, is to hold the men who are now in the various branches of the armed services long enough until replacements can be obtained by enlistment, by call of Reserves and the National Guard, or by the draft, and properly trained to take their place.

Now that is all the bill provides for. It is bad policy for the Government to break a contract with any of its citizens. It is tough for a 30-year-old man, fighting in the rice paddies of Korea, his wife and a couple of kids in Japan or back home in the States, to be held on at the expiration of his 3- or 4-year service, particularly when there are some unmarried individuals between the ages of 26 and 30 back home who perhaps are not contributing their full share in this crisis, to the defense of the Nation.

But, ladies and gentlemen, liberty is the first casualty of war. Truth is usually next. When you engage in an armed conflict, freedom is gone. All of us are going to be required to do things we do not want to do. We are going to have our activities curbed. There will be allocations, priorities, rationing, and certain controls, no doubt, if the flames touched off in Korea engulf the world. Painful as that is, it is inescapable. You cannot fight a painless war. It is just impossible.

I want to say one or two things in a general way, aside from this bill, particularly since our distinguished and able chairman took considerable time to talk about the over-all picture.

In order to win a modern, mechanized war, the victor must possess at least three materials. He has to have iron and steel, rubber, and oil. Soviet Russia has secured a lot of iron and steel and industry in Manchuria, a territory twice as large as the State of Texas, which is the industrial heart of all Asia. And she would not have that steel if the Chinese, after being promised at the Cairo Conference that Manchuria would be returned to them at the end of the war, had not been sold down the river, and Manchuria turned over to Soviet Russia.

Who is responsible for that action? Russia has got to have not only iron and steel in Manchuria and the rich metals and minerals of China that has gone completely under. Everyone knows China is the head, the heart, the bowels, and legs of Asia; and because of the recent weak, indecisive, vacillating, contradictory foreign policy, all China has been lost to Red communism. Who is responsible for that? What Members of the House and Senate have stood and pled week after week, month after month, for a strong far eastern foreign policy? The Republicans, as the record will show. Now that China has gone under, after being told that we should keep hands off until the dust settled; after being told by the Secretary of Defense that it was not our responsibility to defend Korea, or any other spot in the Orient; and after being told by the Secretary of State we will have nothing to do with the defense of Formosa; after the Secretary of Defense told us repeatedly, before our committee and in public addresses during the past 6 months, that if we were attacked at any place at 4 o'clock in the morning we would be ready to answer at 5 o'clock; after being repeatedly told by members of the administration that South Korea was capable of defending herself; after all of these miscalculations and misrepresentations, not only to the American people but to your Committee on Armed Services, we have now completely reversed our foreign policy in Asia, and we have decided to go into the one spot with its tough terrain, with its foul weather, the most difficult place on earth to pit our strength against the force of the ground armies of Soviet Russia, namely, Korea. Russia's strength always has been in her ground forces.

Recently the President of the United States has repeatedly told the American people, at the commencement exercises at the University of Missouri in Columbia last month and at the dedication of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial in St. Louis the following day, that we are closer to peace than any time since the shooting stopped in 1945.

At Korea, a little sort of finger, an appendix of the Asiatic continent about the size of Illinois, 600 miles long, 135 miles wide, we go in to defend only the south half of it, and defend it with what? Who withdrew Lieutenant General Hodge and his 40,000 American troops from Korea south of the thirty-eighth parallel a year ago last month, in June 1949?

The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES], the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON], and others here with me in 1946 were in Korea. We went up and down that arbitrary thirty-eighth parallel that has no military significance; there is not a mountain range, there is no river, there is nothing geographical about it; it is just a line that was blindly, arbitrarily, and stubbornly drawn so that the Japs north of the thirty-eighth parallel would surrender to the Russians, and the Japs south of the thirty-eighth parallel would surrender to the Americans. General Hodge, with his 40,000 troops, repatriated over 5,000,000 Japanese soldiers, not only from Korea but from Manchuria and China.

When we returned from our trip in October 1946 we unanimously agreed that the moment we pulled out of Korea the Russians or the Communists would move in. That is what we told the Congress; that is what the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES] and I told the American people in a broadcast over a Washington radio, with Ernest K. Lindley acting as moderator.

Oh, yes, Mr. Chairman, we are in for it; for the third time in our generation we are engaged in a bloody and devastating war. Of course, in 1916 an administration was elected to power because it kept us out of war; in 1940 another administration for the third time was returned to power because it promised again, and again, and again, that American boys would not have to fight and die on foreign soil; and now, today for the third time we are engaged in war, and Congress has not declared it.

We were not requested or asked for counsel or advice; but we were told on a half sheet of paper when we were called down to the White House 4 weeks ago on Tuesday, I think it was 4 weeks ago today, that the Chief Executive, the Commander in Chief, had ordered naval and air support for the ground forces in Korea after we had withdrawn our own forces over a year ago. We cannot now debate the legality or constitutionality of the action of the President. "The die is cast." The poor southern Koreans, most of them farmers—it is an agricultural section—with bamboo poles and spears trying to stop 60-ton Russian tanks.

Oh, yes; I feel that there will be no peace in our time; there will be intermittent wars the rest of our days. The moment we squelch the war in Korea it will break out in Formosa, it will pop up in Iran; it is just like the measles, you do not know whether they are going to break out around your ankles or your neck.

You can rest pretty well assured that we will not be able to confine this conflict to Korea. We cannot contain it in that narrow theater. Much as I hope and pray we can hold the area, there is a very small foothold left for us to stand on and perhaps within the next few days we will be driven into the sea. Of course only time will tell. I am no military strategist or tactician, but our best experts themselves do not know.

I want to be realistic. I am tired of being kidded. I am tired of men in high places in our Government, from the Commander in Chief and the Secretaries and the Chiefs of Staff, all the way down the line, assuring us we will be ready. Oh, yes, Mr. Chairman, I will say to my beloved friend from Georgia, I fear there is too little, too late. But who is responsible for that?

We have appropriated $50,000,000,000 for national defense in the past 4 years—fifty thousand million dollars. Where has the money gone? What have we got to show for it? Why were the weapons placed in moth balls and cocoons and put away? Oh, those tanks, those B–29's, my beloved chairman, in moth balls are not helping the poor, young inexperienced doughboys in Korea who are up against some of the toughest men, battle-scarred, most experienced troops in all the world, because these same North Koreans fought to help defend Stalingrad, they fought the Japanese not only in Korea but in Manchuria, they fought in the Chinese civil war.

It is not going to be very pleasant for a lot of American fathers and mothers to know that we have given to the different nations under the ECA and other programs in Europe and in the Near East over $35,000,000,000; yet today our kids are fighting with inadequate weapons, with an insufficient supply of matériel, with ineffective guns in their hands. Had we not given away so much of our civilian military production to other nations, perhaps our own troops in Korea would not now be so short of supplies and ammunition.

Mr. Chairman, the ridiculous and silly charge has been made by the left-wing new Dealers in the Democratic Party that the Republicans are to blame for the Korean crisis because we did not vote for economic aid for Korea. Nothing could be more stupid or unfair, because a school child knows that it would be supreme folly to vote economic aid for Korea without backing it up by military assistance. Had we sent fertilizer, farm machinery, hydroelectric equipment, and other industrial machines to develop South Korea, we would simply have built up a greater and richer prize for Russia to take over. The only reason that the Communists have not moved into southern Korea, which we abandoned more than a year ago, was in the hope that we would send much of our wealth and materials over there for her to seize.

Too little, too late? Oh, yes, CARL, but I want to ask my friend from Georgia, and he is a peach because all of the peaches do not grow on trees in Georgia, who is responsible for this too little, too late? Who is responsible for the miscalculations, for the gross misrepresentations? Certainly no one can blame the Congress of the United States, and most of all our Committee on the Armed Services. Heaven knows, we have bent over backward to go along with the military. We have tried to comply with practically every request they made. No minority party ever tried or voted with the majority as have we. Certainly the Republicans cannot be blamed for our present debacle. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RIVERS], sitting in front of me, knows we have gone further than that. We have tried year after year to get them to build up the Air Force to 70 groups. We had to cram that down their throats. We were told, "Oh, we cannot afford it, we do not need it." Who did that?

This administration canceled the big, modern aircraft carrier for the construction of which this Congress twice specifically appropriated funds. It was arrogantly, it was defiantly canceled. Why? By whom?

I have received letters from two or three of my Navy friends during the past week in which they stated: "What a shame it is we do not have two or three more carriers out here in this operational area between Korea and Formosa."

God knows, if anything has proven the worth of the House Armed Services Committee's B–36 hearings of last fall, the events of the past month have certainly done so. We know that there will always and must be a Navy and a Marine Corps; we have got to have them just as we have got to have an Air Force for strategic bombing and just as we have to have Army ground forces to go in and take over, then hold what we take. All are indispensable.

Now I want to drive home this point. Do you know that under this proposed expansion program, bringing the forces up to the previously planned 1952 level in the year 1951, it will still be less than what we had in 1949? We have had only one battleship, of course, the Missouri, in commission those 3 years, but we have fewer cruisers not only today, but we will have fewer cruisers next year than we had in 1949, we will have fewer heavy aircraft carriers, we will have fewer destroyers, fewer submarines, fewer escort vessels, and all other types of ships. Who is responsible? What party has been in power all these years? What party holds the purse strings of these United States? No; we do not want to try to assess the blame or put the responsibility upon any particular person or group of persons, because that is water under the bridge and over the dam. But we cannot afford, as a nation, to blind our eyes to grievous mistakes that have been made in the past. We must look back to our mistakes, admit them in order to avoid them in the future. I think if we had a general, a thorough housecleaning, in both our State and our Defense Departments, we could become much stronger. Now that is not a pleasant thing to say; do not think I enjoy saying it. If I did not say a word about it perhaps I would be more popular. I am not seeking popularity but I am concerned about my country. But there is so much more I might say and that I will say, too, in the days that are ahead. Of course, we want to tighten our belts, pull ourselves together, stop our petty bickering, and join hands and heads and hearts for the welfare of the Nation.

Oh, just listen to the jeers from the majority side. You are seeing displayed here today the very spirit that we are fighting to destroy abroad. Even in time of war you cannot throttle freedom of speech; and certainly, in time of war, realizing that the blood of men and women of all faiths, parties, and creeds are mingled and shed in the defense of this Nation, it ill behooves some of you little peewees of narrow minds and shriveled souls to display the arrogant attitude of intolerance, unwilling to listen to anybody who might possibly differ in the least with you. Well, you are going to have to listen whether you like it or not. And when you are here for a while, you certainly will know better.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ARENDS. I think, in passing, that the gentleman should not miss this opportunity to call the attention of the House to this very fact, that had it not been for the B–36 investigation this last year by the Committee on Armed Services, let me ask the membership of this House, where would our Marine Corps and where would our Navy be? How much would be left? Ask yourselves that question.

Mr. SHORT. There is just one other thought I want to leave before I stop, and that is to follow the sound advice that will be given to you soon by the distinguished and able gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DURHAM]. He has been studying the Stock Piling Act for many years. I participated in many of those sessions. He knows more about that problem than any other Member of Congress. Let me tell you, if you knew the facts as they actually exist on our stockpiling program, you would shudder in your boots today. We need manganese more than any other material. It is the one indispensable item. You cannot manufacture steel without it, and unless we somehow or other build up our manganese stockpile I fear what the outcome of this global conflict might be.

Mr. Chairman, earlier in this address I said that to win a modern, mechanized war, the victor must possess at least three materials: iron or steel, rubber, and oil. I tried to point out that Russia has the iron and steel in Manchuria. She does not yet have a sufficient quantity of rubber and oil to conduct a global war.

However, most of the world knows, certainly we do, that Russia has her eyes cast on Indonesia and Malaya, Sumatra, Java, and Singapore to get the rubber after the fall of Indochina. She also has her eyes cast upon Iran, Iraq, and Saudi-Arabia, in fact the whole Near East with its rich oil deposits in order that she might complete her program to have steel, rubber, and oil to fight a global conflict.

Sir, we cannot permit the Russian bear to reach out her paws and gather in all the little, weak countries on her perimeter to secure the materials with which to conquer the world.

Mr. Chairman, there is another quality which is necessary for any country to win in any armed conflict. That is a spiritual quality and a moral force which dictators often overlook or underestimate.

The love of liberty, the devotion to a great and righteous cause, the indomitable spirit of men which believes in the dignity of the human soul and the love of a just and lasting peace. These ethical principles cannot be conquered by the might of materialism. In the beginning of a conflict, brute force may triumph for a while, but the undying faith, the resolute will, the indomitable courage born of Christian idealism will ultimately triumph. These virtues which belong to the United States and western civilization will eventually triumph over the ruthless instincts and barbarous tactics of a Godless atheistic communism. We will give Russia and the whole world to understand that much as we might differ among ourselves in a country of free men on domestic issues, we shall ever rise as a united Nation and a united people to fight and die to preserve our Republic against all ruthless aggressors.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, to clear up what was perhaps a misinterpretation of my earlier remarks, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I take this time in the hope that no misunderstanding can develop from any remark that I make. I do not intend to convey the thought that the Committee on Appropriations has failed to give every dollar the budget has recommended. The Appropriations Committee has done that. The Appropriations Committee and certain members of it, particularly the gentleman from California [Mr. SHEPPARD], the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES], and the distinguished former chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Naval Affairs [Mr. PLUMLEY], all participated in the fight on the floor of the House 2 years ago for more money for naval aviation, which the House, after debate, rejected by a vote of approximately 65 for to 125 against.

The House of Representatives is not subject to any criticism, for we have not failed to provide far more, repeatedly, than the budget has recommended. As a result of going on behalf of the Armed Services Committee to the Appropriations Committee in 1949, the budget was increased $800,000,000 specifically for the Air Force.

I do not want anybody to think I am criticizing the Appropriations Committee, because the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON] and his committee, particularly Mr. SIKES, Mr. PLUMLEY, and Mr. SHEPPARD in the forefront, were trying to write into the appropriation bill the items the Joint Chiefs of Staff had in their minds, which were oftentimes curtailed by the budget.

Mr. Chairman, there are no further requests for time on this side. If there are no requests for time on the other side, I ask that the bill be read for amendment.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, in a syndicated article published July 21, 1950, in the Grand Rapids Press, and other newspapers throughout the United States, the prominent columnist, Mr. David Lawrence, had the following to say:

Out in Korea the American boys are fighting bravely and many are dying, but inside Washington there is a bitter feeling of criticism concerning certain decisions of the top command—General Collins of the Army and General Vandenberg of the Air Force—who are charged with having combined to squelch the opportunity of the United States Marine aviation units to fight in the Far East.

From other sources similar information has also been received. In addition, an interesting letter was recently forwarded to me by a constituent and for the information of the Members of the House the pertinent portions are as follows:

I am a naval reservist and expect to be called back to active duty at any time. My first gripe is aimed at the high brass at that huge office building, the Pentagon. We've enjoyed the benefits of unification since 1948, and I think it stinks. What kind of unification is it that calls the Marine Reserve ground forces to active duty and leaves Marine Reserve air units at home? What's the matter with Naval Air Reserve units? This war is supposed to be an air war, let's use all our air forces. * * * If it isn't going to be an air war, this country has been sold a bill of goods. Our Marine Corps, the best fighting group we have had in any war, has been rendered virtually useless as a result of unification. A marine by virtue of his training is imbued with that elusive esprit de corps, morale, or plain guts to fight and win. In World War II no other branch of the service could show the same qualities to any marked degree. I'm sure any military critic will say our last war in the Pacific was a Marine victory—with a slight assist by the Army and Navy. Let's give the marines in this fight the support of their own air units. Also, let's get the Marine Corps back up to somewhere near their wartime strength and keep it up there through the years ahead. It would be as good insurance as a 70-group air force. I'm like all sailors: I have a dislike for marines along with a hearty respect for their ability.

In the city of Grand Rapids, Mich., a Marine Reserve unit has been faithfully training for the past few years. It is D Company of the Eighth Infantry, Battalion. This unit either has or is scheduled for a call to active duty. In my estimation it would be tragic for this unit of the Marines or any other fighting Marine outfit to be sent into the front in Korea or elsewhere without the benefit of trained Marine air group tactical support. I strongly urge that any plan be abandoned for the splitting up of Marine ground units from Marine air groups.

This rumored plan to break up the long-established and highly effective Marine air-ground coordination has been in the minds of some of our Army and Air Force leaders for a number of years, but despite this pressure the integrity of the entire Marine program has been maintained except for slashes in numbers all along the line. However, the present Secretary of Defense, Mr. Louis Johnson, seems to have been victimized by this unsound thinking, for he is quoted as having said:

We cannot afford to have three separate air forces—Navy, Marine, and Air Force.

It is obvious that the rumors mentioned in Mr. Lawrence's column are in line with Mr. Johnson's basic thinking.

It is important to understand a few basic and fundamental facts in discussing this problem. In the first place, marine aviation is not separate; it is a legal and administrative fact that marine aviation is administratively and technically a part of naval aviation under the applicable statutes. Marine aviation organizations are like the rest of the marines—part of the Naval Establishment. All procurement of the matériel and training of any pilots for marine aviation is included in the naval air program.

During World War II Admiral King, in an effort to determine any possible savings in the Naval Establishment, convened a board within the Navy Department to determine what would be the effect from the economy standpoint of abolishing marine aviation in toto. After exhaustive inquiries this board concluded and actually placed upon record certain important conclusions. It was the board's decision that, because of the very close integration of marine air training and operations into the naval air program, there would be, in fact, no savings resulting from the elimination of the marine air program. The assignment of strictly naval air units for the performance of functions previously handled by marine air groups was not recommended. It was found there would be no economies and the effectiveness of this vital military weapon would be abolished by such a plan.

Anyone who is at all familiar with marine air group operations knows that marine air units are trained to operate off either Navy carriers or advanced land bases. Marine air units exist for one primary reason, and one reason alone: The support, very close support, of the ground troops. In this connection it should be recalled that it was marine preoccupation with the amphibious specialty that resulted in the marine employment of our present-day close air support doctrine which, as it is used in the Marine Corps, is the most effective close air-support program possessed by any armed forces in the world. Marine close air support not only includes isolation of the battle field, but such support is predicated upon the actual assistance of ground units by attacking specific targets opposing marine ground effort. As a result, the marine system of close air support is designed to bring down on an enemy an air strike whenever required by the front-line ground commander. This is in contrast to the theory of saturation of area targets and the control of supporting aircraft by the top echelon of ground commanders away from the fighting front.

Unlike other United States air-support doctrine, marines have carried air-ground integration to such a point that in every front-line battalion and in other specially designated units there is a marine air-control officer. This officer is trained in both air and ground techniques. He is a marine aviator, but basically, as are all marines, a marine first, last, and always. Marine air, rather than being separated from the ground effort, as has been the case of the technical support of Army units resulting from the creation of a separate air force is based upon the air-ground team concept.

Some people may well ask this question: How does this powerful close air support conception fit into the otherwise completely unique Marine Corps idea? The answer is simple and understandable. The Marine Corps usefulness as a military outfit lies largely in its adherence to the team idea. The Marine Corps feels it is their mandate to be ready with a team—not a very big one perhaps—but still a complete team to answer the call at any time.

Since in operations across the water such as we are now fighting in Korea, the Marine Corps cannot always have the tanks and artillery they need right at the moment of landing, the Marine Corps must rely more extensively on this extremely flexible weapon, namely, close support planes. Without them the marines are only a partial team and cannot be expected to be completely effective in all the complex operations assigned them. However, with their own close support planes the marines have the necessary balance and the striking power and the readiness to move into action which gives modern significance to the old marine saying "first to fight."

To give this teamwork real effect, the Marine Corps puts specially trained air personnel directly with the front line troops to observe closely the progress of the battle and to call for and direct these vital close support air attacks. The Marine Corps is the only military organization in the world that does this with such thoroughgoing detail, and needless to say it has paid tremendous dividends in the past. Consequently, it would be most unwise to change this method at this crucial hour when the marines are again going to be called upon to do their job in a new Pacific war.

Marines had to develop a close air support doctrine simply because the nature of amphibious operations was such that there had to be an effective type of immediate, front-line controlled, air support in order to cover the ground attacks in an amphibious operation prior to the landing of heavier items of artillery and other supporting weapons. It should not be forgotten that marines pioneered dive bombing and logistical support of ground troops by air. In passing, it might be worth noting that in 1933, when Major Udet of the German Luftwaffe was watching a marine aviation squadron put on a demonstration at the Cleveland air races that he was so impressed by marine dive bombing that he stated he was going to recommend the German Air Force adopt a similar technique.

The record of marine aviation in World War II was outstanding in the annals of close air-support history. Carrier- or land-based marine close air-support aviation was able to deliver battalion-controlled air strikes with but a few minutes notice and it was very normal to deliver strafing, bombing, and rocket attacks against enemy positions as close as 100 yards to our own front lines. It is reported that on at least one occasion on Iwo Jima a close air support attack was launched within 50 yards of our own troops.

Another point that should be considered is the fact that there is no real duplication or competition between the Air Force generally and marine and naval close air-support programs. For example, the Air Force is today preoccupied with long-range strategic bombing and jet intercepter planes. It is no secret that everything else is secondary as far as operations within the Air Force are concerned. Accordingly, and quite properly, the Air Force has today developed, due to its preoccupation and emphasis on long-range bombing, the finest long-range bomber in the world, namely, the B–36. On the other hand, it must be remembered that while making this great advance in strategic air, no basic improvement has been made by the Air Force in close air support doctrine or matériel. This is best evidenced by the immediate calling up of P–51 conventional type aircraft for the Air Force's operations in Korea.

Fortunately the marine and naval aviation experts have not been preoccupied with long-range strategic bombing, but in contrast have emphasized and focused their attention on naval air operations involving close air support of ground troops in amphibious and related operations. As a result of this activity which is so important to expeditionary troops of the fleet marine forces there has been continued perfection of our close air-support doctrines and techniques. For example, we are now reported to have the finest kind of support aircraft in the new Martin Mauler. The point should carefully be noted that this aircraft was conceived and produced not by the Air Force, to which close air support is of secondary importance, but rather by naval aviation and marines whose specialty is close air-support activity. The different interests of the Air Force and marine-naval aviation has given our Nation complementary—not conflicting—types of air power. To now withhold marine aviation units from active participation with marine ground units in Korea would be disastrous, to say the least.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, let me emphasize again the absolute need and necessity for maintaining the close cooperation and integrity of marine ground and marine air units. I trust that the decisions in the Korean operation are unfounded, for history shows that in Pacific warfare a full marine team—ground and air—is essential in the jobs assigned to the Corps.

Mr. SHORT. I have no further requests for time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That until July 9, 1951, the President shall be authorized to extend all enlistments in any component of the Army of the United States, the United States Navy, and the United States Marine Corps, including the Naval Reserve and the Marine Corps Reserve, and in any component of the Air Force of the United States for a period of not to exceed 12 months: Provided, That all persons whose terms of enlistments are extended in accordance with the provisions of this Act shall continue during such extensions to be subject in all respects to the laws and regulations for the government of their respective service.

SEC. 2. Personnel of the uniformed services entitled to benefits under section 515 of the Career Compensation Act of 1949 (63 Stat. 831) shall not suffer any reduction in total compensation by reason of any extended service performed under the terms of this act.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take this time for the purpose of raising two or three questions. They may not be answered; it may be impossible to answer them. In doing this, I realize that war is the most expensive game that man ever played or ever will play, not only in materials but in so-called finance as well as in human blood and suffering. Wars have to be financed either by compulsion or by voluntary service and voluntary contributions in the way of purchase of Treasury issues and in the payment of taxes which after all is somewhat voluntary because in this country you do not have to work and earn income which can be taxed—you can just lie down and quit and the welfare agencies will feed your wife and children. So paying taxes is more or less a voluntary proposition.

The great chairman of the committee that has brought this bill to the floor has discussed the question of dollars—and I am not up here to put dollars against human bodies now or at any other time, but the people in my district are very much concerned about the mental attitude of those in the defense arms of Government who disburse the dollars which are provided by the taxpayers and the bond buyers and therefore they have not had answered to them in a satisfactory manner, to say the least, what the administrators of the defense program have done with between sixty and ninety billion dollars which has been provided for defense during the past few years.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman to give us any comfort on that that he may.

Mr. VINSON. I will state to the distinguished gentleman that I do not know that I can answer his question, but I am trying to find information to answer it.

But I can say this: Out of every dollar appropriated for national defense, 60 cents goes to what is called housekeeping in the Defense Department. Now, the gentleman is absolutely correct and the country does want to know what is the character of our defense; what kind of tank program we have; how much artillery we have; how many men we have; how many airplanes we have. The Committee on Armed Services started yesterday on a hearing to find out what the situation is. Just as soon as we get the information, I propose to bring it to the floor of the House and tell the country how much defense we have.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I thank the chairman for that information. I did not have it before and I do not know how many other Members of the House had it, either. The people did not have it and that is exactly what I think should be done—we should proceed just along that line.

Just one other thought. So many billions of dollars have been thrown at the feet of the administrators of national defense during the past 15 years that it is only human that those administrators have become ruthless in the expenditure of those funds. The situation now is that we are starting out with a $260,000,000,000 debt. We started out on the last war with about a $49,000,000,000 debt and by the time we wind up after a 2-, 3-, 4-, 5- or 10-year war, we may have six or eight trillion dollars in the national debt, unless we do get better sense in the operation of the administration of these funds.

I hope that the Committee on Armed Services will do the necessary things to put the throttle on those who are to administer these funds so that they will have a little respect for the use of material and the burdens that are placed on the citizens insofar as dollars are concerned. Dollars just represent material. And if we win any wars or keep a little peace in the world we will still need a few pieces of material for those who are at peace to use after the wars have finished.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman any idea how much we have in stockpiles? I understand that Members are having great difficulty in finding how much we have in our stockpiles.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have been reading stockpile hearings all day. I started early this morning. I have a bunch of them here. I think our stockpile situation will prove to be even more distressing and more disappointing than the situation with reference to equipment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Here is one illustration: You cannot run an army or a navy without good rope. In the Philippine Islands we have several thousand bales of manila hemp. That should have been put into the United States 6 to 9 months ago. Have the forces down here in charge of the administration moved those bales of fiber? Have they tried to move them? No. Let this committee get the answer why that stuff was not moved over here for defense. Take any stockpile you want, and it is 75 to 90 percent deficient. We will have some more talk about that tomorrow afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, of course, when all such measures come to the floor there are some Members who cannot resist the opportunity to inject politics. Even on legislation so vital to our national security and the preservation of our American way of life.

The question has been asked today, "Where did all this defense money go?" Where did the $45,000,000,000 go that we appropriated for defense since the close of World War II? I think if any Member is sincere in wanting to find that answer he would have little difficulty and little trouble in finding it. First of all, he could call the defense establishment and they would tell him promptly and accurately. If he did not care to call the defense establishment, all he would have to do is to keep himself well informed by reading the daily newspapers.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRICE. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I wonder if you have observed as a member of the Armed Services Committee that a lot of people at this time have 20-20 vision in their hindsight.

Mr. PRICE. I agree with the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRICE. I am sorry, I have only 5 minutes.

I have followed the daily newspapers very closely and I know you do not even have to go to the defense establishment to get the answer to this very important question. I inserted in yesterday's RECORD an editorial from the Evening Star of last Saturday which cleared up this subject pretty well. I am going to read to the House some of the figures quoted in that editorial. Those who are interested can read the complete editorial in the Appendix on page A5328 of the RECORD. This newspaper was interested enough to check the figures and they got their information from the defense establishment without difficulty.

Out of every dollar expended for national defense over the past years, since the war, 40 cents of it goes for salaries; food, clothing, and transportation. Twenty-six cents goes for operation and maintenance of equipment. Eighteen cents for weapons, planes, ships, and so forth. Five cents goes for research and development. Four and one-half cents goes of administration and secret work. Four cents goes for the reserves and the National Guard. One cent goes for industrial mobilization. Less than one cent goes to retired pay, and one-half of 1 cent goes for construction and public works.

Now, what situation have we had confronting us during the past 5 years? Where is this $45,000,000,000? I am going to read the last two paragraphs from this editorial:

> Defense officials say the best measure of military spending, as it relates to what we have to show for our money today, is the authorized outlays for the 4-year period from July 1, 1946, to June 30, 1950. During this time Congress authorized $49,300,000,000 for the military, of which $48,400,000,000 has been spent to date and nearly a billion more will have been spent by the end of this fiscal year. Almost $20,000,000,000 went for payrolls, food, clothing, and travel; $13,000,000,000 for operating and maintaining military installations and tactical equipment around the globe; and $8,500,000,000 for procurement of planes, tanks, rifles, artillery, ships, and other combat tools.
> During this cold-war era, it should be remembered, occurred the costly airlift operations and the support of our occupation troops in Europe and Japan—expenses not ordinarily budgeted in time of so-called peace. In summation, our defense dollar has had a huge chunk eaten out of it by ordinary and extraordinary expenses that produced no tangible equipment for our foot soldiers, flyers, sailors, and marines. In fact, 70 cents of the dollar went for housekeeping and operational costs. If there is any possible way to reduce the drain on the defense dollar, the Defense Department has been unable to find it. For our fighting men must not only be supplied with arms but must be paid, fed, clothed, housed, and transported. It is for such essential things that our money—nearly $100,000,000,000 of it—has gone during the past half decade of an uneasy peace.

That information was not very difficult to obtain. Anyone who wanted to, could have easily obtained it. It was as close at hand as the telephone on your desk, the paper on your newsstand.

Let us suspend politics while we consider important defense legislation. This is not the time for politics as usual.

Mr. SASSCER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, there are several things on which there is no uncertainty: One is that the Americans in all the forces, Air, Ground, and Navy, are valiantly fighting to the highest degree that can be expected of any soldier. We know that the Armed Services Committee in an effort to make this country strong had passed various enabling bills, and we know that the appropriations have been made by this Congress to make a strong, balanced armed service.

I shall not, and will not, attempt to place blame anywhere; this is not the time; it is a time for America to look forward rather than back and exert every possible effort to bring forth a strong, well-rounded armed service. But in doing that, let us, not in the spirit of placing blame, but in the hope of becoming strong, analyze our difficulties. Let us analyze the past, yes, so that corrections may be made if corrections are needed and unhesitatingly make them if necessary. This Congress has a grave responsibility. Unfortunately Congress voted away and delegated much of its authority in the second Unification Act, an act directed to the concentration of power in the Department of Defense. I am glad that I was in the little group of about a dozen who voted against it. That is water over the dam. The power is gone to a great extent, but let us conserve and exercise that power which is left. There is a definite obligation on this Congress to see that the spirit of the Unification Act is carried out, and the autonomy of these various services is preserved, and to check a tendency first apparent, then admitted, of having but one ground army, practically no Marine Corps, a weakened Navy, the naval air arm and the carriers withered in strength. Many of us have protested consistently and vigorously that course, yet it has been progressively carried on. Not in the Congress but in the Department of Defense. Now it is the obligation of the Congress to see that that pattern is completely abandoned.

Mr. Chairman, I made a speech on the floor of the House on August 2, 1949, in which I quoted Admiral Halsey. I want to again quote from Admiral Halsey. It indicates some of the apprehension that existed in my mind at that time. He made the following statement:

> The concept of what each weapon can or cannot do theoretically is very ridiculous. The only thing I can think of that is more ridiculous is the fact that you have a weapon and, through legislative or other act, you cannot use that weapon because it might interfere with the glory of some other person who has a similar weapon. I think the object in war is to strike with as many weapons as possible as often and as fast as possible. I think that is the surest and best way to terminate a war. I would go further than that, and say I do not think any weapon should be in any way restricted, whether it belongs to the Army, Navy, or the Air Force, or is used only for a special purpose. In other words, they should be used where they are most needed.

My thoughts boiled down are these: We know—as has been discussed informally in cloakrooms and in committees—that there has been a tendency to build up the vertical chain of command to the detriment of the offensive essential potential of the Navy, the Marine Corps, their air arm, the National Guard, and Reserves. The hour has arrived when the Congress must demand balanced services. Of course, the Congress voted away a good deal of power, but the Congress can demand that through administrative action in the Defense Department the intent of the Congress is not thwarted.

There has been much talk about appropriations. We have appropriated large sums of money. Then after the appropriations have been made, possibly for a given service—yes, for carriers and aircraft, or for any other thing that this Congress might have appropriated—we see by administrative action the intent of the Congress diverted or nullified. If America is to stay strong, and America in this hour must be strong, we have to have balanced services, we have to have three strong services, and the only way you are going to have them is for this Congress to demand that the money be spent in the manner we have appropriated it and not in furtherance of any structural plan directed to the weakening and elimination of any of the services.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am one of the junior members of the Armed Services Committee. I was gratified at the speech made by the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services. It gave us all confidence and hope. The first week after the Korean war started, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] was required to be away from Washington. It was with a sense of relief personally to me that I learned he had returned to Washington. I admire the straightforward manner in which he spoke here today to the Congress of the United States and I think the people of America tonight will sleep in their beds with a little more feeling of relief. I know I shall.

Mr. Chairman, there appear to be a lot of prophets today upon this floor. Where have those prophets been during the last 2 years? Why have they not raised their voices? Why have they not given the President the advantage of their great hindsight? I spoke here a few days ago and I said at that time I thought it was about time we laid aside partisanship.

Mr. Chairman, I am not interested in what happened in Korea. I am not interested in the fact that Secretary Johnson may have been wrong when he did away with the building of the carrier United States. I am not interested in the mistakes that have been made in our committee. I am one of the members of the Committee on the Armed Services who believes in a strong Air Force. I may personally have been wrong in my views about the Navy, but that is water over the dam, as the distinguished gentleman from Missouri has said. I think it is a shame today that we have seen the blame for three great wars placed upon a certain side of this aisle. I cannot help but remember during my short tenure of being a Member of this House the cry from a certain side of this House asking for economy, economy, economy, when 70 percent of our budget was going for the military, and we were hearing from the well of this House constantly the words that we must have a balanced budget, that we must reduce military spending, we must reduce domestic spending. I agree with our distinguished chairman that every dollar we can save domestically now must be saved, but I can say to you now that there are a lot of prophets here in the House of Representatives, and I am one of them, that have a great hindsight as to what has happened during the past 2 years, and I think the sooner we lay aside partisan politics and pass this legislation that is coming from our committee, and we forget the bitterness that has taken place in the past, that we are going to be sure of victory; whether it is next year or 10 years from now. We may be in for a long, long duration; we may never see peace in our times, but it is up to us as Members of this Congress to vote every cent possible for military preparation. This war may be tomorrow on a universal scale; it may be 6 months, it may be 1 year from now, and we pray to God it will never be, but I heard our distinguished chairman say yesterday, in executive session, that by being strong we may preserve the peace of this Nation. It is only, gentlemen, by remaining strong, that we have any hope at all for peace.

I hope this legislation is promptly enacted by the House today.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That portion of section 1422 of the Revised Statutes (18 Stat. 484) which reads as follows: "All persons who shall be so detained beyond their terms of enlistment or who shall, after the termination of their enlistment, voluntarily reenter to serve until the return to an Atlantic or Pacific port of the vessel to which they belong, and their regular discharge therefrom, shall receive for the time during which they are so detained, or shall so serve beyond their original terms of enlistment, an addition of one-fourth of their former pay:" shall be suspended with respect to enlistments extended in accordance with this act.

Mr. VINSON (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the bill, that it be printed in the RECORD at this point, and that all debate on the bill and all amendments thereto close in 1 hour.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS].

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, this first bill of a group we are to pass is a very serious measure. We are changing the contract we made with enlisted men in the armed services because of dire necessity, involving the security of our country, in carrying out our mission under the United Nations. We had better bear that in mind when later we come to other contracts that may be need to be changed because of such necessity.

There has been discussion here about lowering the drain on defense dollars. I have a suggestion I should like to make along that line, and I hope I may have the attention of the distinguished members of the Committee on Armed Services. I want to recall some recent history that will, I am sure, entail no debate or recrimination, because the House action was unanimous. This was on an amendment I offered in committee that was unanimously adopted there, and when it came to the floor as a committee amendment on August 18, 1949, it was unanimously adopted in the House, and when we went to conference it was unanimously adopted there.

Last year we were considering the mutual defense assistance bill and I offered what I then called the "anti-five" percent or "anti-deep-freeze amendment." I want to read it. This is section 412 of what is now Public Law 329 of the Eighty-first Congress, the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949:

Whoever offers or gives to anyone who is now or in the past 2 years has been an employee or officer of the United States any commission, payment, or gift, in connection with the procurement of equipment, materials, or services under this act, and whoever, being or having been an employee or officer of the United States in the past 2 years, solicits, accepts, or offers to accept any such commission, payment, or gift, shall upon conviction thereof be subject to a fine of not to exceed $10,000 or imprisonment for not to exceed 3 years, or both.

That amendment both in committee and in conference was objected to by the executive departments. They said it was too broad. However, both Houses of the Congress in their wisdom adopted that amendment exactly as I had drafted it. In conference I said that, if experience showed it was too broad, we could have amendments brought in when mutual defense assistance was extended this year. No such recommendations came from the executive departments this year when the act was extended. Apparently my original amendment is not too broad.

However, it is confined solely to the Mutual Defense Assistance Act. Note that it is limited to "procurement under this act." It seems to me that at this time, when we are changing the contracts of enlisted men, when we are thinking of changing other contracts, and when we want to conserve the defense dollar, we ought, before any trouble or scandal or suspicion starts, to put into the laws that come from our great Committee on Armed Services such a provision as this. It will take care of those who are already like vultures over the kill, starting to circle around the Capital to see what pickings they can make out of war contracts. Many patriotic businessmen are offering their plants to provide what we need. Their offers should be considered on their merits and on our needs. We do not want word to get around that they have to see the right people who can put on the fix. We ought at least to provide that there are not going to be any deals between those persons and those that are now officers or have been officers or employees of the Government, so there will not be any 5 percent or any other arrangements made. Therefore we should put a strong measure into the legislation which I hope will come from the Committee on Armed Services in a few days, a deterrent to prevent any persons inside or outside the Government from falling under the temptation of using improper means to secure contracts for this great effort we are about to enter.

I hope that will be done. It is my purpose in speaking at this time to urge our Committee on Armed Services to incorporate promptly in the first legislation which would be appropriate, some such prohibition and some such language so that right from the start it will be made clear to the public and the people that, while we are drafting our boys to fight, while we in substance are drafting our volunteers to fight longer than they contracted for, we are going to prevent anyone from getting any improper profit out of this great effort.

Mr. VINSON. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that I will introduce tomorrow a bill dealing with the question of renegotiation providing that every contract not only for armaments but every other contract of the Government will be subject to renegotiation. We should try to write into law something that will prohibit and stop this situation of 5 percenters on Government contracts.

Mr. VORYS. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHILBIN].

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee has given a most comprehensive report on the current diplomatic and military situation now confronting the Nation and the world.

I do not desire at this time to elaborate upon his remarks and recommendations which I know have made a very deep impression upon this House as they will upon the country. But in view of the great crisis which faces us as a Nation, I feel bound as a member of the Armed Services Committee to present, or rather to reiterate in substance some very concrete views regarding the world situation which I have held for some time and which upon many occasions I have heretofore expressed.

First, let me say that I agree that there is no further time to lose in putting the resources and strength of this Nation into a full state of preparation to meet any and every contingency. The world about us is threatening any day, any moment, to break out into another dreadful conflagration. The ruthless, tyrannical forces of organized world communism have spread their tentacles far and wide over the face of the earth. They have subjugated and enslaved millions of helpless peoples. Their demonstrated aim is world conquest. Only America, and America standing practically alone, has the power, the strength, the will and purpose to bar the way to these evil forces from reaching their goal and enslaving Americans and all other free peoples and destroying the civilization which has been built up throughout the centuries with so much sacrifice and bloodshed.

Certainly the present situation requires immediate and vigorous action by Congress and the Executive. We must move with utmost dispatch. There can be no delay. We can brook no interference. We can tolerate no disloyalty. We can shelter no half-heartedness. There must be an immediate full-scaled, intensive, yes, I will say advisedly, an urgent, united effort to build up a military force and an industrial potential that will be able and adequate to protect and defend this Nation and carry out our commitments for the defense of human liberty and our free way of life.

Military and economic power is not enough to cope with this situation, indispensable as this is. We must have an immediate clarification of foreign policy designed to inform the American people and the world, clearly and frankly, of our objectives for the attainment of a peaceful world through cooperative international action and the neutralization of Communist efforts to enslave mankind. Early stepping up of our activities to bring accurate information and enlightenment to all peoples is highly desirable.

Measures to protect the internal security are most urgent, immediately mandatory. We cannot permit Trojan horses filled with Communist conspirators to rove through this Nation ready at a signal to disgorge a flood of sabotage and destruction upon our communications, our vital public services, and our national defense industries. This is of paramount importance now. Every appropriate Government agency, national, State, and local, must be organized, mobilized, and alerted to combat these internal enemies who threaten us so despicably from within. It is also very essential that we immediately organize civilian defense and disaster components.

Our armed services, all of them, must be alerted to the possibilities of further attack anywhere. Let us wake up. Anything can happen at any moment, and for God's sake let us be ready. Let us not be taken again by surprise.

Let us marshal all our strength, build additional forces as the world situation requires, and unite the entire American people and the decent, freedom-loving peoples of the world against the evils of organized Communist tyranny.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the balance of my time be allotted to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the gentleman's statement that he expects on tomorrow to introduce a bill which will reactivate renegotiation. Is that correct?

Mr. VINSON. It has already been prepared. If we did not have this bill up here this afternoon, I would drop it in the hopper this afternoon. The gentleman understands that his committee already has a provision written in law that all contracts relating to the Army, Navy, and Air Force for the fiscal year 1951 are subject to renegotiation. But this is broader and applies to all Government contracts.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is this a complete reactivation of the renegotiation statute as we developed it during World War II?

Mr. VINSON. It is along the same line as was established before and the whole thing is considered along that line. It is very constructive legislation and comes from Secretary Symington's hands.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Of course the gentleman recalls that we instituted renegotiation by a very simple amendment at the outset during the consideration of the sixth supplemental defense bill in 1942, and it was revised in a tax bill by the Committee on Ways and Means in 1943. It became quite a broad statute covering all phases of defense procurement. Does this bill cover the same scope?

Mr. VINSON. This is so broad that while I think the Committee on Armed Services might have jurisdiction, I today requested the Speaker of the House that even though our committee did have jurisdiction to refer the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I appreciate the information the gentleman has given. I am glad to know that steps are being taken in that direction. As the gentleman knows, I was much concerned in the development of the renegotiation statute.

Mr. VINSON. May I say in this connection I think it was the gentleman's amendment which started the whole thing during the World War. The gentleman is entitled to recognition for having originated it, or at least putting it in the statute. The gentleman has always been strong for renegotiation. But we must go one step further in this preparedness program—and that is all this is—we must stop, by language, if it can so be drafted, people—or to use the expression of the gentleman from Ohio—almost vultures, standing around here trying to make 5 percent or 10 percent out of Government contracts. It is the most difficult thing to find language to cover it. We went through it in World War II. But something along that line, as well as renegotiation should be enacted as early as possible. The House and the country can just understand that we have to enter into a worthwhile preparedness defensive program and the first thought of the Congress and the Nation has to be the defense of this country.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. There is no question about that.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. WHITTEN. At this point, since this legislation is before the House, I want to urge, in view of the report of the Comptroller General, that we see to it that in any legislation which is passed the Comptroller General shall have a right to go into these matters more fully than has been true in the past.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I also hope that is incorporated in the bill.

As the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] has suggested, I followed the development of the renegotiation proposition from the outset. Again, in 1948 when we provided funds for a 17-group air force, we reactivated renegotiation for the procurement under the speed-up funds then provided. Unfortunately, the 1948 money for the 70-group air force was frozen, in large part, and that is partly responsible for the situation we have today.

We were also distressed in the Appropriations Committee, in the spring of 1948, to find that other money which had been provided for research and development was being used for other purposes under direction of the President's Budget Bureau. Gen. Curtis LeMay, who was in charge of the strategic air command at that time, testified in our hearings that this taking of the funds away from research and development set back that program at least 18 months. And the President wrote a letter to agency heads restricting them to supporting budget action. Today we are paying some of the price for that.

Now, it is not a matter of bringing up these matters to show we had foresight, but it is to let the people know how things could be different. The American people are interested in knowing how they can get some assurance that these mistakes will not be repeated in the future. We will not avoid them unless they are recognized.

I have here a letter which I received from the comptroller of the Air Force under date of April 8, 1950, in response to my own letter of April 6, 1950, in regard to the effect of the freezing of the Air Force funds for this fiscal year 1950. When we return to the House I shall ask permission to place that in the RECORD at this point. It shows the effect of the freezing of the $735,000,000 which the Congress, and I may say on the initiative of the House of Representatives, put into the appropriation bill for the defense establishment last year. I shall also insert a letter from the Treasury giving the record on the expenditures for the first 6 months of this year. The letters referred to follow:

DEPARTMENT OF THE AIR FORCE,
HEADQUARTERS, UNITED STATES AIR FORCE,
Washington, D. C., April 19, 1950.

Hon. FRANCIS CASE,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CASE: This is in reply to your letter of April 6, 1950, in which you requested information regarding Department of the Air Force fiscal year 1950 funds which were frozen by the President.

Following the enactment of the fiscal year 1950 appropriations bill, the President directed the Secretary of Defense to reserve the additional funds added by the Congress to the President's 48 group budget for the purpose of building up toward a 58 group Air Force. As a result, the following funds were placed in reserve.

Appropriation:
Construction of aircraft and related procurement	$577,755,000
Special procurement	8,338,000
Maintenance and operations	130,928,000
Research and development	18,000,000
Contingencies	733,000
Total	735,754,000

Had the Air Force been authorized to obligate the entire appropriations enacted by the Congress for fiscal year 1950, the aircraft-procurement program for that fiscal year would have been expanded from 1,250 to 1,832 aircraft and the Air Force would have continued its build-up toward a 58 group level.

In the case of research and development, the reservation of funds in this appropriation resulted in the slowing down of the rate of development, and, in some instances, the elimination of certain projects.

The placing of these funds in reserve had no effect on the radar screen, and this program is being prosecuted as originally planned. However, it should be pointed out that the fiscal year 1950 appropriations bill did not provide funds specifically for this activity. Provision was made in the bill, however, for the transfer to the "acquisition and construction of real property" appropriation of the funds required to finance this program. Such action necessitated the reprograming of activities in the "aircraft and related procurement" and "maintenance and operations" appropriations to the extent necessary to finance the fiscal year 1950 increment of the radar screen.

The total amount which the conferees of the House and the Senate added to the appropriation estimates of the Department of the Air Force for fiscal year 1950, as passed by the Congress, was $735,754,000. The amount set aside in reserve by direction of the President also totaled $735,754,000.

Sincerely yours,

E. W. RAWLINGS,
Lieutenant General, United States Air Force, Deputy Chief of Staff, Comptroller.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FISCAL SERVICE,
Washington, July 12, 1950.

Hon. JOHN TABER,
House of Representatives,
Room 1126, House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN TABER: Pursuant to your telephone request, I am enclosing a table that shows the budget estimates of January 1950 for the fiscal year 1950, compared with actual receipts and expenditures for that fiscal year, on the basis of daily Treasury statement classifications.

I hope this will give you the information that you desire.

Very truly yours,

E. F. BARTELT,
Fiscal Assistant Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RIVERS].

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Chairman, I am reluctant to impose upon your time at this time for 5 minutes, but I do believe

I should make my position clear in this matter right now, once and for all.

First of all, I want to make this statement. Ten years I have sat at the feet of the gentleman from Georgia, CARL VINSON; 10 years I have sat at the feet of the greatest chairman that any committee has ever had in the history of this Nation. I will say to you that the gentleman from Georgia, Chairman VINSON, has exhibited more vision than all the Presidents and all the members of the executive branch on matters of defense, since time began. He built for this Nation the largest Navy the world has ever known. It kicked from the seas everything the Japanese had, and it roamed the Pacific at will. He built the largest Marine Corps and naval air arm this Nation has ever had. He was the leader in this 70-group air-force fight. He wanted to give the Nation the best Air Force the world could provide. He wanted to give the Nation the best Army the world could provide. But his advice was not heeded, and we might just as well face the facts. Who is responsible for that? The executive branch of the Government, and you know it. I want to say right here and now that I will not have any part of that.

Mr. ELSTON. I think the gentleman will agree that every member of the Committee on the Armed Services supported our chairman; did he not?

Mr. RIVERS. I was coming to that. With very few exceptions in each of the 10 years I have served on the committee, 6 with the Committee on Naval Affairs, we got more bills passed through this Congress than any committee in the history of all the Congresses of the United States, as the gentleman from Missouri well knows. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] saw to that. He, with his great leadership, tells you this bill is necessary and you will follow him; certainly I shall. But I want the world to know, I want the Nation to know, that the Committee on Armed Services is not responsible for the debacle this country faces today; it is the executive branch of the Government, not the Congress of the United States, or the Armed Services Committee under the leadership of the gentleman from Georgia, CARL VINSON.

This is not a time for recrimination; you know that, and I know that; but we have got to go forward; we have got to face the facts which my chairman has called to your attention. We are in one bad situation; only a miracle can save us in Korea. You know that, but I want the records to be crystal-clear that had the executive branch of Government followed the leadership of CARL VINSON this Nation today could tell the world where to go in a very few minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIVERS. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not think the gentleman overstated what he said about the chairman of this committee. Does the gentleman recall of a single bill brought out of this committee that we did not accept?

Mr. RIVERS. I know of none, and we are going to accept this one; all Americans are.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly.

Mr. RIVERS. We appropriated money here, but it was withheld by the executive branch of the Government. We might just as well face the fact. We have got that same ox in the ditch, the very same one the gentleman from Georgia was talking about; and you and I have got to pull that same ox out of the ditch. But I want no part of the blame for our present situation to be saddled on the Congress of the United States; it cannot be, and you know it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] is recognized.

(Mr. CANFIELD asked and was given permission to yield the time allotted to him to the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. BROWN.)

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time because I have been extremely interested in the debate which is taking place here today, a debate which I believe may be good for the American people and the future peace of the world. I have been especially interested in the remarks of the chairman of the Committee on the Armed Services, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], the remarks of the Republican member of the committee on the Armed Services, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT], the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WALSH], and those of the gentleman from South Carolina, also a member of the committee [Mr. RIVERS].

I wish at the very outset to say to you that America is at the crossroads; indeed, the whole world is at the crossroads today. These are critical hours. I am sure every individual Member of Congress, yea, every American citizen, is behind our boys in uniform who are fighting alone today. I have my own ideas as to how this state of affairs came about; and, if I desired, perhaps I could be quite critical of some persons and some of the policies responsible for our being where we are, but the fact remains American boys are fighting 7,000 miles away from home with their backs to the sea, and that we are trying to do something about it, and to give them the equipment and the tools of war with which to defend their lives.

I regret—yes, I deeply regret—that while we are engaged in fighting the spread of communism in Korea 7,000 miles away, for some reason or other some people are dragging their feet here at home, and we are encountering difficulty in our attempts to get brought up in the Congress for consideration the measures which would at least restrict the activities of those Communists and their helpers who would destroy us from within while our foreign foes seek to destroy us from without. But this is not a time to attempt to fix blame or responsibility for that which has gone on before. I am sure the American people in their wisdom will reach a decision in due time as to who is responsible and who is to blame.

We now have before us a bill to break the contract, or the word, of the Government of the United States, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS] has pointed out, with the American boys who have voluntarily entered the armed services in recent months and years. That sort of legislation cannot be approached lightly, as I am sure the gentleman from Georgia will agree. In that connection, because we are going to pass this bill—that seems apparent—I believe it is necessary that the American people know certain things.

For instance, Mr. Chairman, the American people should know the Congress provided a ceiling of approximately 2,000,000 men for the Armed Forces, and that of this date we are nearly 600,000 men below that ceiling. It is not the responsibility of or because of any failure of the Congress of the United States that this particular situation exists.

I hope the chairman of the great Committee on the Armed Services, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], will point out later in his remarks, either on this bill or on the bill which follows, just what the Congress has done to provide for the defense of this country. I suggest this because I am fearful that once we vote the powers and the appropriations being requested by the administration, and perhaps the Congress adjourns, as the majority leader suggested yesterday, so we will no longer have the opportunity and the benefit of free debate in the well of this House, or on the floor of the other body, some officials may attempt to place the responsibility and the blame for the mistakes and the failures of the past and present, on the Congress of the United States. I do not want that to happen. So I feel it is time we make it clear here and now that certain things have been done by the Congress for the common defense.

This Congress did pass the Unification Act at the request of the administration, and I would like to say for the benefit of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] that I went along with the administration on the passage of that act when the gentleman, in his wisdom, pointed out the dangers involved. I am not so sure we were as wise as we thought in the action we took in following the request of the administration in this connection. Perhaps the chairman of the Committee on the Armed Services had much clearer vision and better judgment at that time than some of the rest of us.

We enacted the stockpiling bill under which practically nothing has been done. And, as I mentioned a moment ago, we voted more manpower, about 600,000 more men, for the armed services, than the military has seen fit to call to the colors. Our military leaders could now have 2,000,000 trained men under arms if they had seen fit to use the authority Congress voted them. We have appropriated, and Chairman VINSON, I want you to correct me if I am wrong, something like $1,500,000,000 more money for the National Defense Establishment, since World War II ended, than has been spent or obligated by that agency.

I believe the gentleman from Georgia will agree with me, and I want the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WALSH] to listen to this if he is here, that never once, regardless of the political party Members might belong to, was there more than one single vote against any defense appropriation or any defense measure during the war years.

I would like also to point out with all the vigor at my command that the Congress has gone along on every other request of the military and the administration to strengthen our national defense. For instance, we set up the Central Intelligence Agency to keep America informed as to what was going on throughout the world.

We also created the National Security Council during the Eightieth Congress. In order that we might give security to our Nation and to our people, we also set up the National Security Resources Board, so we might be prepared in a material way in case of danger.

Oh, yes, we voted more naval aircraft and plane carriers than have been constructed. It was not the Congress who refused to continue such construction or ordered the partially finished aircraft carriers abandoned; that was another agency of the Government.

We have appropriated nearly $60,000,000,000 for national defense purposes since the war ended; and we provided, if you please, sirs, for a 70-group air force, not once, but three different times. It was not until just a week or so ago, not until then, that we finally did get the consent of the administration to go ahead with the 70-group air force program.

We have spent about $35,000,000,000 on economic and other aid for foreign countries, because we were told we had to decide whether we wanted to spend a few billion dollars now for economic aid to guarantee peace, or whether, instead, we wanted to spend $100,000,000,000 or much more each year for war. Well, that program simply has not worked out. At least it certainly has not given us a peaceful world or eliminated the dangerous threat of world war III. And I am not unmindful, Mr. Chairman, in fact, I rather resent deep down in my heart, may I say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT], the fact that the American boys who are fighting and dying on the battlefields in Korea today, with their backs to the sea, do not have a single soldier from a single nation we have helped so much, outside of Korea fighting alongside them. That is a sad and disillusioning situation.

May I also point out that not more than 6 or 7 weeks ago a committee of this Congress was told the military budget for next year would not be any larger than it was for this year, and perhaps considerably less. Neither am I unmindful of the fact that the military leaders of our Nation more than a year ago told us Korea was not defensible, and was of no strategic value to us. It was upon their orders, not ours, that American troops were withdrawn from Korea.

Mr. Chairman, I could go on and on and talk about many other things the Congress has done in the belief we were contributing to the building of an adequate national defense, and I could point out numerous high-level mistakes of the past to show the responsibility for the present unsatisfactory situation which exists today does not rest upon the Congress. I hope that the gentleman from Georgia, the chairman of the Armed Services Committee, able as he is, will point in measured words, for the benefit of this Congress and the country, a complete list of the many things the Congress of the United States has done to strengthen our national defense and to assure the security of the American people. Such action is important, Mr. Chairman, and, I am sure, will be most helpful to a proper understanding of what has gone on before, what our present defense situation really is, and what we must do to prepare for the days ahead.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD].

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] made one of the finest speeches that I have ever listened to in this House, and I want the membership of this House to know that I am following his leadership 100 percent in regard to this emergency bill.

I think some things that have been brought up during this debate, particularly by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT], a dear friend of mine, should be considered by this House. In the first place, the United States is committed to the principle of the United Nations. Rightly or wrongly we are committed to it.

Now, let us consider Korea. Who drew the thirty-eighth parallel line in Korea? Who approved it? Was it the United States? It was approved by the United Nations. Then there happens to be another principle of the United Nations, and that is the self-determination of peoples. When the people of the free Republic of South Korea wanted to hold an election, we particpated under the auspices of the United Nations in holding that free election in July of 1948, over 2 years ago, and the free Republic of South Korea was born, and the North Korean Republic refused to let the United Nations come in to supervise and see that their election was free. So, some other forces have been at work besides our own. Of course, when that constitutional government was established in Korea we withdrew our troops, because our military people said that we had no business there; it was a country on its own, and later on we went in only in an advisory position.

Now I want to ask the gentlemen who are finding so much fault with the situation as it has developed in Korea would they be willing at this time to mass 1,000,000 or 2,000,000 men on the east-west German line in anticipation of something which might happen? If that something did happen, would the Monday morning quarterbacks say we were at fault because we did not mass those 2,000,000 men on the east-west German line?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I cannot yield at this time.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I should like to answer the gentleman's challenge.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Once aggression took place in Korea from the Communist-led people in the north, the United Nations appealed to the member nations of the United Nations to oppose that aggression. Because we are probably the greatest and most powerful and outstanding nation that is supporting the true principles of the United Nations, we responded to that call, and we are doing the best we can. We did not pick the battleground, we did not pick the murky weather, we did not pick the swamps or mountains of Korea in which to fight. Someone else picked that battleground, and picked it by aggressive action. We are doing our best to oppose it.

The program of opposition to communism since World War II ended is an all-over program. It is not just a military action in Korea, it is not just an occupation in Germany, it is not an airlift to Berlin, it is an all-over program. It is an economic program to strengthen those nations of Europe that are known as the ECA nations, so that they can resist communism within their own borders, so that they can sustain constitutional government and the freedom and liberty of their people.

I want to ask some of these Monday morning quarterbacks like my good friend from Missouri [Mr. SHORT], how did he vote on the motion to recommit the Korean aid bill? How did he vote on economic aid to the ECA countries in Europe? How did he follow through on the Korean aid bill, I should like to know.

Mr. SHORT. Yes; I voted against the Korean aid bill. Many of the stanchest supporters of the United Nations voted against it. I voted against it for the reason that it was absolutely silly to send economic aid to build up a rich prize over there unless you were ready to defend it.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. All right; how about the European ECA bill?

Mr. SHORT. I voted against it.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. The gentleman says he wanted military aid to Korea, but he is not committing himself on how he was calling the play on the economic aid to Europe the purpose of which was to defeat communism within the borders of Europe.

Yes; and there is something else I want to call to the attention of the gentleman, and that is the economy drive. What caused the mothballing of planes? What caused the mothballing of battleships and cruisers? It was the economy drive of the gentleman from Missouri and his colleagues of the same persuasion.

Mr. SHORT. I will tell the gentleman why: Because the Eightieth Congress voted more than this administration would spend.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I refuse to yield further, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SHORT. The gentleman does not want to hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes, so I may answer my friend from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman cannot entertain that request, because the time for debate has been allotted.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. The fact is the President cut back $735,000,000 in our air program that we offered last year. He impounded it. General Johnson impounded it at the suggestion and recommendation of the Chief Executive for economy. There is where your economy comes from.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, in answer to what the gentleman from California said about the situation in Europe and Germany, I want to simply go on record saying again, as I said before, long ago we should have been taking steps to build up a military potential in western Germany.

Under permission granted by the House, I place here a colloquy which took place between the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] and myself during the debate on the military aid bill, from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 17, 1949, a year ago:

Mr. JUDD. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is western Germany included, and if not, why not?

Mr. JUDD. Western Germany is not included. You can think of some obvious reasons, of course. Probably the best natural defense line available is the Rhine. That is a sizable barrier, but most of the German armament plants are east of that barrier. I think it is understood that the German economy will contribute basic things, such as coal, steel, chemicals, and so forth, but not finished armaments.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Where is the greatest industrial-producing capacity for armaments in Europe?

Mr. JUDD. The greatest industrial-producing capacity for armaments is in Germany, but unfortunately it is in an area which because of our retreat from defense barriers further east like the Elbe, could not be kept under our control.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Where is the greatest reserve of trained fighting manpower in Europe?

Mr. JUDD. Excepting Russia, it is in Germany.

So, I will say to the gentleman from California that it is not hindsight today to point out that we should have been doing something in western Germany while the Russians were building up their so-called police force in eastern Germany—and there were earlier observations by the Member from South Dakota in the Herter committee report of 1947–48.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I take the floor again to try to straighten out the record on what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRICE] had to say, I think about me, a while ago when he was on the floor. I asked him to yield to me and he did not. In no way did I inject politics in my statement when I raised the question as to what had occurred to the moneys that have been appropriated. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRICE] directed me to read the editorials of the newspapers for information for the people in my district. May I say to the gentleman from Illinois I am a little bit more energetic than that, and anyone who knows me would know better than to challenge me in such a way. I do not generally inject politics into my statements here. I try to get some facts. He has referred us to editorials.

The distinguished chairman of the committee said that his committee was going into this problem and I accepted that as a complete answer to my question. Also, I see that the distinguished committee of which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRICE] is a member, is not going to depend upon newspaper editorials for their answers, either. Then the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WALSH]—I just read his statement in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—I would like to say this to him, not as advice but as a mere suggestion: As he goes down through life, it might be well for him to consider the errors of the past when he is dealing with the dollars put up by the stockholders or taxpayers or bond buyers. There are three groups who like to know what their dollars are used for. If the gentleman ever becomes a success industrially, he will certainly try to find out who made the error, instead of washing the thing out and paying no attention to the errors of the past as he appropriates for the future.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. I yield.

Mr. DOYLE. I think it is appropriate for me briefly to call the attention of the Members of the House to two votes. First, I call your attention to the vote on aid to Korea on January 19, 1950. The vote "aye" was 191. The vote "no" was 193. It lost by only two votes. The second vote was on February 9, 1950. The "aye" vote was 240, and the "no" vote 134.

My suggestion is that all of us ought to hesitate very emphatically at this tragic time in the world's history before being hypercritical of what mistakes may or may not have been made. History itself will best be the judge of events of the past. Some of the gentlemen who today are saying things designed to condemn and find fault with others are those who voted against the proposed help of 60,000 to Korea just in January and February of this year. I think some of us ought to review what we did on those two occasions. Self-inspection will remove much criticism of others. Let us not be partisan. Let us be truly objective.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. I am sorry I cannot yield to my friend from Pennsylvania. I would like to yield but the time is limited.

Mr. Chairman, many of my colleagues have spoken about the mistakes that have been made, particularly by the Defense Department and the State Department. Hindsight is a whole lot better than foresight. We can look back at a lot of mistakes that have been made, and I suppose it may be a question of judgment to determine whether they were mistakes. I can think of a good many things that have occurred during the past few years that seem to me to have been mistakes. I think if they had been handled differently, we might be in a better situation today. Some of the questions raised by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] are difficult, if not impossible to answer. But I do not think it does us much good at this moment to enumerate mistakes, or to focus too much attention on them in this critical hour.

We need to think about them. We need to take action to prevent their recurrence. And to the extent that the same people who made those mistakes are governing our policies now, we need to make some changes. But let us not air this on the floor of the House when our tempers become a little frayed. Mine does occasionally. My chairman called that to my attention in committee yesterday, so I am going to try to be careful, because, like my good friend from South Carolina [Mr. RIVERS], I have learned a great deal under Mr. Vinson's tutelage. However, there are a few things that I think should be mentioned. Not all of the mistakes have been made by the Defense Establishment. I think some of them have been made in the Congress, and I want to mention one that we made in this Congress, in my judgment. I think we made a mistake when we amended the Unification Act. We did that. Perhaps we were a little gullible. Perhaps we were influenced by the demand for economy. Perhaps we placed a little too much confidence in the report of the Hoover Commission as to what savings could be accomplished. Whatever may have been the reason, we did it. I have a deep and abiding conviction that some of our immediate difficulties stem from that very act, and perhaps we ought to change it again. But out of this unification squabble—and it was a squabble—arose the hearings which were conducted by the Committee on Armed Services not so long ago, starting out with the so-called B–36 investigation, and then going into a study of unification.

What was the real question about unification? It was a struggle between the components of the Military Establishment to put into effect their interpretations of what unification meant. We did a great deal of good in those hearings. In my humble judgment, if it had not been for those hearings the Navy would have been scuttled. We would not have any Marine Corps. Maybe that is a little strong, but, thank God, we had those hearings, and thank God we had a chairman who would pursue that thing to a conclusion and come up with recommendations, and stand firmly by those recommendations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARDY] has expired.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield my time to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. I thank you very much. I do not want to take all of my chairman's time, but I would like to conclude with one or two observations.

In the Armed Services Committee we are not frustrated with politics. When we are dealing with national defense we must not permit political considerations to be injected. We do not do it in the committee. Let us not do it in the House. Let us come forth and correct the errors that have been made and take steps to prevent a repetition of those errors. Let us do the best that we can now and do it quickly, to meet whatever the needs may be immediately before us. Let us prepare ourselves to the fullest to meet any threat, wherever it may occur in the world. But let us not so concentrate our strength in one spot as to become too weak in another—more important and more vulnerable spot. We are receiving help from some other nations, but let us keep in mind this fact, that whether or not we have the support of the other members of the United Nations, we have no course except to stand up and fight for the democracy that we enjoy, to fight against the encroachment of communism wherever it may arise. Any other course leads us to eventual destruction and slavery.

Let me express my appreciation to my chairman for yielding me these few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DEGRAFFENRIED].

Mr. DEGRAFFENRIED. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Armed Services I could not remain silent here this afternoon and not say a few words. In the beginning let me state that I did not rise in a spirit of criticism toward anyone, although I think constructive criticism is oftentimes very good; but I do want to say that since I have been, for just a short time, on the Committee on Armed Services I have been impressed with the leadership of the majority and also of the minority on that committee. As my distinguished colleague from Virginia said a moment ago, we have not had any politics on that committee in the bills that have come from that committee. When those bills have come up on the floor of the House you have seen both sides of the aisle fighting for those bills to go through. I think it is a tribute to both parties and the House that that has existed.

I voted for aid to Korea, I voted for the Marshall plan, I have voted with the administration on many measures although I have consistently fought against the so-called civil rights issues and I expect to do so as a southerner as long as I am here on the floor of the House.

We have had distinguished leadership on our committee. How easy it would be for the gentleman from Georgia to stand here on the floor today and tell you: "Yes, I told you so long ago; I have been telling you this all along." Instead of that, what does he do? Does he stand here and tell you about the money that we appropriated that was not used, although he knows it full well? He wrote me back in December of last year when I was at Tuscaloosa, Ala., to please write him and give him some of my reactions to the investigation that we had just had, and I wrote him this, among other things, and I quote from my letter of which I sent a copy to every member of the Committee on Armed Services:

> The responsibility of Congress for appropriations should remain inviolate. Steps should be taken by Congress to retain unimpaired use of this responsibility. The Bureau of the Budget has an important function to perform but should not be permitted to control the amount of the appropriation. When Congress appropriates money for certain designated agencies and uses, neither the President, the Secretary of Defense, the Bureau of the Budget, nor any other person or department should be permitted to limit or curtail or reduce the expenditure or use of such appropriation as designated by the Congress.

I wrote that last December, and it was not hindsight when I wrote that letter. We in the Armed Services Committee knew that some of the money that was being appropriated by this Congress was not being used, had not been used. I have figures here to show where it had not been used. I do not criticize any particular individual for this, because no doubt the administration was trying to do like many members of the minority party and many members of the majority party, reduce expenditures where it could possibly do so. In reducing those expenditures the administration was trying to act in the best interests of our country. The point, however, is that we, the Congress, have the responsibility for the appropriations. If we appropriate too much, that is our responsibility, and if we appropriate too little that is our responsibility; but the executive branch of the Government should not have the right to control the appropriations of Congress, because it is given to the Congress by the Constitution of the United States.

The situation in Korea is bad. Whose fault it is it will do no good to say. Our chairman has taken this position, and rightfully so. I think it would not do any good for him to stand here and tell you about what he has been trying to get done that has not been done. He says action must be taken now regardless of whose fault it was that we failed of action in the past; that we have got to get our program under way. That is the position we have got to take in this Congress.

The bill before us today is not a pleasant bill to vote for.

As has been pointed out, these men have a contract that has expired or will expire and we are requiring them by our votes here today to extend that contract. Many of them we are placing in a position of danger by casting our votes. We are extending their contracts knowing that we are placing many of them in a position of danger. But we have got to think about our country's welfare above everything else. It will not do to have those men discharged over there now from the service when they are performing their duty and in the middle of it be sent back here and force us to send over other men. There are probably some 40,000 or more men—I do not know the exact number—that could be discharged from the forces over there in Japan or in Korea, although many of them would reenlist. We cannot afford to lose any of them now. So acting in what I think is our best interest and in the best interest of our country's welfare I intend to vote for and support this measure, although I do it with reluctance.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. YOUNG, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 3937) to authorize the President to extend enlistments in the Armed Forces of the United States, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the bill, H. R. 9177, will be laid upon the table, it being similar to a Senate bill passed by the House.

There was no objection.

SUSPENDING RESTRICTIONS ON THE AUTHORIZED PERSONNEL STRENGTHS OF THE ARMED FORCES

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9178) to suspend the authorized personnel strength of the Armed Forces, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9178, with Mr. WHITTEN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think this bill will result in the extended debate that the previous bill produced, although I think it was highly important that we had that debate. Later on we are going to have more debate and it is going to be pinpointed more than this recent debate was.

Now, this is the second bill before the House as a result of the Korean war.

It is another measure which responds to the needs imposed upon our country by the difficulties we face in the world.

I will explain very briefly the need for the legislation and what its effect will be.

Existing law fixes a statutory ceiling of 2,005,882 on the personnel strengths of the Armed Forces. That authority is contained in the Selective Service Act and in the Army-Air Force Composition bill approved only a couple of weeks ago by the President.

That two million ceiling is composed of these strengths in each of the armed services.

The Army's ceiling is 837,000. The Navy's ceiling is 666,882. The Air Force's ceiling is 502,000.

The build-up of our Armed Forces envisaged under the program recommended by the President last week will exceed these strength ceilings in each service except possibly in the Army.

As regards the Army, the build-up will come so close to the present ceiling, under present plans, that a slight increase in manpower needs would exceed the statutory limit. It is necessary, therefore, to suspend these ceilings, and this bill does that for an indefinite period.

In the meantime, after enactment of this measure, the strength of our Armed Forces will still be governed by available funds. As a result, the Congress will at all times have clear-cut control over the extent to which the Armed Forces will expand.

This legislation is a precautionary measure taken in advance to meet, first, the present plans to strengthen the Armed Forces, as proposed by the President in his July 19 message, and, second, to provide the statutory leeway that will be required should a much larger expansion of the Armed Forces become necessary in the future.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. BAILEY. I would like to ask the distinguished gentleman from Georgia, the chairman of the Armed Services Committee, whether this committee has given or plans to give consideration to the restoration of the dependency payments.

Mr. VINSON. We have not reached that yet. If through the draft or through the ordering into Federal service of the Reserves or National Guard that question gets acute, we will promptly give it consideration.

Mr. BAILEY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. VINSON. For the time being we have not gotten around to it because we are concentrating right now to find out how much strength we actually have and how much more we have to get.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I want to compliment the gentleman on his statement. I was very pleased to note where the Marine Corps is going to be increased by 57,000. I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Armed Services if anything is contemplated being done along the line of his committee suggestion that the Commandant of the Marine Corps be given a voice on the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Mr. VINSON. I introduced a bill to do that, and it has the support of an overwhelming majority of the members of the Armed Services Committee. But, we have been so bogged down with other matters that we just have not gotten around to it. We just cannot detour to handle those kinds of things right now when the house is on fire, and we have to get busy to put it out.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman is convinced now that the national defense authorities see the necessity for keeping a strong Marine Corps and also a strong Navy. I know the gentleman has fought for that over the years and has been very helpful.

Mr. VINSON. Well, I do not think it is exactly fair to say that the national defense, meaning the Pentagon hierarchy, was ever in favor of complete elimination of the Marine Corps; I do not think that is exactly correct. Perhaps someone thought that it was a little bit larger than the facts warranted, but to my way of thinking, when we finish with our present hearings on the state of our defenses, I am satisfied that we will be asking for more than the newspapers state is being asked for now as far as the Marine Corps is concerned. The newspapers stated yesterday that somebody said this and somebody said that about the proposed program, but regardless of that, I think the Marine Corps has to be strengthened considerably because it is a very effective fighting organization, and it must be strong both on the ground and in the air.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That is true of the Navy also.

Mr. VINSON. Yes, I know that.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I am very glad to hear what the gentleman said. It is encouraging because I have a very distinct and vivid recollection, and it is in the printed RECORD of the hearings on the unification bill, that General Eisenhower did recommend that the Marine Corps be reduced to a police force status.

Mr. VINSON. The Committee on Armed Services knows what the Marine Corps can do, and the Marine Corps will always be in existence as long as we have the power to bring it before the House for its consideration.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. I think it would be helpful, perhaps, to the Members, if the able chairman would point out what our present authorized strength is in the Army and the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Air Force, and our present actual strength in those different categories.

Mr. VINSON. The legislative ceiling as far as the Army is concerned is 837,000 and the 1951 appropriated strength is 630,000. The statutory ceiling of the Navy, including the Marines, is 666,882 and the 1951 appropriated strength is 461,000. In the Air Force the authorized ceiling is 502,000 and the 1951 appropriated strength is 416,000.

Mr. SHORT. I am very happy that the chairman has put those figures in the RECORD, because it clearly shows that we have not as yet come up by any means to our authorized strength.

Mr. VINSON. That is right.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWE].

Mr. TOWE. Mr. Chairman, when the bill now under consideration was before the Armed Services Committee last Friday, I urged that action be postponed for a short time so that the Armed Services Committee, the Congress, and the people of this country might have some definite information as to where the country is going. The present manpower ceilings in the Defense Establishment are sufficient for today, tomorrow, and possibly for several months. My sole purpose in opposing the reporting of the bills and my only purpose in speaking today is to draw the attention of the American people to the fact that we may be embarking upon a course of action which will require manpower and resources beyond our capacity.

No matter what we may call the present engagement in which we are involved, the fact is that we are at war, and it should be noted at this point that neither the people of our country nor the Congress has participated in that decision. Technically, the defense of South Korea is a United Nations undertaking but actually the United States is the sole defender. If there should be other outbreaks, especially in the Far East, it is reasonable to assume that the United States alone will undertake to stop the enemy.

I assume that the Congress will approve the legislation which is before us but when it does, it should understand that it is placing in the hands of the President the power to call into the service as many men as he chooses and to send them to any part of the world that he decides we must defend. In other words, we are placing great additional power in the hands of those men who have been running our Defense Establishment and the executive branch of our Government since the termination of the war and who are directly responsible for our confused foreign policy, but more important, it is the same group who are directly responsible for the almost complete lack of preparedness which we now find exists, despite the fact that since the termination of the war Congress has appropriated $95,000,000,000 for the Defense Establishment.

The country was told not so long ago that the prospects for peace were brighter than they had ever been since the termination of the war; that we did not need a Navy of any account; that amphibious landings and tank warfare were outmoded. In other words, the judgment of the top leaders in this administration has been wrong. I have no desire to be unduly critical of them. I suspect that their hearts are heavy, but the fact still remains that their judgment was not good. And I say again that we are now preparing to place great additional power at an extremely critical moment in the same hands.

Yesterday the President submitted a request for additional funds to increase the strength of our Defense Establishment. In the light of what is happening in the world today and what may very well happen tomorrow, the sum of money requested is obviously insufficient. The fact is that it will not do much more than bring our Defense Establishment up to the efficiency that it would have had about 2 years ago if funds requested at that time had not been slashed in what was described by the heads of the Department of Defense as an economy measure.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that the people of this country are entitled to know exactly where they are being led. They should be told just how we can carry on the defense of the world without completely wrecking our own economy and reducing ourselves to a totalitarian state.

It is interesting to note that although the present undertaking is technically the stand of the United Nations, America, and the American people alone, will pay the price, not only with our men but with our resources. The only aid which we have received up to this point comes in the form of laudatory resolutions approving what we are doing but not offering real assistance of any kind. I suspect that if there are other Koreas and we decide to defend them we will be alone in those undertakings.

Ten billion dollars is a drop in the bucket compared to what the actual cost will be, to say nothing of the loss of our young men.

If we in a laudable effort to assist other nations ruin America we will have done exactly what Mr. Stalin would like to see accomplished. There will then be very little hope for the future of the world.

From 1932 down to date whenever any emergency has arisen, either at home or abroad, the solution offered by the New Deal has been the acquisition of greater power and control and, of course, further expenditure of billions of dollars. These schemes have produced nothing up to now, except a weakening of America and involvements all over the world, which, if allowed to continue, will certainly ruin the greatest Nation on earth.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that we have reached the point where the Congress must assert itself and before it yields further to Executive pressure for more power it should insist on knowing exactly where we are being taken. If the Congress and the people of this country want to travel a road that may very well lead to ruination, they should make the decision.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWE. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. I commend the gentleman on his excellent statement. I certainly agree with him.

Mr. TOWE. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the measure now pending is intended to permit a very substantial increase in the numerical strength of our Armed Forces, I think it is not irrelevant that I refer to the problem involved in increasing that strength. It is a very serious problem. There is nothing very dramatic about it, but it hits home.

Under existing law each of the three services has endeavored to build up a reserve on a voluntary system. For the moment I am not including the National Guard which I believe should be considered separately. Rather, I am referring to the Organized Reserves, so-called, of the Army, the Naval Reserve and the Marine Corps and Air Force Reserve.

The figures given to the Committee on Armed Services and also to the Committee on Appropriations look rather good at first glance, but an examination into the actual situation does not bring much encouragement. Five hundred and twenty thousand men are now included in the Army Reserve. Only 250,000 of them are taking anything like what may be termed training. The rest are in what might be termed a pool, undergoing little or no training. The huge majority of the 520,000 are veterans of World War II. Their average age is approaching 28 years. Many of those men volunteered in the Reserves from the most patriotic motives as they were discharged from active duty at the conclusion of the war, but have undertaken heavy domestic burdens since then. Thousands and thousands of them have married and have children—dependents. Undoubtedly a few are not as strong physically as they were 5 or 6 years ago, due to some accident or illness. Of course, other elements may enter into the situation which, taken with the ones I have tried to describe, will greatly reduce that pool of 520,000 men. How much it will be reduced if called upon, no one knows. That pool will have to be relied upon, to a very large extent, in filling up the Regular Army to the figures contemplated, namely, 837,000. The pool cannot do it. The gap must be filled by men inducted under the draft, and they will come forward as raw recruits, or the gap may be filled in part by new men who will volunteer. They, too, will be raw recruits. The Army is contemplating—and it is no secret—filling up 10 divisions. We have only about three divisions now, and they are not at war strength. To fill up seven more divisions, largely with raw recruits, will take months and months. Not until next spring can we expect to have a usable division made up in such fashion. Our reserves are not sufficient.

Now we look at the Navy. The Navy Reserve contains 1,103,000 men. Only 204,000 are on an active training basis. The rest constitute a huge pool. The Navy is in better shape than the Army with respect to reserves. Landsman that I am, I venture an explanation of that, if you will bear with me, because this is exceedingly important when you talk about increasing the Armed Forces of the United States. The Army Reserve is expected to be organized finally into tactical units—divisions, regiments, battalions, companies, platoons, and squads. The Navy Reserve, by contrast, is not expected to be organized into crews of ships. None of the personnel of the Naval Reserve, and very properly the Navy follows that course, is organized to man a ship completely from skipper down.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. There is one exception in the Navy, they do have units of aircraft and submarine.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; that is true. I am speaking of the general pool. The Navy also is in better condition than the Army because in the Naval Reserve—and I may not use the correct expressions—there is a great pool of men who are subject to special assignments, men who have already had experience in the last war. They can be placed on a ship and assigned in a particular station and instantly go to work with the crew.

The Air Force has a reserve of 354,000 men. Only 68,000 of them are on an active training basis. Those men do their best, in 23 Air Force stations scattered over the country, to get some training once a week in flying and in the care of planes. The rest of that 354,000 men get training confined almost entirely to correspondence and listening to lectures; that is all.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. It occurs to me that many of these 68,000 men would perhaps be a little old for real active duty.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The same observation applies to all three of these categories. They are all getting older. Now, we have relied up to this point, mistakenly I believe—and now I am going to utter some sentiments which may not arouse uproarious applause—we have relied upon the volunteer system to maintain the reserve, and it has failed. Make no mistake about it, it has failed. Our Reserve strength ought to be three or four times the strength of our first-line forces. And it should be a well-trained Reserve.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. I think that is hardly fair, to say it has failed because it is on a volunteer basis, because there have been literally hundreds of thousands of veterans of the different branches of our armed services who had combat experience in the last war who have done their very best to get into Reserve training but have been unable to do so, and it has not been altogether due to the lack of funds. As far as the Air Force is concerned we gave them $75,000,000 which they never did spend. This proves that it is not the fault of Congress or the Committee on the Armed Services.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I did not mean to start the argument again as to where the blame lies.

Mr. SHORT. I want to get it very clear and unmistakable that the blame does not rest on the Congress. We have got to face the facts as they are.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am endeavoring to face the facts as they are and to look ahead.

Mr. SHORT. That is all right, and Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes—I want to give him all the time I have. The only way to improve is to recognize mistakes and to be honest and courageous enough to admit that they are mistakes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five additional minutes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I do not dispute the good objective of this legislation; I support it enthusiastically. It is going to take 8 or 9 months to fill up these units. We have not a large enough reserve that is trained; we must resort to the draft to a considerable extent. From the draft we get raw recruits who must be trained.

I can remember some experiences in World War II with respect to the National Guard. I remember the Twenty-seventh National Guard Division which was mobilized along with all the other divisions. It lacked 3,000 men of being at war strength. When it was mobilized that division had to spend 6 months training those new 3,000 recruits. Had it been at war strength when it was called into service it could have taken the field. None of these divisions that we are now talking about can take the field short of 6, 8 or 9 months.

That does not disturb me so deeply with respect to Korea alone. What I am thinking about is the long pull. How are we going to be sure of getting an adequate reserve composed of trained citizens? I say again, and I have been saying this for 30 years, that it can be done only by universal military training. It cannot be done in any other way. Suppose that in 1947 we had passed the UMT bill—incidentally the gentleman from New Jersey was the sponsor of it—and suppose that it had gone into effect immediately or within a reasonable period thereafter. Here we are in 1950. We would have had in our trained reserve by this time two complete classes, each having had 1 year of training and composed of 800,000 men each, available for service when a great military mobilization might come along, and completely adequate.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ELSTON. What assurance would we have had that the President or the administration would not have cut back the funds or would not have permitted that training?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I cannot tell, of course. I am trying to point out what I have believed for a great many years, that the only sound way for a democracy to preserve itself from a savage aggression is to rely upon trained citizens, trained in time of peace and subject to service only when war comes along, rather than to rely completely upon professional Regulars whom we cannot support in time of peace in large enough numbers and in sufficient strength to keep the country safe in war. We have got to face this thing some day. If this row in Korea expands into something much larger—God knows I hope it does not—we will be up against this question of reserves and we will find ourselves without them. You will simply have to call into the services through the draft raw recruits and thus for 6, 8, or 10 months break down the efficiency of your military units.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Is it not true that Australia and other countries are contemplating rejecting voluntary enlistments, and going to the compulsory method, so that there will be an even distribution of service?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not aware of what is going on in other countries. I am not in favor of rejecting volunteers. I am not in favor of rejecting men voluntarily enlisting in the Regular Army or National Guard or in the Reserves, but when you have not enough reserves and you have no means of knowing how many you will have a year from now or 2 years from now or 3 years from now, you have not the slightest idea where you are, which means you do not know where you are going.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, this afternoon we have heard the excellent and very apropos remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Georgia in which he pointed out some of the military weaknesses and some of the things that may be necessary to remedy them. Subsequently we heard the comments of the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] in which he pointed out, I think very adequately, the possible reasons for our present military condition and pointed out with justification the responsibility for our present circumstances.

Subsequently during the debate on the bill, H. R. 9177, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WALSH] very piously took the floor and stated that bygones should be bygones, that we should now forget the errors and mistakes of the past and go ahead from here on. He also complimented, and in that I join, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Armed Services. I say again that I join with him in that statement.

However, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WALSH], not too long ago, was taking an opposite point of view concerning the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Armed Services. You all are very familiar with the B–36 probe of last year. In October of 1949 the Committee on Armed Services held extensive hearings on procurement of the B–36 and related matters. Subsequently the committee filed a report, but during the hearings, if my recollection is correct, the gentleman from Indiana stomped out of the committee room and said he would not have one more thing to do with the investigation. If I am in error in regard to this, I would like to have the gentleman from Indiana correct me.

Mr. WALSH. At the completion of the gentleman's remarks I will ask for time to answer.

Mr. FORD. Very well. The Committee on Armed Services, following that investigation, in House Document 600, entitled "Unification and Strategy," summary of views and recommendations of the House Armed Services Committee, came to certain conclusions, 33 in number. All but No. 33 were approved unanimously. Eight of the members of the Committee on Armed Services objected to the approval of recommendation No. 33. Included in the minority was the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WALSH].

For your information I will read what recommendation 33 included:

> The removal of Admiral Denfeld was a reprisal against him for giving testimony to the House Armed Services Committee. This act is a blow against effective representative government in that it tends to intimidate witnesses and hence discourages the rendering of free and honest testimony to the Congress; it violated promises made to the witnesses by the committee, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Defense; and it violated the Unification Act, into which a provision was written specifically to prevent actions of this nature against the Nation's highest military and naval officers.

I say this, Members of the Committee, that I wholeheartedly approve of the action of the Committee on Armed Services under the distinguished chairmanship of the gentleman from Georgia. I concur in his statement made today. I also wholeheartedly support the point of view of the gentleman from Missouri. We cannot forget bygones; we must analyze our present position by realizing what errors we have made in the past. We cannot progress in the future unless we know where we have failed heretofore. I do not intend to let statements get by on the floor of this House that gloss over and try to cover up actions of individuals and groups within our borders.

I would like to also make a statement regarding several other comments made by the gentleman from Indiana. He said that 70 percent of our appropriations for the last few years were for military expenses. That is not accurate. What he meant to say, and I am sure he will correct it in the RECORD, is that 70 percent of our appropriations are for past wars, including military appropriations for future wars, appropriations for veterans' benefits and other miscellaneous items. But, he definitely said they were for military expenses and such a statement was inaccurate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, my remarks must have been misunderstood by a few here in the House today. My remarks, following those of my distinguished friend from Missouri, were meant as an appeal for understanding and cooperation. Perhaps I was not as restrained as I should be because I disagreed somewhat with his remarks.

It is very apparent that we should get some of these things out of our system, and apparently we are doing so today. I agree with the distinguished gentleman that preceded me that my remarks should be that 70 percent of our budget is going for wars past and present and in preparation for possible future conflicts. I have at times disagreed with my distinguished chairman [Mr. VINSON]. Anyone that sits in the Committee on Armed Services recognizes his worth and his leadership. But sometimes Mr. VINSON, if he will pardon me, is not the most patient individual. He has a tendency toward running the committee in a style that is not inimitable.

As a freshman member of the Committee on Armed Services I became disturbed in the hearings on the B–36 investigation. As I felt that the younger members were not being given a chance to participate in the same, and I walked out in a huff. I saw a newspaperman friend of mine, and he asked me what had occurred. I thought I was talking largely off the record, but much to my sorrow the next day the headlines said that I accused the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] of being a Navy stooge. I later corrected this, because I had not used those words. However, the newspaperman apparently had, and I had acquiesced. I have often been sorry for those remarks. I recognize the worth of the gentleman from Georgia, but I still say that the manner in which the investigation was being held at that time did not please me. I did feel that we in the backfield, the younger members, were not given the opportunity to express ourselves fully. However, I have noticed since then that our chairman has been most considerate of the younger members of the committee. I am positive that he does not hold that against me, and I certainly do not against him, because I think the gentleman from Georgia knows more about the military needs of this country than any other man in the Nation.

I want to say something about the B–36 investigation. I signed the minority report. I am proud of that fact, and I would have signed it again. I am a lawyer. I told the House yesterday that I had practiced law for 16 years. I do not believe in hearsay evidence. I believe any man accused should be allowed to face his accuser. I think it is an outrage when any man in this body, or the other one, who has congressional immunity accuses a person of something and the individual that is accused, even though he is later vindicated, has no right of redress.

I attended practically every one of the hearings in the B–36 investigation. They were concluded only a few days after my outburst. I want to say that Secretary Matthews was unjustly accused, as was Secretary Johnson, and largely upon hearsay evidence. I felt then that the criticism leveled at Secretary Matthews was unjust, that we had heard only one side of the issue. I agree with my good friend from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS] when he says that good resulted from the B–36 investigation. But I am making no apology for the B–36 bomber. It is the greatest plane now in existence, and our investigation proved this fact. I heard the late General Arnold tell us what it could do.

Mr. Chairman, where would we be today without the atomic bomb. Where would we be? Russia would be at our doorstep. The atomic bomb is a deterrent against all-out Soviet aggression. Who is going to carry the atomic bomb in case of a world conflict? Today there is only one airplane, in my opinion, that can carry it to Europe and return, and that is not giving any secrets away. It is the B–36 bomber.

Unjustly and unfairly the B–36 bomber was attacked in our committee. It was attacked upon the floor of the House and in the newspapers. After the investigation was concluded we all unanimously agreed that the charges against the B–36 and its acquisition were absolutely false. I do not feel that Admiral Denfeld was unjustly treated, and I am still standing by that statement. I can still say to you today that I am standing behind the minority report. We only disagreed in this report in one item. Seven members of the committee voted the same as I did, but on the other 29 or 30 items, I have forgotten how many there were, we were unanimous in our report. Of course, a committee of this size and importance disagrees. We disagree here today violently in our feelings. But I think if there is one thing we can do is to get it out of our systems and we can fight here on the floor of the House, but tomorrow and henceforth we will go forward fighting together to win this war. I could point out to this Member and other Members their voting records in the past. I could, if necessary, point out where he failed to vote for what I consider to be the best interest of the defense of our country. I know that I, too, have cast bad votes, but what I am saying now and wanted to point out in my earlier remarks, is that these things do not matter now.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. FORD. Tell me where.

Mr. WALSH. I said I am not going to do it.

Mr. FORD. Well, I am asking you to.

Mr. WALSH. I will produce the record here tomorrow, if you want it brought forth.

Mr. FORD. I certainly do.

Mr. WALSH. You are the one who brought this argument up—not me. I do not care to indulge in personalities.

Mr. FORD. But you certainly did.

Mr. WALSH. After all, my good friend, you are the one who took the floor first. I did not know you from Adam. I will have your record tomorrow and show it in the RECORD if you wish.

Mr. FORD. You can come to my office and I will give it to you to save time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further.

I do not care to get in any discussion. The point I am trying to make is that tempers are flaring here today. I hope when it is all said and done we can forget the votes we have cast in the past and the mistakes that we have made—and we have made plenty of them, all of us—and go out of this Chamber united, because we are certainly in a world conflict which we may never see the end.

As the father of four children, and I am proud of it, I am going to do my level best to see to it that those children have the opportunity to live in a free world, free of communism. I hope my vote in the future, as I hope it has been in the past, will never be cast along political lines, especially at this time when the fate of the world rests to a great extent upon us, the Members of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DURHAM].

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Chairman, I cannot add much more information on these two measures, but tempers seem to be flaring here this afternoon. After all, you know it is very pleasing to me to see the difference in the debate today and the unanimous cooperation in a matter which probably means the life or death of our Nation in the years to come. There is a big difference between now and 1939, 1940, and 1941, when we were voting on measures far into the night. Roll call after roll call occurred at that period and this body at that time was seriously divided. Not so today. These measures, which are very far-reaching, are going to pass unanimously.

It has also been pointed out to you the difficulties under which we are operating today. I do not believe it is any time to point out the faults or mistakes that may have occurred in the past. I think it is best for us at the present time, in this hour, to confine ourselves to the job ahead and not forget about the situation and the predicament and obligations that this Nation has taken upon itself.

We have listened, and I particularly have listened, for the last year to the intelligence reports around the world. We, of course, have had a policy of confinement against communism, and they have a policy of expansion. So I think anyone could come to the conclusion that this beginning which has happened in Korea is only the beginning. I think we can expect Russia to do everything she can to divide us and our allies. That is very evident. They are master minds at propaganda. They have already convinced the world of that. I do not know how many more measures will come before this House during the next few weeks. I hope and know that this House will pass every measure that is necessary. I am satisfied that the things we do on the floor of this House and the things we say here are broadcast every night in Moscow. We cannot hear it, but I am convinced of that. Of course, I am not qualified to lecture the press. Neither am I qualified to lecture this body. There are men here who have had much more experience than I have had, like the chairman of our committee. Certainly he is qualified to speak, and he has spoken today for the national defense of this country. I never heard more comprehensive over-all statement with reference to our national defense than he made today. I have tried, as a member of the Armed Services Committee, to study the problems at all times and to do what I could as an individual to help and assist my country to be prepared in case of danger. We all realize today that probably the bargain-counter days of Democracy are over, and we are going to have to pay for it from now on, because the fact is that God grants liberty only to those who love it and are willing and able to guard and defend it at all times. We have a great country. Let us be Americans first and forget about our little differences.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GROSS].

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, in his July 19 message to Congress, President Truman asserted the Nation's economic resources will require substantial redirection, but up to this time his National Security Resources Board has not seen fit to consult with America's farmers, the producers of the all-essential food and fiber.

The Security and Resources Board has consulted with industry and labor, and granted a committee, representing much of labor, at least semiofficial advisory recognition. That is commendable as far as it goes but it certainly does not go far enough.

I insist that American farmers, who produce each year 65 percent of the Nation's new wealth and who must be depended upon to feed the Nation, its military forces, and perhaps part of the world, be given an equal voice with any and all other segments of the economy in war-planning procedures.

The brush-off they have received from the war planners in Washington is unthinkable.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I have only one more request for time on this side. I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate these few minutes to discuss the problem facing us at this moment. I hope this bill passes without any objection, and I hope that our defense officials immediately get busy to build a Navy, an Air Force, and an Army as quickly as we make the funds available for them, because we have a long road ahead. I know that these recruits we are taking in now will have to have basic training for approximately 17 weeks. Then they will be only ready to start their team training. The armed services have got to develop fighting teams before they commit these young men to the battle line. I cannot conceive of the Notre Dame football teams mobilizing today a group of high school rookies, and putting them out against the all-stars tomorrow morning, nor can I further conceive of the Reserves, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] mentioned, who have been inactive the past 4 years being used immediately. Certainly you would not expect the Notre Dame football team to collect its varsity members of 4 years ago and put them on the firing line tomorrow without running signals in a thorough practice and conditioning program. I do not think we should gamble with the lives of our untrained or unseasoned boys. We must profit from the lessons of World War II; we must train these boys, and the sooner we get started the better.

As I have stated here on other occasions, it was my privilege and opportunity to teach military history and military policy some 30 years ago, in one of the State universities. You will remember on July 18 in the debate on the extension of Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, I mentioned the statement of de Toqueville in 1835, of Lord Palmerson in 1853, and of Commodore Perry in 1856 regarding the role of Russia in the family of nations. What we must realize is that this is not a temporary passing situation that we are facing here. I think many of us fail to realize what we are up against. We are at the place now where we must maintain our Nation's position in this world or we are going to face defeat and humiliation, and we cannot win by committing untrained, unskilled teams—not teams, but groups of boys—to combat prematurely. What we must do is to train adequately the young men of our country for the ground forces, the air forces, and the Navy. We have got to make this decision quickly if we are to give these boys basic training of 15 to 17 weeks, then adequate team training, before we put them into combat units on the firing line.

I listened with great interest a few minutes ago to the remarks made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] regarding the matter of universal military training. While I was still on active duty in the Regular Army in 1919, I recall my following the outstanding work of Senator WADSWORTH, then chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, when he tried to secure a universal military training program. The proposed training at that time was for 3 months with an additional 1 month of training optional. That length of training was then considered adequate for basic training only. I recall also working with the American Legion leaders of my State for a military-training program, for some 20 years starting with my assignment to the University of Iowa in 1921 as assistant professor of military science and tactics and continuing up to our entry into World War II. While I have always opposed compulsory military service in peacetime, I have just as vigorously supported universal military training as a permanent policy in order to prepare our young men better to defend themselves and their Nation whenever we might suddenly become involved in war.

If our young men today who were too young to take part in World War II all had basic military training our armed services could now save 3 months of necessary delay in placing them in fighting teams for field training, whereas all of our untrained young men must now be given that basic training before we should even think of placing them in combat teams for field maneuvers preceding their commitment to combat.

Another thing I must mention is that the gentleman from North Carolina and I have been fighting shoulder to shoulder for many years to build up stockpiles of strategic and critical materials. I am very pleased to read the headlines in the papers today saying that the President now states that we must take immediate steps to build up adequate stockpiles of strategic and critical materials. That is something that is absolutely essential, for we cannot fight wars with our airplanes and our new weapons still on the drawing boards and in blueprints. We had better speed up this stockpile program just as fast as we can.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, in 1945 the United States Air Force had 273 groups and was the most powerful in the world. In 1946 it was reduced to 38 groups.

The House Armed Services Committee, of which I am a member, early in 1948 realized that the Nation's Air Force strength was deteriorating to a point where the security of the country was in danger and took action on April 1, 1948, to establish as a peacetime minimum a 70-group air force.

In the light of current events it is plainly evident that the House Committee on Armed Services was way ahead of both the executive department and the Department of National Defense in planning for the air defense of this Nation in time of emergency.

We all recall the efforts of Hon. W. Stuart Symington, former Secretary of Air and Gen. Hoyt Vandenberg, Chief of Staff of the United States Air Force, to convince the President of the United States and the Secretary of National Defense that the defense of our Nation required a 70-group air force.

The real story of the 70-group air force is as follows:

STORY OF THE 70-GROUP PROGRAM

First. Pre-VJ-day background: by the end of World War II the Air Force was working toward a goal of a balanced peacetime establishment capable of (a) meeting the requirements of national security; (b) providing a proper mobilization potential in the form of a sound and adequate aircraft industry; (c) providing a sound and adequate trained reserve potential; (d) providing a sound and adequate physical plant capable of supporting the above elements.

The core of the above establishment was to be composed of 70 first-line groups which gave their name to the entire program, commonly known as the 70-group program.

The 70-group program goal had been set while the war was still in progress. It was planned to reach it through an orderly reduction from the peak strength of 273 groups reached by the Army Air Forces in World War II.

Second. Dissolution of Air Force air strength: Immediately after VJ-day the entire Military Establishment virtually disbanded—"disintegrated", in the words of General Marshall, instead of demobilizing. By June 30, 1947, the Air Force had sunk to a level of 38 groups—the "paper strength" being higher but the additional units being neither fully manned nor equipped. At that point, the downward trend was halted and the Air Force gradually began to rebuild its strength.

Third. Rebuilding of Air Force air strength: From the 38-group level of June 30, 1947, the initial objective of the Air Force was to reach a level of 55 groups by December 31, 1947. These groups were to be fully manned and to have at least a minimum of training, though equipped largely with World War II aircraft. Six months later—that is, by June 30, 1948—these 55 groups were to be in full operational status. The next interim step toward the 70-group goal was established as a strength of 66 groups by June 30, 1949. The remaining four groups were to be activated during fiscal year 1950.

Fourth. Executive branch and congressional committee endorsement of 70 groups: On December 20, 1947, the President's Air Policy Commission, headed by Mr. Finletter, reported officially that "the country must have a new strategic concept for its defense and the core of this concept is air power," and that "the minimum force necessary at the present time is an Air Force organized into 70 combat groups, and 22 special squadrons, supplemented by 27 National Guard groups and 34 groups of Air Reserve."

This Commission's studies and report were followed by the report, on March 1, 1948, of the Joint Congressional Aviation Policy Board which found a 70 combat air group Air Force to be imperative for the Nation to "mount promptly an effective, continuing, and successful air offensive against a major enemy." Both of these reports were important factors in substantiating Air Force policy. Both reports recommended prompt action to re-create the strength of the Air Force through an orderly expansion toward the 70-group goal as the minimum needed to assure national security in time of peace.

Fifth. First congressional actions to require a 70-group program: On April 1, 1948, before the House Armed Services Committee meeting in executive session, Hon. CARL VINSON moved that the committee go on record in favor of the 70-group program recommended by the Air Force. The motion was taken under advisement by subcommittee No. 5 of the committee, chairmanned by Hon. Charles Clason, with direction to report back to the full committee on April 7, 1948.

On April 8, 1948, the chairman of subcommittee No. 5 reported to the full committee that the subcommittee had unanimously approved a resolution proposed by Hon. CARL VINSON regarding the current status of appropriations for the Air Force. This resolution concluded with the following:

Resolved, That it is hereby expressed as the sense of the Committee on Armed Services of the House of Representatives that this Nation should have an Air Force with a minimum strength of 70 combat groups, supplemented by the necessary special squadrons, air National Guard and air Reserve groups, which would require the expenditure of $5,442,000,000 during the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1948, and since the estimate of the Bureau of the Budget contains a request for approximately $3,054,000,000: Therefore be it further

Resolved, That it is the sense of this committee that an additional budget request of $2,338,000,000 for the United States Air Force should be promptly submitted to the Congress.

The above resolution was adopted by a hand vote of 22 of the 23 members present. Copies were transmitted to the President, Secretary of Defense, Speaker of the House, and the Secretary of Defense was asked to express his own views on the subject at a later time before the committee.

On April 14, 1948, Hon. Charles Clason introduced a bill, H. R. 6247, establishing the composition of the Air Force. That bill authorized a peacetime Air Force of 70 Regular Air Force groups, 22 separate Regular Air Force squadrons, supplemented by such reserve forces, including 27 Air National Guard and 34 Air Force Reserve groups, as might be required. On the following day, April 15, 1948, the House approved, by a vote of 343 to 3, the Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act, 1948, which contained $1,687,000,000 for Air Force procurement of aircraft, a sum $822,000,000 more than requested by the administration. This additional sum was termed the first year's program of a 5-year undertaking having the objective of a 70-group program for the Air Force.

On June 3, 1948, the bill H. R. 6247, cited above, was reported unanimously by the House Armed Services Committee to the House of Representatives. On June 14, 1948, the bill passed the House without dissenting vote.

Sixth. Executive branch resistance to 70-group program: By the end of June, 1948, the Air Force had reached a level of 59 activated groups en route to the 70-group goal. In June 25, 1948, however, the President placed specific limitations on the Services to the effect that budget ceilings for fiscal year 1950 would have to be well under the amount necessary to carry out previously planned programs. It was determined that the budget ceiling forecast for the Air Force would support no more than 48 groups. At this point, then, the problem within the Air Force became one of cancellation of many of the procurement, stations, manpower, recruiting, and training programs which had been established.

The situation would have been clear at this point had it not been for indications in the Congress that it did not firmly support this military retrenchment as it applied against the Air Force. On January 13, 1948, Hon. CARL VINSON, chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, introduced a bill, H. R. 1437, authorizing the composition of the Army and Air Force. This bill again placed before the Congress the 70-group program, for it specifically authorized the program as the peacetime goal of the United States Air Force. On February 8, 1949, by a vote of 29 to 0, the House Armed Services Committee unanimously reported H. R. 1437 to the House of Representatives. Also on February 8, 1949, the House Committee on Armed Services officially endorsed, without dissenting vote, the appearance of Chairman VINSON before the House Committee on Appropriations to request an increase in the Air Force 1950 budget in the amount of $800,000,000. These moves made clearly apparent the unanimous support of the House Armed Services Committee for the 70-group program, both in funds and in legislative authorization.

The position of the entire House of Representatives was made eminently clear on Air Force air power later in March, 1949. On March 22, by a vote of 395 to 4, the House passed H. R. 1437, the so-called 70-group bill. On March 28, 1949, Chairman VINSON of the House Armed Services Committee presented his recommendations, on behalf of the Armed Services Committee, to the Armed Forces Subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee in respect to the 1950 military budget. Those recommendations, endorsed by the Armed Services Committee, included the recommendation that the Air Force budget be increased in the amount of $800,000,000 in order to increase the Air Force from 48 groups—established by the executive branch—to 58 groups, thereby urging the Congress to continue its efforts eventually to reach the 70-group program goal. On April 9, 1949, the Appropriations Committee favorably reported to the House H. R. 4146 which contained $851,000,000 for the Air Force over and above the budget recommendations. This sum was intended to maintain an Air Force strength of 58 groups instead of 48 groups, and was considered to be the second year increment of the 70-group program. On April 13, 1949, H. R. 4146 passed the House, after a vote of 271 to 1 had defeated a motion to recommit the bill. The bill was approved by the President on October 29, 1949.

On October 29, in signing the National Military Establishment Appropriation Act, 1950 (H. R. 4146) the President issued a statement indicating objections to the action of the Congress in increasing funds for the Air Force and directing the Secretary of Defense to place in reserve the amounts provided by the Congress in H. R. 4146 for increasing the structure of the Air Force. The amount placed in reserve by the President was $735,754,000.

As the year 1949 came to a close, therefore, the Congress was in the position of having insisted upon a 58-group program as the second-year increment of the 70-group program, whereas the President insisted upon maintaining a strength of 48 groups.

Seventh. The 70-group program in the second session, Eighty-first Congress: By virtue of the President's action of October 29, 1949, the 70-group issue remained quiescent during the early part of 1950. On April 4, 1950, however, the chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, in an address to the House of Representatives, called for an increase in the 1951 military budget in the amount of $583,289,221—$200,000,000 more for the Air Force—to maintain 48 groups—and $383,289,221 for the Navy for aircraft procurement. This effort subsequently produced an increase of $350,000,000 in the 1951 military budget passed by the House of Representatives—$200,000,000 additional for the Air Force and $150,000,000 for the Navy.

However, on June 30, 1950, the House of Representatives approved a conference report on H. R. 1437 which established in law the 70-group program, thereby again insisting upon this program over the opposition of the executive branch which had succeeded in obtaining the elimination of this expression in the law in the Senate.

On July 11, 1950, the President approved H. R. 1437. The 70-group program, as a peacetime ceiling on the Air Force, has therefore been enacted into law. As of July 12, 1950, however, the appropriated strength of the Air Force remains at the level demanded by the President—48 groups.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Chairman, having just voted for S. 3937 it is my purpose to vote for H. R. 9178. The fact is, when given the opportunity, I intend to vote for every measure that will accelerate our program for national defense and security. This does not mean that I have just been converted to the necessity of drastic action in order to protect our free democratic way of life.

The record will show that I have consistently urged adequate national defense. On February 24 1949; on March 16, 1949; and, on October 10, 1949, I spoke from the well of the House stressing the importance of being prepared for any emergency. And, in the interim, I have pointed out the need for greater national defense.

Along with the majority of the Members of this body, I have advocated the establishment of a 70-group air force as will be seen from the following excerpt of one of my speeches:

During the past 2 years a great deal has been said about an adequate national defense. When the flush of victory had receded after the last war we discovered that the possibility of still another war was not nearly so remote as we had assumed. Furthermore, we discovered that our national defense program had sadly lagged, and that, in the words of the wartime commander of the Air Forces, this country's Air Force had become a one-punch outfit. All leading authorities of military concepts agree that air power is essential either for an adequate defensive or an offensive force. The time when this country could feel secure against a sudden attack because of our geographical location is gone forever. The science of aeronautics has brought the nations of the world so close together that none may feel secure against attack. It is obvious, therefore, that we must maintain an adequate Air Force. All who are interested in the welfare of the United States concur on that point. The question is not whether we should maintain a strong Air Force—everyone agrees to that. The question is what size Air Force we should maintain in order to have an adequate national defense. I am in favor of a force composed of 70 groups.

It is not by accident or at random that I have chosen that figure. I am not a military man, but civilians, as well as the military, can, in times of peace, examine the available data and draw conclusions. During an emergency we must rely upon our military forces and accept their decisions. When speed of action is a requisite civilians must place their trust in their professional servicemen and aid them in every possible way to accomplish the results that are necessary for the security of all. In peacetime the situation is different. We are prone to look distrustfully at the requests of the military men, and we generally feel that they are asking for more than they expect when we examine their demands for appropriations. Such accusations cannot be made against disinterested civilians who study a situation and then make recommendations. Within the past 18 months two civilian groups have thoroughly examined the national defense picture and made recommendations concerning an adequate Air Force. These two groups were the President's Air Policy Commission and our own Congressional Aviation Policy Board. It is significant that both recommended the same number of planes that our military men deem essential—70 groups.

If it were not for the cost, there would be little opposition to the 70-group program. Our expenditures for national defense must, of course, be kept within the country's ability to pay for them. I believe our economy can easily stand the 70 groups. Even if supporting an air force this size should prove quite expensive, it seems to me that we have no alternative. The element of time which has been on our side in previous conflicts is not likely to be with us again.

If it should prove necessary to build our defenses from the bottom up after a war started, the task might be impossible. In addition the nucleus of a powerful air force should be a strong deterrent to any nation considering an attack upon this country.

Maintaining a force of 70 groups will be more expensive than a smaller force, but in the long run it may prove much cheaper. The cost of a war will be far greater than the comparatively low cost of keeping an adequate air force in time of peace. There is no denying that an aggressor nation might not risk an attack if the possibilities of losing the ensuing conflict are strong.

There seems to be a great misconception in the minds of some as to the purpose of those who advocate an air force of 70 groups. Certainly building a force of this size cannot be construed as a preparation for war. It would take a far greater number of planes to win a war. The advocates of 70 groups feel that a force this size would be sufficient to hold any enemy until we could fully arm and take the offensive. A force this size is merely a defensive arrangement.

Building an adequate air force is not a matter of days, weeks, or months. It is a matter of years. Over a year ago the President's Air Policy Commission made their recommendations. Comparatively little has been done since that time. The Air Force now has only about 50 groups. Approval of the 70-group program does not mean that we will have 70 groups by next year or even the next. As Secretary of Defense Forrestal summed up the situation, this program merely places a ceiling upon the size of the Air Force, with the yearly appropriations determining the actual strength. It is essential that we get this program approved and underway. There are numerous factors and problems involved in building up our air power. The new technology has greatly intensified the engineering and research problems of the aircraft industry upon which the Air Force is dependent for its planes. A strong and healthy industry is indispensable to our national security. If the plane manufacturers are not able to turn out the needed planes for the Air Force upon short notice, we might well lose a war before getting started. Getting this program of expansion underway will be a breath of life to the aircraft industry, which has not been healthy since the end of the war. In terms of airframe weight the industry has produced less than half what it turned out during the war and has at times fallen to about one-fourth the amount produced during the war years. This is an alarming situation in that these low-production figures made it difficult to keep adequately trained personnel on hand, and in the event of a national emergency the plants would be slow in producing their quota of planes. We must assume that if we are attacked the enemy will be well prepared, and a delay in our production anywhere along the line could be disastrous. These facts demonstrate that the expansion of the Air Force to 70 groups will also bolster our defenses from another angle, since the expansion will aid the ailing aircraft industry.

In supporting the 70-group program, let me state that I do not consider this step a panacea for all of our military problems. Everyone must realize that there is no absolute defense against an enemy equipped with modern weapons. All that is possible for any nation to do in these dangerous times is to be so well prepared as to discourage any possible aggressor. The threat of a strong retaliatory force is more eloquent than words.

It is a striking paradox that peace may be achieved by air power, that implement which has become the greatest force for destruction in the history of the world. While a strong Air Force cannot give us absolute security, it does provide relative security from two directions. The first I have just mentioned. This relative security is provided by the fact that any nation would hesitate to attack us if we are well armed. The second state of relative security which an adequate air strength provides is the ability to smash any attack which might come. National security demands that we equip and maintain an adequate force. This is not preparation for war. It is preparation for the possibility of war, and between those two goals lies a world of difference. After the last war wishful thinking on the part of many people in this country caused us to disarm at an alarming rate. No one wished war, and we even refused to accept the possibility. We placed our hopes for peace in the newly created United Nations and let our military affairs lag. Today the error of that policy is very much in evidence. Another powerful nation chose to place its trust in its military strength rather than in the United Nations. Now our country is in the position of having to rearm or face disaster. We do not have to face disaster. Our resources and wealth are such that we can build up adequate defenses without seriously upsetting the economy. While we are building up our air power, we must continue our efforts for peace through the United Nations. The fact that we expected too much from such a young organization must not be allowed to hamper its future possibilities. We are striving for peace, and, while we must now place our faith in a strong air defense, perhaps our children or grandchildren can place theirs in a strong United Nations rather than in their military potential.

Less than a year ago the Congressional Aviation Policy Board completed an extensive survey of this country's air-defense needs and reached many of the same conclusions that the President's commission had reached. To any civilian interested in military affairs this is highly important. The interservice squabbles over what we need for defense have often put Congress in the awkward position of determining who is right and what is best for the country regarding strictly military affairs. We face no such dilemma in the matter of an expanded Air Force. The recommendations of both the Board and the Commission were explicit as to the minimum needs. Both emphasized that weakness and uncertain national security are greater risks than the cost of this program. Both reports were made after months of exhaustive study. Both were made by groups who were interested in nothing but the security of our country. In the light of these facts it is necessary that we give sober consideration to their findings and recommendations. The Board's statement that "Anything less than complete supremacy in the air is self-deception" is especially significant. It is emphasis of the fact that an inadequate Air Force is not far from being as bad as no Air Force at all.

It was in recognition of the importance of air power that the Air Force was created as an autonomous military service by the National Security Act of 1947. Quite recently the Chief of Staff of that service listed the tasks of the Air Force in a given military situation. These tasks include the delivery of an immediate and powerful offensive against the basic sources of the enemy's war-making capacity; the defense of United States bases against air attack; and the tactical support of the Army and Navy in exploitation of the opportunities presented through the success of the first two tasks. Our present air strength would not allow the Air Force to accomplish these objectives. It must be placed in a condition of readiness to handle any situation which might arise. Where our national security is involved we are not at liberty to gamble, and anything less than an expansion toward 70 groups seems like a gamble.

The President's Air Policy Commission divided the threat of an attack against this country into two phases. We are in the first phase now. This phase represents the condition of world affairs. If war comes, it will be by accident not by design, since the enemy is not fully prepared. The Commission assumed the enemy would be fully prepared by January 1, 1953. In other words the enemy can be expected to have the atomic bomb also, and phase two will begin. During this phase we can expect a deliberate and unprovoked attack. It is well to remember that during World War II most of the initial attacks were sudden and unexpected. The beginnings of any new war will undoubtedly follow the same pattern, and it is not at all unlikely that our country will be the target this time. The date at which one phase will merge into another is nothing but an intelligent guess. Although it seems unlikely, this year could conceivably be the beginning of phase two. We suspect that the enemy is not yet fully prepared; we know that we are not.

Our military men and two separate civilian groups have informed us of the size and type of Air Force that is essential for national security. The size is a force of 70 groups. We must take immediate steps and plan to reach that goal within the next 4 years. Our present force is inadequate. The national security is at stake, and we have no alternative but to remedy the situation by expansion of the Air Force. To say that any other course would be disastrous is highly arbitrary, since no one knows for certain that war will come. To say that any other course would be inviting disaster expresses the situation clearly and accurately. It is within our power to reject this invitation. We must not fail to do so.

In view of the trend of affairs in Korea, I believe it is imperative that the President declare a state of national emergency without delay; and, therefore, call upon him for such action now.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, there are no further requests for time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That provisions of law imposing restrictions on the authorized personnel strength of any component of the Armed Forces, including section 2 (a) of the act of April 18, 1946 (60 Stat. 92), and section 2, title I, of the Selective Service Act of 1948 (62 Stat. 605), as amended, and sections 102 and 202 of the act of July 10, 1950 (Public Law 604, 81st Cong.), are hereby suspended until July 9, 1951.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the figure "2", strike out "(a)."

Page 1, line 9, after the word "suspended", insert a period and strike out the remainder of the bill.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of the RECORD to inquire of the chairman of the committee as to the reason why the time limitation originally contained in the bill was stricken out.

Mr. VINSON. I may say to my colleague from New York that the draft act expires on July 9, 1951. At that time the entire subject will be again reviewed.

Mr. COLE of New York. My purpose in raising the question was to indicate to the members of the committee that this is not a permanent lifting of the ceiling on the size of our Military Establishment.

Actually, the whole problem will be reevaluated in July 1951, when the Draft Act expires.

Mr. VINSON. The gentleman from New York is absolutely correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WHITTEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9178) to suspend the authorized personnel strength of the Armed Forces, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill to suspend restrictions on the authorized personnel strength of the Armed Forces, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the two bills just considered and passed by the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

INTERNATIONAL CRISIS IN KOREA

Mr. BATTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BATTLE. Mr. Speaker, the international crisis in Korea emphasizes the fact that the action of people in other nations directly affects our daily lives. And almost every move we make has a terrific impact upon the peoples of foreign nations. Our relations determine whether or not we have war, which is one of the greatest factors in our everyday living. The lives that are being sacrificed in Korea at the present time give testimony to our shortcomings in this respect.

It is estimated that 71 percent of our budget goes to pay for past wars and the prevention of future wars. Our relations with foreign countries largely determine our standard of living, the amount of taxes we will have to pay, how much money we can spend on domestic programs and how much money must be spent for military defense. So our foreign affairs and domestic affairs have become interwoven to such an extent that intelligent decisions can only be made by consideration of them both at the same time as two parts of one over-all national policy.

The constitution gives the chief responsibility for our foreign affairs to the President. Through necessity the Congress of the United States is being brought more into the international picture every day. With the grave responsibilities and far-reaching influence of our world leadership, the foreign aspects of our national policy can no longer be merely an executive function. The base on which the foreign portion of our policy is formulated and interpreted should be broadened. The responsibility of shaping the course of democracy in the free world we are striving for is too grave a burden for the Executive alone. Indeed, it is a problem too great for the executive and legislative branches combined, or for government officials alone. The foreign phase of our national policy must be built on a broader base which will not only bring trained minds with varying backgrounds into use, but will produce a medium through which the public and Congress will feel a direct participation in the formulation of policies which affect them so directly and which they are later called upon to support. This broadening of responsibility would provide a means of reassuring the public and Congress and establishing added confidence in the foreign side of our national policy.

It is with these thoughts in mind that I introduce a bill calling for the creation of a Foreign Affairs Advisory Commission to advise and consult with the President and thereby broaden the base on which our policy is formed.

This Commission would be composed of 12 members, broadly representative of the public and well informed in national and international affairs, including representatives of the Congress and the executive. They should be chosen on a nonpartisan basis and will serve only in an advisory capacity in order to conform with the provisions of our constitution. I invite your attention and consideration of this legislation.

TEXAS CITY TIN SMELTER OPERATION

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 714 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8569) to strengthen the common defense by extending for 5 years the authority for the Texas City tin smelter operation. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN], and pending that, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order the consideration of H. R. 8569, which would extend the Texas City tin smelter operation for an additional 5 years. This legislation comes from the Committee on Banking and Currency. It is made necessary by virtue of the shortage of tin production in this country. This operation was necessitated originally during World War II, and this bill would merely continue that operation, and comes at a most appropriate time since the Committee on Banking and Currency saw fit to institute the continuation of this operation prior to the Korean incident.

I am sure that there will be no extended debate on or opposition to either the resolution or the bill because I think we might just as well realize that we are going to have to do many of these things that we would much prefer not to do, and we will have to foster many enterprises that we would prefer to leave to private industry were it not for the world situation being what it is today.

That is all I have to say at present, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may desire.

Mr. Speaker, there is no opposition that I know of to the adoption of this rule. As the gentleman explained, it does provide consideration of the bill to continue for 5 years the operation or the authority for the operation of the Texas City tin smelter. That operation would come to an end in 1951 unless this legislation is enacted and, of course, there must be adequate advance notice given if the operation is to continue after next year. The continuation of this operation is reported to be of vital importance to our defense effort. It is the largest tin smelting plant, and one of the very few, we have in America.

I believe it is of interest to note that prior to World War II there were no tin smelting plants anywhere in the United States; in fact, prior to World War II we were not permitted to refine tin here in America, and were not even permitted the privilege of hauling tin in our own American vessels. The tin we obtained had to be first refined and then purchased from Great Britain or The Netherlands. Under the pressure of World War II the great smelter at Texas City was set up with the aid of our Federal Government, and certainly, because of the importance of tin to our national economy and in our defense effort we should continue this plant operation for at least five more years.

Mr. Speaker, I hope this rule will be adopted. I have no further requests for time.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8569) to strengthen the common defense by extending for 5 years the authority for the Texas City tin smelter operation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8569, with Mr. PRESTON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this bill would continue the operation of the Texas City tin smelter for 5 years from June 30, 1951. The Texas City tin smelter, as has been said, is the only tin smelter of any substantial capacity in the Western Hemisphere. Tin is a critical material at this time. Since we reported this bill there has been a material advance in the price of tin. The capacity of the Texas City smelter is 36,000 tons a year. The consumption of the United States is about 65,000 tons a year.

It is essential to continue the operation of this smelter for 5 years in order that contracts may be made for the future delivery of the product and in order that the personnel may be retained, because if they find other employment men do not serve corporations they think will soon cease to exist. It is absolutely essential, if we desire to continue the operations of this plant, to pass this bill. It is absolutely essential to pass it in order that we may have an adequate supply of tin, which is so essential to our war effort and for the preservation of our food.

This is a Government-owned project. No private enterprise would go into a precarious business like this. The Government had to finance this smelter in order to be assured of the product. It was built primarily to handle the low-grade Bolivian ores, so that in time of war the refined product would not have to be transported to us through the sea lanes with all the perils of that transportation.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure there is no objection to the bill. I do not intend to take the time of the House further on this subject.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SAYLOR].

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, the presentation of this bill at this time is probably one of many examples that may be presented to us in the future of trying to pass legislation at a time of hysteria.

I hate to disagree with the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency as to the amount of tin used in this country, but the Departments of Commerce and Interior have published certain figures which do not bear out his statements.

According to data published by the Departments of Commerce and Interior in May and June of this year, we now have in this country over 170,000 long tons of tin, more than the equivalent of a 3-year supply of pig tin now within our borders. The Texas City tin smelter, when originally constructed in 1941, was constructed with the understanding that they had a system by which they could produce high-grade tin from low-grade Bolivian ores.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAYLOR. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. I did not make any statement which the gentleman does not corroborate by his statement. I said that the consumption of tin in the United States was about 65,000 tons a year. Now the gentleman is talking about the stockpile. I made no statement with regard to that.

Mr. SAYLOR. That is correct. Further, may I say for the information of the gentleman from Kentucky that the same data published by the Departments of Commerce and Interior shows the average consumption from 1942 to 1949 in the United States was 55,000 tons of pig tin a year. Last year we only consumed 50,273 tons of pig tin, and the average consumption even during the war years was only 55,806 tons.

At the time this Texas City tin smelter was erected in 1941 it was done with the distinct understanding that the Billiton Co., which is a Dutch corporation, had a system by which they could produce high-grade tin from low-grade Bolivian ores exclusively.

According to the information at the hearings which were held there has never been produced at the Texas City tin smelter any high-grade tin using solely low-grade Bolivian ore. Every time they have produced any pig tin it has been necessary for them to use a mixture of high-grade alluvial concentrates from the Far East or Africa.

Fortunately in the United States substantial quantities of such high-grade concentrates have been available for use since this smelter began its operations in 1942. It appears highly probable that during a future world war, if not sooner, the flow of tin metal and high-grade alluvial tin ore concentrates from Malaya, Siam, Indonesia, and other sources in the Far East and from Africa will be cut off completely. When that happens, the tin requirements of the United States and possibly those of our allies, aside from the supply on hand, must be obtained entirely from Bolivian tin ore concentrates and any other Western Hemisphere sources that can be found and developed. Bolivian tin ore concentrates, unlike high-grade alluvial concentrates, have a lower tin content, contain many objectionable impurities, and are difficult to smelt. In fact, only one plant in the world, a small one recently completed by American private enterprise at Sewaren, N. J., is known to have facilities capable of successfully producing grade-A tin from low-grade Bolivian cencentrates exclusively, without the admixture of high-grade alluvial concentrates.

The total tin requirements of the United States could be obtained from Bolivia if the great losses of tin incurred at the mines were eliminated by concentrating the ores to a much lesser degree than is now practiced and required by the trade and if processing facilities were available in the United States to convert such low-grade concentrates to grade-A tin metal.

A substantial part of the tin requirements of the United States could be obtained from Bolivian tin ore concentrates exclusively if facilities were available in the United States to produce grade-A tin metal from the grades and quantities of tin concentrates now available from Bolivia. Although the Government-owned tin smelter at Texas City, Tex., was constructed in 1941 for this very purpose it has proved to be unsuccessful. Few realize that the Texas City tin smelter cannot produce significant quantities of grade-A tin metal from average grade Bolivian tin concentrates without the admixture of high-grade alluvial tin concentrates from the Far East or Africa.

The Billiton Co.—N. V. Billiton Maatschappij—a Dutch corporation, through its wholly owned subsidiary, the Tin Processing Corp., was selected in 1941 to design, construct, operate, and manage our Government-owned tin smelter at Texas City, Tex., in preference to competent American private enterprise because it claimed to have a tried and proven process for obtaining grade A tin metal from Bolivian tin concentrates exclusively without the admixture of high-grade alluvial tin concentrates obtainable only from outside the Western Hemisphere.

The record stands in glaring testimony that the Dutch Billiton Co. had no successful process for obtaining grade A tin from Bolivian concentrates exclusively and that our Government-owned tin smelter has not and cannot now function for the purpose for which it was originally conceived and planned.

The original lease and smelting agreements entered into on April 8, 1941, between the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Tin Processing Corporation, the wholly owned subsidiary of the Dutch Billiton Co., provided for the design, construction, operation, and management of a plant with a capacity for the smelting and refining of Bolivian tin ores sufficient to yield not less than 18,000 long tons of tin per year and to be readily capable of expansion into a plant with a capacity sufficient to yield not less than 48,000 tons of fine tin per year. Subsequent amendments to the lease agreement provided for a plant with a capacity to smelt and refine, first, Bolivian tin ores sufficient to yield not less than 51,600 tons of fine tin per year; and second, alluvial tin ores sufficient to yield approximately 43,200 tons of fine tin per year, or a total capacity to yield 94,800 long tons of fine tin per year.

Under the original tin-smelting agreement, the RFC agreed that the average tin content of the Bolivian ore to be delivered to the plant would be not less than 35 percent. In turn, the Tin Processing Corp. agreed and guaranteed to smelt such Bolivian ores without the use of high-grade alluvial ores, so that not less than 75 percent of the tin delivered would be in the form of grade A tin metal; that the balance of the tin delivered not exceeding 25 percent, would contain not less than 98 percent pure tin; but that in the event RFC required more than 75 percent of the tin delivered to meet grade A specifications, then all the tin delivered or such part as the RFC required would meet such grade A specifications of the Treasury Department. The Tin Processing Corp. further agreed that in the event the RFC acquired tin ores other than from Bolivia, such as high-grade alluvial ores, the guaranties would be adjusted so as to take account of the quantity and quality of such other ores.

Contrary to its claims, agreements, and guaranties, the Dutch Billiton Co. and its subsidiary, the Tin Processing Corp., designed and constructed a tin smelter for the United States Government which is not adapted to the successful treatment of Bolivian ores exclusively. The production and metallurgical records of the Texas City tin smelter furnish conclusive evidence of this fact.

The records show that the Texas City tin smelter has never produced grade A tin from Bolivian ores exclusively. It has always been necessary for the smelter to use substantial amounts of high grade alluvial tin concentrates from the Far East and Africa to smelt Bolivian ores. Even then, the results are relatively poor and fall far short of the guaranties given for Bolivian ores alone.

Until the past year or a little longer, when the amount of tin in high grade alluvial tin ores received at the smelter has equaled or exceeded the amount of tin in Bolivian ores received, a substantial proportion of the tin in Bolivian concentrates, instead of being converted to grade A tin metal, constantly flowed out of the plant in rejects and slimes resulting from the processing of Bolivian concentrates before smelting. The tin-bearing slimes and rejects have accumulated in outdoor ponds and are included in the tin inventories of the RFC. The actual tin content of the slimes is not known. Although 6,000 tons of rejects have been shipped to England for treatment, there is some doubt as to whether the tin in the slimes and the remainder of the rejects can be salvaged and, if so, at what cost. Tin-bearing slimes continue to be produced and accumulated at Texas City.

The annual report and financial statements of the RFC and subsidiary also shows that in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, when 47½ percent or almost half of the tin in concentrates treated at the Government's Texas City smelter was in the form of easily smelted, high grade alluvial type ores, only 65 percent of the tin metal produced was grade A, 27 percent was graded B, C, and D, and 8 percent was grade G metal. This poor record is far from the 75 to 100 percent production of grade A metal guaranteed by the Dutch Billiton Co. and the Tin Processing Corp. to be produced from Bolivian ores exclusively.

But the record is even worse than this. Only 30 percent of the tin in the Bolivian-type concentrates was recovered as grade A metal. Not 75 to 100 percent as guaranteed, but only 30 percent. In this instance, the Bolivian-type concentrates had an average tin content of 36.31 percent and the alluvial-type concentrates averaged 71.91 percent tin. It is obvious that if only 30 percent of the tin in Bolivian concentrates can be recovered as grade A metal when half of the tin in the mixture treated is in the form of high grade alluvial concentrates used for blending and upgrading, very little if any grade A metal could be successfully produced should it be necessary to use Bolivian concentrates exclusively.

It is not in the interests of the Dutch Billiton Co. and its subsidiary, the Tin Processing Corp., to develop and install a successful process for producing grade A metal from low- or average-grade Bolivian tin ore concentrates as long as the smelter is owned by the United States and a remote possibility exists that the smelter may some day be owned or operated by another company.

The Dutch Billiton Co., directly and through subsidiaries, is engaged in the smelting of tin in Holland, and is a partner with the Indonesian Government in the ownership of the tin mines of Indonesia, which is a major world source of high-grade alluvial tin ores and the source of most such ores obtained by RFC for the Texas City tin smelter. It also has other mining interests. For many years the Dutch Billiton Co. and British interests, directly and through subsidiaries, affiliates, interlocking directorships, and agreements, have held a monopoly on the tin production of the world. Because the Billiton Co. is built around the mining of tin ores in Indonesia, the smelting of tin in Holland, and the sale of tin in the world markets, and since the United States consumes about one-half of the world production of tin, it is obvious that a tin smelter located in the United States which could successfully and economically produce the bulk of our requirements for grade A tin from Bolivian ores exclusively, without the admixture of high-grade concentrates from Indonesia and other sources in the Eastern Hemisphere, would drastically reduce the business activities of the Butch Billiton Co. unless such a smelter were owned by that company. It appears to be a foregone conclusion that as long as the Dutch Billiton Co., through its wholly-owned subsidiary, the Tin Processing Corp., continues to operate and manage the Government's Texas City tin smelter, that facility will never be able to function for the purpose for which it was originally planned and constructed by the Government of the United States. Only under the management of bona fide American private enterprise or of the Department of the Interior is there a chance of adapting the Texas City tin smelter to the function demanded for our national security.

Among the provisions of the contract between the RFC and the Tin Processing Corp. are (1) stipulations which give the Tin Processing Corp. what amounts to an option on the lease or sale of the Texas City smelter should the Government decide upon such disposition, and (2) a stipulation that any patents, formulas, processes, plants, and methods for smelting tin or recovering byproducts thereof, developed as a result of research carried on at the smelter by the Tin Processing Corp. at Government expense shall accrue solely to the Dutch company's subsidiary and to the RFC, but that the latter shall not willingly disclose any such information to third parties other than to actual operators of the smelter. The RFC cannot reveal such information to any prospective operators of the plan—those who may be interested in leasing or purchasing the Texas City tin smelter in the future. The Tin Processing Corp. does not admit visitors to the plant who are known to be sufficiently technically trained to find out details of the operation. The RFC retains all cost details and terms of contracts on a confidential basis.

In short, several million dollars of the American taxpayers' money have been spent on research and experimentation at the Government's tin smelter to the enlightenment and benefit of Dutch and possibly British commercial interests while American industry is denied and left in ignorance of such information and technical data. The interest of the United States demands that this state of affairs be terminated and the situation reversed. This can be accomplished only through a change in the management of the Government's tin smelter.

We owe the Dutch Billiton Co. and its Tin Processing Corp. nothing whatsoever. They failed to deliver a tin smelter capable of doing the job which our Government contracted for. Their agreements and guaranties have been worthless. They have received the full benefit of millions of dollars' worth of research and experimentation paid for by the United States, and while they have leased the plant for a nominal fee of $1 per year, all operating and management costs have been paid by our Government and, in addition, they have received to date $1,600,000 in fixed fees. American engineers, and not the Dutch management, are reported to have been the actual operators of the plant from the beginning; they can continue doing so under American managemcnt.

The Dutch Billiton Co., by making false claims and hollow agreements through which it obtained the contract for the design, construction, operation, and management of the Government's Texas City tin smelter, and the nominal control of tin smelting in the United States, gained the advantage over American private enterprise who wished to do the job and not only perpetrated what amounts to an outright fraud against the people of the United States but also seriously endangered the security of our Nation. The several minor Government officials who know the facts and continue to protect and further the interests of the Dutch Billiton Co. and its Tin Processing Corp. must share the guilt.

The lease and smelting agreements between the RFC and the Billiton Co.'s Tin Processing Corp. now expire June 30, 1951. However, the agreements are subject to termination by the RFC at any time on 90 days' written notice without payment of any penalty or other sums for such action. H. R. 8569 and S. 3666, which has passed the Senate, should be amended to provide that the contracts with the Tin Processing Corp. be terminated on or before December 31, 1950, and that the operation and management of the Texas City tin smelter be placed in the hands of bona fide American private enterprise having no connections with the present management or, failing this, under the Department of the Interior. The bills should be further amended to provide that all research work and experimentation conducted at the smelter after December 31, 1950, shall be performed by or under the direction of the United States Bureau of Mines of the Department of the Interior and that the detailed results of all such research and experimentation shall be made available to American private enterprise.

The present authority for the operation of the Texas City smelter does not expire for another year. Both H. R. 8569 and S. 3666 extend the authority to 6 years hence. No true evidence whatsoever has been advanced or found in the facts on the tin situation which justifies the continued operation of the smelter. Authority to operate the Texas City tin smelter should not extend beyond June 30, 1952, at the most, which would coincide with the termination date of the "Defense Production Act of 1950" as proposed in H. R. 9176. H. R. 8569 and S. 3666 should be further amended to provide that, with respect to tin concentrates produced after December 31, 1950, the RFC shall purchase for use at the Texas City tin smelter only such concentrates in kind and quantity as will successfully yield not less than 90 percent of their tin content as grade A metal by the process used at the Government's smelter, research requirements excepted. This amendment would not preclude the purchase and stockpiling of low-grade Bolivian concentrates by the Munitions Board if it should decide to do so, but would permit such ores to be sold in the world markets at their commercial value instead of the higher subsidized prices paid for such material by the RFC. This in turn should enable American private enterprise to continue in operation and expand facilities which can produce approximately 100 percent grade A tin from the recoverable tin in low-grade Bolivian concentrates—thus adding immeasurably to the security of the United States insofar as its tin requirements are concerned.

Mr. D'EWART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAYLOR. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. D'EWART. As a member of the Committee on Mines and Mining together with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I think he has performed a real service in bringing out the situation that faces this country in renewing this authority; certainly the bill should be amended, and I believe the gentleman intends to offer an amendment to protect the interests of the United States in this tin smelter in that we shall have use of the patents, the methods, and the knowledge that is developed by our money in this Texas City plant. The gentleman is to be commended for bringing out the situation down there in Texas as regards tin because of this contract with this Dutch company.

Mr. SAYLOR. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Pennsylvania appeared before the Rules Committee—I think my recollection is correct—he said that the Vulcan Detinning Corp., which is located in New Jersey, had a capacity of 500 tons a day. We investigated that. It is the only other tinning operation in the United States and it has a capacity of 5 tons a day.

Why were the Dutch placed in control of these operating contracts of the Texas City smelter? Because we needed the ore. The Dutch owned the ore and it was the only means by which we could obtain it. The Dutch East Indies was one of the great sources for the production of ore that was essential to furnish the needs of this great corporation.

Now to split hairs over this at a time when our national security is involved, at a time when we need tin more than we have ever needed it in a generation, it seems to me is not supporting the best interests of our country. If this corporation is closed, the production of 36,000 tons of tin so necessary to our war effort will cease. We never have needed this operation more than we need it at the present time. It has been a successful operation. They have smelted low-grade ore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania said they blend the ores. As I understand it, they do not blend the ores at all. They smelt the high-grade ores and the low-grade ores, then they might combine them after they have been smelted.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. At the time this project was first propounded here in the Congress, I understood the emphasis was going to be placed on the processing of Bolivian ores. From the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I am led to ask at this time just how extensive comparatively have the operations there covered Bolivian ores as compared with Indonesian ores?

Mr. SPENCE. I do not have the percentages, but I know they have smelted the low-grade Bolivian ores.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Are they in position to take over exclusively the processing of Bolivian ores, supposing that the ocean lanes to Indonesian ores may be cut off?

Mr. SPENCE. I have been informed that that is the primary purpose, that they can take over the Bolivian ores and that they can smelt the Bolivian ores.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. In any quantity to replace the production of Indonesian ores?

Mr. SPENCE. They would probably need some of the higher-grade ores. But what would be the effect if you cut the whole operation off now? It would jeopardize our supply. It would certainly weaken the security of our country.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. That is not the point of my inquiry. My point is this: Can they swing to the processing of Bolivian ores? I notice there is a committee amendment on this bill indicating there was some evidence or testimony along that line or the amendment would not have been put in the bill that would lay special emphasis on Western Hemisphere tin ores.

Mr. SPENCE. I have not sufficient information upon that subject.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. That is an extremely important point because I am looking at the self-sufficiency of our Nation so far as critical materials are concerned. It is a lot different processing Bolivian ore and processing Indonesian ore.

Mr. SPENCE. They can process Bolivian ores and they have processed Bolivian ores. The primary purpose of their organization was to process Western Hemisphere ores.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMPSON. The answer to the question, I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky, is that the smelter can operate solely on Bolivian ores, if necessary. Naturally, if it is possible to secure the high-grade ores from Indonesia and the Far East, they will do that, and use the two of them together.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Will that involve any delay in their operations, such as tooling or anything else?

Mr. THOMPSON. No. They are tooled up for it, and they are processing both ores now.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. And they can take over Bolivian ore exclusively in the processing at full capacity?

Mr. THOMPSON. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMPSON].

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, during both World Wars I and II, the Nation found itself unable to secure an adequate supply of tin from abroad. In each case, it was necessary to build tin smelters to process, in this country, the ore from the Far East and more recently from Bolivia.

World War I smelters were decommissioned shortly after the end of the war and in the Second World War, it was necessary to build an entirely new plant.

Tin is used, among other things, for packaging food—a most essential requirement for supplying an army in the field. Also, it is used in making bronze which is required in machinery and very heavily in shipbuilding. Tin is also used for bearing metal. Every tank, jeep, submarine engine, in fact every machine which moves or turns, uses tin in its bearings and other vital parts. It is also used in making solder. Without an adequate supply of tin in time of war, the defense effort would be seriously crippled.

Since the end of World War II, the Government's only tin smelter—the Long Horn Tin Smelter at Texas City, Tex., has been operating to a large extent on the building up of the requisite stockpile for defense purposes. When this has been accomplished, the plant should be disposed of to private enterprise, and I have worked consistently toward this end for the past 2 years.

In order for it to be profitable for private operation, it appears that a tariff, or some other form of subsidy, will be required. This has proven to be a complicated and difficult matter and legislation providing for disposal of the smelter remains under consideration in committee.

In recent weeks, the National Security Resources Board concluded that, in the interests of national defense, the Texas City smelter should continue its operations. The legislation under which it functions will expire within a year and the Board recommended to the President that the necessary legislation be passed to provide for the operation for 5 years after the termination of the present law.

Accordingly, the President directed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to cooperate with the National Security Resources Board in securing the adoption of the necessary legislation.

The bill before you, H. R. 8569, by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE], and the companion measure, H. R. 8570, by myself are strictly administration measures and are recommended to the Congress in the interests of national defense with the full approval of the President. The legislation provides for a 5-year extension of the present operation. It should be most thoroughly understood that passage of the present legislation will not, in any degree, put an end to my efforts to dispose of the smelter to private industry. However, with the critical international situation now confronting us, the needs of national defense must have priority over all others.

It is hardly conceivable that anyone will oppose the legislation now under consideration. I say "hardly" conceivable because strangely enough one organization in the United States, acting through its lobbyist here in Washington, has done everything in its power to keep this administration measure from being passed by the committees at either end of the Capitol. The lobbyist voiced vehement opposition to the measure although he claimed that if it were in the interests of national defense he would not oppose it.

In spite of the unanimous opinion of the armed services, the National Security Resources Board, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the White House and others, this lobbyist continued to oppose the measure despite his protestations. He opposes it today. In the House committee, he proposed an amendment which sounded so innocent that it was accepted without any particular consideration and it appears now as a committee amendment to H. R. 8569. On its face, this amendment seems to be merely a statement of "due regard to the public interest." Actually, this amendment was recommended by the one organization opposing the bill, a corporation engaged in recovering tin from tin scrap which is attempting to develop a process for recovering pure tin from the very lowgrade Bolivian ores. At the moment, this corporation has virtually no production and at the most, if its process is proven, has a plant which would produce 5 tons of tin a day or approximately 2,000 tons of tin a year. There are approximately 18,000 tons of Bolivian tin available which are now being smelted at the Texas City smelter and our national needs exceed 60,000 tons a year in peacetime. The purpose behind the amendment is to attempt to tie the hands of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the administration of the law by preparing an argument that the "due regard to the public interest in the maintenance of domestic smelting of Western Hemisphere tin ores and concentrates by American private industry," states it to be the policy of the Congress to require the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to divert ores to other smelters in preference to the Texas City smelter. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation does not need instructions to act "with due regard to the public interest" and it should not be hampered in carrying out its obligations to Congress by inclusion in this legislation of this amendment.

The companion measure which passed in the other body does not have this amendment in it. It was considered in detail and was eliminated as being at least superfluous and possibly very dangerous. Personally, I shall never trust an amendment however innocent it may sound when it is proposed by a man whose avowed intention it is to kill the legislation under consideration.

I had contemplated introducing an amendment to strike out the language proposed by the lobbyist who wants to destroy the bill. I have not done so out of deference to the chairman of the committee, who will have an opportunity to consider the matter further in conference. Also, I have no desire to impede the early passage of the measure today.

In view of the present world conditions, it is imperative that the legislation be passed as quickly as possible. However, during the 5-year period, proposed in the new legislation, every effort should be made to make final disposition of the plant to private industry. I urge the immediate pasage of the bill, and I hope that the conferees will eliminate the crippling amendment suggested by the one man who has appeared in opposition to the measure.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no further requests for time, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to strengthen the common defense and to meet industrial needs for tin by providing for the maintenance of a domestic tin-smelting industry," approved June 28, 1947 (61 Stat. 190), as amended, is amended by striking out "1951" and inserting in lieu thereof "1956."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, after "1956", insert ", and by substituting for the period after the word 'designate' a colon, and adding the following: Provided, That such powers, functions, duties, and authority shall be exercised and performed with due regard to the public interest in the maintenance of domestic smelting of Western Hemisphere tin ores and concentrates by American private enterprise."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAYLOR: Page 1, line 8, after word "thereof", strike out "1956" and insert "1952."

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to ask the Texas City Tin Smelter Corp. to actually prove to this Congress or to the duly authorized representatives, that sometime before the expiration of one additional year they can produce tin from low-grade Bolivian ores exclusively, and produce it in accordance with the contract they have entered into.

According to the information which the Committee on Mines and Mining of the Committee on Public Lands has received, this corporation has never to this day produced one pound of tin from low grade Bolivian ores exclusively. I know that tin is an essential and a vital war material. Nobody wants to hamper this country in its all-out war effort at this time, but certainly if we are going to be shut off from the supplies of the Far East, and the only sources of tin we have are the low-grade concentrates of Bolivia, then we should know now if this corporation, which entered into a contract in 1941 for the production of high-grade tin from low-grade Bolivian ore, can produce it. Certainly, if we extend this one more year to June 30, 1952, that will be ample time for them to do it.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there could not be a more effective way to kill this bill than to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It is absolutely essential that the operation of the Texas City tin smelter continue for 5 years in order that the contracts may be negotiated and in order that they may have available an adequate supply of the ore.

Another reason why it should be continued is that you could not keep the personnel of this organization, who are skilled personnel, for 24 hours if they could get some employment elsewhere. It would absolutely destroy the usefulness of the Texas City tin smelter, which has an excellent record. I ask that the amendment be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SAYLOR].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAYLOR: On page 2, line 4, after the last word substitute a colon for the period and add the following: "Provided further, That on or before December 31, 1950, the present lease and smelting agreements, as amended, shall be terminated by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the operation and management of the Government-owned tin smelter at Texas City, Tex., shall be awarded to bona fide American private enterprise which has no affiliations or interests whatsoever in tin mining or smelting outside of the Western Hemisphere, or, if this cannot be accomplished satisfactorily, such operation and management shall be given to and undertaken by the United States Bureau of Mines, Department of the Interior: And provided further, That all research and experimentation performed with United States Government funds at, or for the Government-owned tin smelter at Texas City, Tex., after December 31, 1950, shall be conducted by or under the supervision of the United States Bureau of Mines, Department of the Interior, and the detailed results of all such research and experimentation shall be made available to American private enterprise unless and except to the extent that such results would reveal details of processes owned and contributed by any operator of the tin smelter and not known to the minerals and metals industry or described in literature available to the public."

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, as I said in my original remarks, the present contract does not permit the experiments that are being conducted at that plant on our money to become our property. They will actually belong to the Dutch Government. This amendment would provide that after December 31, 1950, any experimenting that is done at our expense will become the property of the United States Government or our people. I certainly think that that, being a part of the contract, is germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chairman has examined the basic law sought to be extended by the bill now before the committee. The language in the basic law states clearly, among other things, "to finance research in tin smelting and processing, and (4) to do all other things necessary to the accomplishment of the foregoing shall continue in effect until June 30, 1951, or until such earlier time as the Congress shall otherwise provide."

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SAYLOR] offers an alternative proposition, to place it in other departments of the Government.

Therefore the Chair holds that the amendment is germane and overrules the point of order.

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, on a number of occasions since I have been a Member of the Congress I have heard about the extension programs for research sponsored by our Government. One of the best arguments that has been advanced in support of this research program is that its results are made available to all American industries. Historically, it is a matter of common knowledge that the Dutch and English control the tin market. They control all the known sources of high-grade tin ores in the world today. If there are going to be American tax dollars spent for research in this project, and apparently there is going to be, in accordance with the original agreements, all of the research information belongs solely to the Dutch. The purpose of this amendment is to make the results of whatever research is done at the expense of the American taxpayers available to American industrly. I am not in favor of spending our money for research in this country developing matters which are to the advantage of the Dutch and the British without letting our own American taxpayers who are footing the bill have the benefit of it.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think it is necessary to say anything about this. The gentleman's amendment would require an agency of the United States to break a contract it has made for the operation of the Texas smelter. The Constitution of the United States provides that no State shall make any law impairing the obligation of a contract. It seems to me the same high ideals of honor should prevail as to the United States as is enjoined upon the States. Of course, the adoption of this amendment would simply mean the scuttling of this great enterprise.

Mr. D'EWART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. Yes, I yield.

Mr. D'EWART. How about when we broke the gold standard? Was that not an agreement?

Mr. SPENCE. Oh, that is too far back and does not involve the same question.

I ask the amendment be voted down.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. The gentleman spoke about breaking a contract. I understand that that contract expires in 1951. This bill has as its purpose extending that law.

Mr. SPENCE. Yes. This amendment says that we shall terminate it 6 months before it is terminated by the terms of the contract. Expenditures have been made down there and they have acted on the good faith of the United States. I do not think the United States or any agency has a right to terminate a contract such as this before its expiration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. D'EWART. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. I think this committee should understand what we are doing here. We are proposing in time of war to extend a contract with a Dutch company under conditions that do not guarantee us any tin from this smelter, or the results of any of the experiments or processes or knowledge that are developed by this smelter.

Let me read to you some of the provisions of the contract which the RFC has entered into in connection with this tin smelter:

1. Stipulations which afford the Tin Processing Corp. what amounts to an option on the lease or sale of the smelter, should the Government decide upon such disposition.

That lease or sale is to a Dutch company.

2. A stipulation that any patents, formulas, processes, plans, and methods for smelting tin or recovering the byproducts thereof, developed as a result of a research carried on at the smelter by the Tin Processing Corp. (at Government expense) shall accrue solely to the Dutch company's subsidiary and to the RFC, but the latter shall not willingly disclose any such information to third parties other than to actual operators of the smelter.

In other words, the RFC cannot disclose these patents or proceses to an American. They must go to the Dutch company.

The only purpose of extending this bill is because of the war effort, the need for tin for our stockpile, and for the war effort, and here we propose under this contract entered into under the original law of which this will be an extension to give those rights to a foreign country and not to our own citizens. Certainly, this amendment should be adopted in the interest of our stockpile and in the interest of our national defense and the interest of the taxpayers of this country.

I hope the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] suggests that the adoption of this amendment would scuttle the bill. Let me read the amendment:

After the last word, substitute a colon for the period and add the following: "Provided further, That on or before December 31, 1950, the present lease and smelting agreements, as amended, shall be terminated by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the operation and management of the Government-owned tin smelter at Texas City, shall be awarded to bona fide American private enterprise which has no affiliations or interest whatsoever in tin mining or smelting outside of the Western Hemisphere, or, if this cannot be accomplished satisfactorily, such operation and management shall be given to and undertaken by the United States Bureau of Mines, Department of the Interior: And provided further, That all research and experimentation performed with United States Government funds at, or for, the Government-owned tin smelter at Texas City, Tex., after December 31, 1950, shall be conducted by or under the supervision of the United States Bureau of Mines, Department of the Interior, and the detailed results of all such research and experimentation shall be made available to American private enterprise unless and except to the extent that such results would reveal details of processes owned and contributed by any operator of the tin smelter and not known to the minerals and metals industry or described in literature available to the public.

That amendment does not scuttle the bill; it says that if you cannot get an American operator who is ready to take it over by December 31, 1950, you will turn it over to the Bureau of Mines and let the Bureau of Mines operate it.

Certainly, the history of tin in America is not one which does us much credit. I happen to represent a district which has at various times thought it had a good deal of tin ore. We have many towns out there which carry the name "Tin"; we have the town of Tinton and Tin Mountain and Tin Reef. We have the old Harney-Peak Tin Co. which figures in the deeds to a great deal of property in the Black Hills area. The Hill City Tin Miner was the name of a paper published for some years in that area. Shortly after the Harney-Peak Tin Co. got under way back in the nineties and it threatened to become a factor in the production of tin in the United States or in the world, British interests came in and bought up the stock and closed it down.

While I cannot here suggest that we have tin enough to supply the needs of the country, yet we do have tin enough that representatives of the Bureau of Mines and the Geological Survey and other Government agencies have indicated they might be of great value to the country in a critical period.

The whole tendency of our legislation in this country has been to cater to British and Dutch tin interests, with the result that we have stifled the development of the tin industry in this country and handicapped the exploration of such deposits as we do have in the States and in Alaska.

When I was returning from Europe with the Herter committee in the fall of 1947, I remember reading in the London Economist an article to the effect that we should shut down the tin smelters in this country to show our good faith in our efforts toward the rehabilitation of Europe. The Economist advocated that as a reciprocal act on the part of the United States that would show that we were really trying to rehabilitate Europe. Imagine that. And so I say we depend upon them too much.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me say to my friend from South Dakota that there is much in what he said, and there is much in what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said; in truth and in fact, there is too much truth in what has been said on the other side of the aisle. But let me talk about this for just a minute from a practical standpoint.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Does the gentleman want to use the remainder of my time?

Mr. THOMAS. No; I will get the gentleman more time if I may proceed for just a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. THOMAS. We know that there is a monopoly, a world-wide monopoly in tin ore. When this original contract was written, it was written by Jesse Jones, Chairman of the RFC, and I do not think there is a harder or straighter one in America today. Let us go ahead with this thing as it is, because tin is one of the most important war materials that the Army and the Navy require.

The gentleman from South Dakota knows that I have tried to go along with him, and we are going along with him in developing some strategic materials out in the mountainous country of the West, and that ought to be done. We will earmark some money in the independent offices appropriation bill, and when we go to conference with the Senate we are going to try to work that thing out and develop those resources in his State and the other States where they have tin, manganese, and these very critical materials. Let us not upset the apple cart in the case of this tin smelter. We need it badly. We are flirting with dynamite. Let us not slow down the processes. Of course, we do not like the situation we are in, but the simple truth of the matter is that we must have that ore, and the only place we can get it in large quantity is from the British and the Dutch. I hope the amendment is voted down; however, I will cooperate with the gentleman on the matters he is interested in.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, may I say in conclusion that the reason we find ourselves in one crisis after another is because we do not stand up on our hind legs as Americans and develop the United States. As long as we continue contracts and practices like this, where we rely upon the favor of other people, we are going to have more and more of these crises. The American people are getting sick and tired of this continual recurrence of crises, getting into one trouble, then getting out of that by pointing to something a little bigger and more dangerous. The American people are going to express themselves on this subject one of these days and in no uncertain terms.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pending amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the smelter in question is located in my district and, naturally, I am very vitally interested in it and quite familiar with it. There are a good many misconceptions that have been voiced here this afternoon. One fact I would like very much to impress particularly on the committee is that every agency of the Government which has any responsibility whatever for national defense, the stockpile, security in general, has asked for the passage of the bill as is. They know all of the objections which have been raised by the opposition. These have been weighed carefully and considered and put aside in the interest of the Nation.

Let me say just a word about the operators. The contract was made with them during the war for the reason that they had the know-how to treat the low-grade Bolivian ore which then seemed to be our only source of ore. They had the know-how. Also if anybody could ever get any ore out of the Far East only they would be able to do it. Now, like any business firm, they wrote into the contract, passed by Jesse Jones, that they would have certain options. Any business firm would have done exactly the same thing. They have provided an excellent operation. They have brought out the tin that was needed, and which was essential during the war, and still is for the stockpile.

May I clear up one other little misconception. This is not a war hysteria measure. This has been thought of and talked about; it has been in process in one way or another for 2 years that I know of, because I have a bill pending which would turn that plant over to private enterprise. If I return here next year I expect to renew the effort to place that plant in private hands to operate; then it will be up to the Government agency responsible to pick a proper purchaser or lessee, as the case may be.

But in the meantime this amendment would ask the operators, who have done a good successful job, to turn over their trade secrets to a rival concern. I think that is what is at the bottom of all this objection. It comes up every time a smelter bill is being considered in the committee or in the House. It stems, I believe, from a rival concern that would like very much to have those secrets. They would like to go into a competitive operation.

I hope that the opposition, in the interests of national defense, will withhold its opposition this afternoon and let us provide for the continued operation of that plant for the next 5 years. I will work with them for the permanent disposition of it whenever they are ready. In the meantime, let us not hamper the smelter and, above all, do not set a limit of 1 year, and do not require them to terminate the agreement by the end of this year, because if you do the operators cannot make a contract that would be worth anything. They cannot proceed as any business firm ought to proceed on a reasonably long-range basis.

I hope this amendment will be defeated and that you will give us an opportunity to provide for the national defense in this matter.

Mr. CLEMENTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CLEMENTE. Can the gentleman tell me what benefit the Government of the United States will derive from this contract?

Mr. THOMPSON. They will continue the production of tin, and we will be certain to have tin for war purposes out of the stockpile.

Mr. CLEMENTE. Well, do we get any as the result of this contract?

Mr. THOMPSON. Certainly we do. We have a tremendous stockpile of it. It has been successful. They smelt 36,000 tons a year. The stockpiling figures are confidential, as the gentleman knows, but the national defense people think it is extremely successful.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SAYLOR].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. D'EWART. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. D'EWART: Page 2, line 4, strike out the period and add: "including the right to the knowledge and use of any patents, formulas, process, plans and methods for smelting tin or recovering the byproducts thereof."

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane. It is practically the same amendment that has just been voted on; in practically the same words, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The gentleman from Kentucky has made the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. D'EWART], that it is not germane and that it is identical with the amendment just voted on by the committee. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment is not an identical amendment, although it contains a portion of an amendment previously voted on by the committee; therefore the Chair holds that the amendment is germane and overrules the point of order.

Mr. D'EWART. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is not identical with the other amendment in that it does not disturb the present contract and does not limit the time. It simply provides that this process, these patents, this knowledge, this understanding of the handling of tin that is gained through the use of our money, through a plant that our money built, will be available to American processors. It does not interfere with the present contract. The operation of the plant can go on as heretofore, but it does make this knowledge and these patents available to our American industry. I think it is important that this amendment be adopted so that we can distribute to other tin plants in this country the knowledge that the taxpayers' money in this country has provided and will develop in the future.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. D'EWART. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES. I am not as familiar with this legislation as I should be, but I am wondering if this observation is not correct, that American taxpayers are more or less financing or supporting a foreign cartel with respect to this tin business.

Mr. D'EWART. There is no question but that there is a cartel mixed up with this whole tin industry and the cartel, in effect, distributes the ores that are developed in Bolivia and other countries and also has a lot to do with what becomes of the metals that are processed from these ores.

Mr. REES. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. D'EWART. Mr. Chairman, Members of the Committee, I earnestly urge that this amendment be agreed to.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think the purpose of this amendment is exactly the same as that of the one we just voted down. It is certainly not intended to help the operation of the tin smelter. Let me invite your attention to this: So far as a cartel is concerned, through this plant you have the only protection you could possibly have against a cartel. In that plant there are two and sometimes three members of the Dutch firm that operates it. All the rest are American workmen, most of them recruited locally, and every one taught the know-how necessary to operate a tin smelter. Presumably that force would stay right there in the event of any change of hands, in the event the Billiton people went out of business.

There seems to be no reason on earth why the applecart, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMAS] just said, should be upset at this stage of the game. If you do want to tamper with the long-range operation, then let us do it under the permanent legislation that will follow and is designed to really give us private operation of the plant.

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. POULSON. I was very much interested in the gentleman's explanation of why it was not a cartel. Will not the profits and the benefits inure to the benefit of the owners rather than to the laborers, just as if the laborers were working in some other factory? I cannot see the gentleman's logic in saying this is not a cartel for the simple reason that though the ownership is in the Dutch the operations are performed by American laborers.

Mr. THOMPSON. The ownership is not in the Dutch at all, the ownership is in the American Government, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Dutch operate it simply because they had the best offer at the time the first lease was made.

Mr. POULSON. That is the ownership of the plant, but the benefits as far as the know-how is concerned are still in the ownership of the Dutch?

Mr. THOMPSON. That is correct, but do not forget that all of those secrets are now in the hands of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and at the disposal of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to be turned over to anybody they think is proper.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PRESTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8569) to strengthen the common defense by extending for 5 years the authority for the Texas City tin-smelter operation, pursuant to House Resolution 714, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3666) to extend for 5 years the authority to provide for the maintenance of a domestic tin-smelting industry.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to strengthen the common defense and to meet industrial needs for tin by providing for the maintenance of a domestic tin-smelting industry", approved June 28, 1947, as amended, is amended by striking out "June 30, 1951" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1956."

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SPENCE: Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert the provisions of the bill H. R. 8569 as passed, as follows:

"That section 2 of the joint resolution entitled 'Joint resolution to strengthen the common defense and to meet industrial needs for tin by providing for the maintenance of a domestic tin-smelting industry', approved June 28, 1947 (61 Stat. 190), as amended, is amended by striking out '1951' and inserting in lieu thereof '1956', and by substituting for the period after the word 'designate' a colon, and adding the following: 'Provided, That such powers, functions, duties, and authority shall be exercised and performed with due regard to the public interest in the maintenance of domestic smelting of Western Hemisphere tin ores and concentrates by American private enterprise.'"

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The proceedings by which the bill H. R. 8569 was passed were vacated and the bill was laid on the table.

GET THE RECORD STRAIGHT

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the remarks I made in Committee of the Whole may be printed at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, Thursday, July 20, from the well of the House, the Representative from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS], in a 1-minute speech, among other things, said:

Mr. Speaker, I am having a great many requests from women, saying they would like to join the Marines or WAVES or WACS. They are anxious to do all they can for their country in this time of emergency and stress. Some have even stated that they would like to have a draft of women if they have a draft of men.

Replying immediately thereafter, I tried to make the point that we were not yet so weak in manpower that it was necessary to draft women or compel them to fight with the armed services.

A further point which I sought to make was that, in drafting the young men, both a physical and a mental examination was required; that the result was that those among the young men who were the more physically and mentally fit were taken into the service while those who did not pass these tests remained at home; and that many of the drafted were killed, more were wounded, a still smaller percentage returned to this country mentally impaired.

My further argument was that the women of this country, whose loyalty, whose contribution to our wars has never been questioned, were entitled as a matter of right to select as a husband and the father of their children a typical young American—not a displaced person who, after a war, came to this country, or one from a group from which the most physically and mentally desirable had been removed by the draft. Anything wrong about that?

Ordinarily, I can make my meaning clear, leave little room for misunderstanding, but apparently on this occasion I was too subtle, for it is evident my words were misunderstood.

The Detroit Free Press, in an editorial of Saturday, July 22, referring to me, among other things, said:

He intimated that woman's interest in getting in some war activity was to catch a husband. If they want men that bad, HOFFMAN suggested, they can get displaced persons from Europe.

For some reason best known to its publisher or editorial writers, the Detroit Free Press has more than once either misconstrued or misrepresented what I have said, what I have condemned or advocated.

In replying to the suggestion that, if we are to have a draft of men, we should have a draft of women, I did not then use, nor have I ever at any time used, words which carried the suggestion "that women's chief interest in getting into some war activity was to catch a husband."

Nor did I ever suggest that, if the women of America wanted a husband, "they can get displaced persons from Europe."

Several times I have argued, as I now contend, that, if the draft is to take two or three million young Americans and, in taking them, is to select those best physically and mentally qualified, that process deprives the young woman of America of the opportunity to get the kind of a man she might otherwise have; that, to a large extent, her choice would be limited to those who were disqualified for the draft, or to some displaced person or an immigrant.

My thought was, and it is, that such a result was most unfair to the young women of America.

The Detroit Free Press editorial further states:

No woman of whom we know really wants to go to war.

Nor do I. In my humble judgment, it would be a grievous mistake to draft the young women, put them into the armed services as we do the men.

What I tried to say was this: That, because of the war and the selective-service draft, the opportunity of the average young American woman to find a husband of her choice would be limited.

After my remarks were made on the floor, the Member from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] phoned me, said she had been hurt by my remarks and requested that I omit them from the printed RECORD.

Because I did not consider my statement of very great importance, and because I greatly admire Mrs. ROGERS and did not care to needlessly hurt her feelings, I complied with her request. Now, because of letters which I have received, protesting my remarks—the letters undoubtedly being based upon a misconception of what I said—and because of this editorial, which is circulated in my district, I now ask permission to include the remarks made on that occasion.

Those remarks were as follows:

WOMEN IN THE ARMED SERVICES

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, no one questions the patriotism, the ability or the willingness of women to render service either in peacetime or when we are at war. Nor does anyone question the value of those services. But I do not agree with the suggestion that we should draft women.

Women can render the most valuable service when we are at war if, instead of serving in the front lines, they will just stay at home, doing their part on the home front in many ways—sometimes in industrial plants, sometimes as civilian or professional workers and assistants, or in taking care of their husbands and sons, or, by letters of encouragement, maintaining the morale of those they have sent to the front.

I do not believe that it is either necessary or desirable, as has been suggested, that we create an army of Amazons.

Nor do I believe that our women should be required, as the years or the centuries roll on, to provide continuous crops of cannon fodder for successive wars, as they will be required to do if we are to police the world, fight in every war in which ambitious or power-mad politicians of other nations may from time to time involve us.

But there is something in the situation which calls for the drafting of our men which tends to cloud the future. That is the fact that the best young men of America—at least from a physical and mental standpoint—are to be drafted, sent abroad there to fight, some to die, others to be wounded, others to be returned home mentally impaired, their initiative broken while from those rejected, or from those who come to us from abroad, our women select their husbands.

Our young women can look forward, on the record thus far made, not to having a fine young American for a husband, for the father of their children, but being compelled, if she would marry, to select that husband from among those who were left behind or from the displaced persons or others who come to us from Europe or Asia, some of whom—all too often—feeling charged with a mission to remake our form of government.

PROVIDING FOR MODIFICATION OR CANCELLATION OF CERTAIN ROYALTY-FREE LICENSES

Mr. BRYSON submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (S. 2128) to provide for the modification or cancellation of certain royalty-free licenses granted to the Government by private holders of patents and rights thereunder.

FEPC

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, Americans who understand the true nature of the world-wide struggle between democracy and totalitarianism were shocked when the struggle for an FEPC was abandoned. To the peoples of Asia, Africa, and the Middle East, this action is being interpreted to mean that we talk democracy but do not live it. We know this is not the case, that by comparison with other nations our democracy is of the highest order. Nevertheless, the FEPC would have improved our way of life. It would have added significantly to individual opportunity and would have blunted antiminority groups in this country. In addition, it would have knocked the props from under Soviet propagandists who are trying to mislead struggling peoples everywhere. If we are to hold the offensive in a world of ideals and community practice, we must not give the cynical and duping Communists the opportunity to throw up our shortcomings to the religious, economic, and racial minorities throughout the world.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to insert a letter to President Truman from the Allegheny County Council for Civil Rights:

JULY 25, 1950.

HARRY S. TRUMAN,
President of the United States,
The White House.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: On behalf of the 40 organizations in the Allegheny County Council for Civil Rights, we wish to call to your attention proposals which are basic to the success of the United Nations action in Korea.

As persons of all races, creeds, and national origins, we believe it is urgent that the United States demonstrate to people everywhere that democracy works effectively.

Every American wants to share in the responsibilities as well as the privileges of democracy. To accomplish this we urge you to use your office to insure the most efficient utilization of the Nation's human resources. We urge you to consider the following proposals:

1. That you continue and accelerate the policy of nonsegregation in the armed forces;

2. That you issue an order comparable to the FEPC Executive order which eliminated discrimination in industrial employment during World War II;

3. That you encourage the earliest possible ratification of the Genocide Convention;

4. That you take steps to end the Oriental Exclusion Policy of our immigration laws.

These actions will demonstrate clearly to the peoples of the world the validity of our claim to the democratic way of life.

Respectfully yours,
Rev. L. B. MOSELEY,
Rev. R. PIERRE JOHNSON,
Cochairmen.

TRAGEDY AT MYRTLE BEACH, S. C.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, the city of Nashville is in mourning today.

On Sunday afternoon, as members of their families awaited their returning from maneuvers, word came that 30 valiant sons and soldiers had perished in the inferno of a National Guard plane crash near Myrtle Beach.

Words are weak in the face of sacrificial action that characterized the dying of these young men. They died in line of duty, and I have been informed by the Air Forces that they were traveling under competent orders. Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Government through the Veterans' Administration will assume the full responsibility it owes to the families of these young men. This, of course, can be but small comfort to the loved ones left behind, but it is the least a grateful Government can do for men who wear the uniform of the armed services.

These young men were preparing themselves for service in the defense of freedom and liberty at a time when forces of evil and aggression again challenge democratic ideals and institutions.

I knew personally some of them and I am sure that Members of the House join me in extending our very sincere sympathy to the families of all of them in their hour of grief.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days to extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL DUTY OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES IN RAISING REVENUES

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, according to this morning's paper, it is being suggested that the tax bill which passed this House just prior to the Korean conflict, and which is now in the Senate, be used as the vehicle for the enactment of the emergency taxes needed to meet our increased defense costs.

I certainly believe that we must take the necessary action to raise as far as possible the revenue to pay for the enlarged defense expenditures of this country, and I believe the Ways and Means Committee should begin work on this job immediately. I object strenuously, however, to any procedure which will violate the spirit of the Constitution and invade the prerogatives of the House of Representatives.

Article I, section 7 of the Constitution provides that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives. It is shocking that consideration is being given to violating the spirit, if not the letter, of this provision of the Constitution.

If such a procedure is followed, it will mean that the Ways and Means Committee will be shut out completely from consideration of this most important matter. It will mean denial to the House itself of one of its basic prerogatives under the Constitution. This matter will come to the floor of the House, not as a bill entitled to full and complete debate, but it will come to us only as a conference report.

Mr. Speaker, the integrity of the Constitution, of the House of Representatives, and of the Ways and Means Committee is involved in this decision.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] is recognized for 10 minutes.

THIS IS NOT THE TIME TO ASK OUR GOVERNMENT FOR MONEY EXCEPT WHERE ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY—WE MUST CUT EXPENDITURES TO THE BONE

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, the time has come when this Congress must reappraise and reexamine expenditures and authorizations charged to the Federal Government. It must be done in light of the impending crisis. We have got to cut our nondefense expenditures to the bone and cancel all unnecessary nondefense authorizations if we expect to protect our country and have sufficient funds to carry us through this imminent emergency.

Only a short time ago, and after weeks of debate, a liberal authorization bill costing the taxpayers of this country $27,340,000,000 was approved by the House. It was my view then, and I am now more convinced than ever, that amount could have been reduced with respect to nonwar activities. Even so, it was considerably lower than the recommendation of the administration. Approximately $11,000,000,000 is for nondefense agencies.

When the bill got to the other end of the Capitol, the committee in charge not only restored the cuts made by the House for departmental operation, but assured a continuance of business as usual in the operation of the already overmanned nonwar agencies. This was done, and is still being done, in the face of a world crisis.

I was surprised to learn that the Senate committee increased the House bill from $27,340,000,000 to $32,500,000,000, an increase of more than $5,000,000,000, almost all for nonwar activities.

I am amazed that the body at the other end of the Capitol has thus far outdone itself in deference to "pork-barrel interests." The House, in my judgment, allocated more funds than necessary for public works projects. The House bill, as I have already suggested, was liberal in its expenditures. But the Senate has added $132,400,000, nearly all of which goes to provide funds for new projects, including a good many of doubtful necessity.

The thing to which I want to call your attention is that nearly all of the increases at the other end of the Capitol have nothing to do with the war effort. $132,500,000 is for nonwar public projects. It is purely "pork."

When the appropriation bill came before the House, I tried at that time to convince the membership that no new projects of any kind should be started unless it could be shown they were absolutely necessary. I find today that 79 new planning projects have been added by the other body that were not in the House bill. There are 23 projects for construction not in the House bill and not even in the President's budget, and in 125 other cases the committee approved sums in excess of the House bill.

Mr. Speaker, in view of international commitments already made, and more to be made, all unnecessary projects should at least be deferred. Some of them might be worth while, but a good many harbors and inlets are more important for yachting and pleasure boating and boondoggling than for the interests of our country.

There are other items to be considered. The House cut operating expenses in the Department of Agriculture amounting to $16,300,000. These expenses take nothing away from the farmer, but the committee at the other end of the Capitol decided to put it all back in the bill. On independent offices and other agencies they did a similar job.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the condition of our Treasury and the terrific debt that is hanging over us, and considering especially the millions and billions that will need to be expended for the protection of our people, we ought to cut every proposed nonwar expenditure to the very limit and save every dollar possible for the present crisis. The head of every agency of our Government ought to come forth with a report telling this Congress wherein funds for manpower can be saved, so we may have more to apply on the need for war expenditures that confront us. This is no time to be asking the Government for any money not absolutely needed.

Mr. Speaker, I call your attention to the fact that in 1948, only 2 years ago, the Federal Government spent $6,400,000,000 on a domestic program. The 1951 budget now under consideration calls for $12,000,000,000 for a similar program.

Mr. Speaker, we can, in my opinion, save not less than $5,000,000,000 by reducing activities of nonwar agencies, including peacetime public projects and other items not absolutely needed at this critical time. We could also reduce the expenditure of funds that are being sent to Europe for civilian projects, including the building of power plants in Italy and in France. Yes, and strike out such items as one that provides for such increases as the rehabilitation of Monte Carlo.

Let no one ask for money from our Government unless it can be shown that it is absolutely necessary at this crucial hour. We have got to tighten our belts and work together to pull our country through the impending crisis.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BECKWORTH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include newspaper clippings.

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. PRICE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and to include a newspaper article.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JULY 26, 1950

(Legislative day of Thursday, July 20, 1950)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, from the tumult of an angry world we seek the sanctuary of Thy presence, not that we may escape the world, but that we may turn to the perplexing maze of its tragic problems with strengthened spirits and quiet minds. In a shaken world we seek stability. In an anguished world we need inner peace. In a fearful world grant us confidence and courage.

We confess that in the conceit of our self-sufficiency too often we have turned with our burning thirsts to the broken cisterns of worldly wisdom and of our own sophisticated cleverness. Help us this noontide to turn our faces to Thy shining, O Thou Sun of our help and strength. If in this hour of a supreme test, as the free world battles against slavery, the way to victory is long and difficult and won at last with crimson cost, still keep our wills steadfast and our faith strong as was the faith of our fathers when they built this Nation of our love and prayer. We ask it in the Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. McFARLAND, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, July 25, 1950, was dispensed with.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE

On request of Mr. WHERRY, and by unanimous consent, Mr. CAIN, who is absent by leave of the Senate until August 2, was further excused from attendance upon the sessions of the Senate until August 15.

On his own request, and by unanimous consent, Mr. SCHOEPPEL was excused from attendance on the session of the Senate from today until August 3.

On his own request, and by unanimous consent, Mr. AIKEN was excused from attendance on the sessions of the Senate until Tuesday of next week.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WITHERS] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LEAHY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] is detained on official business.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3666) to extend for 5 years the authority to provide for the maintenance of a domestic tin-smelting industry, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9178) to suspend restrictions on the authorized personnel strength of the Armed Forces, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

By unanimous consent, the following routine business was transacted:

MIDYEAR ECONOMIC REPORT OF THE PRESIDENT—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Joint Committee on the Economic Report:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, D. C., July 26, 1950.

The honorable the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,

The honorable the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIRS: I am presenting herewith a Midyear Economic Report to the Congress. This is supplementary to the Economic Report of the President of January 6, 1950, and is transmitted in accordance with section 3 (b) of the Employment Act of 1946.

In preparing this report, I have had the advice and assistance of the Council of Economic Advisers, members of the Cabinet, and heads of independent agencies.

Together with this report, I am transmitting a report, The Economic Situation at Midyear 1950, prepared for me by the Council of Economic Advisers in accordance with section 4 (c) (2) of the Employment Act of 1946.

Respectfully,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

PETITIONS

Petitions were laid before the Senate and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A resolution adopted by the Townsend Clubs of Hillsborough County, at Tampa, Fla., favoring the enactment of the so-called Townsend plan, providing old-age assistance; to the Committee on Finance.

A letter in the nature of a petition from W. E. Anderson, commissioner, Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Immigration, Baton Rouge, La., transmitting a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, which letter and concurrent resolution were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and the concurrent resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"House Concurrent Resolution 34

"Whereas the economy of the State of Louisiana is basically agricultural, with the total cash income from farm commodities during 1949 reaching a total of more than $401,000,000; and

"Whereas the national farm programs of the Federal Government, which have been in operation over the past 15 years, have not obtained the desirable objective of stabilizing the national farm economy, which economy has the most direct bearing on our national income, the failure in this regard being contrary to the success obtained in affording protection to American manufacturers by way of tariffs and to labor by the minimum wage-and-hour law; and

"Whereas the purchasing power of the farm people of the United States may be maintained at 100 percent of parity without subsidies from the Federal Treasury if accorded the same national legislative protection as that afforded manufacturers and labor; and

"Whereas the Congress of the United States has before it for consideration farm plans of national legislation which have for their purpose the maintenance of the purchasing power of the farm people of our Nation on a level comparable to labor and other groups for the benefit of all the people of the Nation; and

"Whereas the national debt is the greatest in the history of the United States, and that substantially this debt was created during a period of high national income and should be liquidated during a similar period of high national income; and

"Whereas it is recognized by eminent economists that the national income is seven times the amount received by farmers for raw agricultural products or five times the amount received by farmers and all other producers of raw materials; and

"Whereas the Honorable HENRY D. LARCADE, JR., Member of the United States House of Representatives from the Seventh Congressional District of Louisiana, has very ably presented before the House of Representatives a national farm plan sponsored by the Association of Southern Commissioners of Agriculture, which plan would provide for the control of the basic agricultural products by restricting the amount of farm products farmers could sell on the American market to the quantities needed for domestic consumption by establishing production quotas and issuing certificates that would entitle the farmer to sell on the American market his fair share of such agricultural products at 100 percent of parity with no subsidy from the Federal Treasury; with any or all products which a farmer produced in excess of his production quota being sold on the world market, held over until another season, or sold on the American market by use of unused certificates of another farmer; and

"Whereas this farm plan would provide for more efficient utilization of farm land and a progressive, approved, and scientific application of a soil and natural-resource conservation program, which means so much to the conservation, protection, and improvement of our soils and natural resources; and

"Whereas the plan proposed by the Association of Southern Commissioners of Agriculture eliminates the objectional features of restrictions and Federal control over our farm people and their economy to the minimum and would prevent the continued economy-wrecking drains on our Federal Treasury by the payment of production subsidies; and

"Whereas the slogan adopted by the Southern Commissioners of Agriculture in proposing their farm plan, 'Reserve the American market for the American farmer and laborer with 100 percent parity and without subsidy from the Federal Treasury,' truly represents the free-enterprise system on which this great Nation was founded and has progressed to make it the greatest Nation in the world: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Legislature of Louisiana, That the senate and house of representatives concurring herein do hereby endorse the farm plan as proposed by the Association of Southern Commissioners of Agriculture; and be it further Resolved by the Legislature of Louisiana (the senate and house of representatives concurring herein), That the Congress of the United States, especially the Louisiana delegation, be memorialized to champion the farm plan as proposed by the Association of Southern Commissioners of Agriculture so that it may receive a fair and impartial hearing on its merits."

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. In accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate will proceed to consider the calendar, and the clerk will report the first bill on the calendar beginning where the Senate left off at the last call.

EXECUTION OF OIL AND GAS LEASE IN PARK COUNTY, WYO.

The bill (S. 3315) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to execute an oil and gas lease on a certain tract of land in Park County, Wyo., was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TAFT. What is the bill; what number?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senate bill 3315, order of business 1848.

Mr. TAFT. Are we going to return to the other bills included in the unanimous-consent agreement at the end of the call of the calendar?

The VICE PRESIDENT. At the end of the call of the calendar.

Is there objection to the present consideration of Senate bill 3315?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue an oil and gas lease, as herein provided, covering lot 1 and the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 23, township 58 north, range 100 west, sixth principal meridian, Wyoming, comprising fifty-nine and thirty-nine one-hundredths acres, more or less. The lease shall be issued to the operator who has been in continuous possession of the land described since prior to February 25, 1920, under an oil and gas lease issued by all the persons who located the land as an oil placer mining claim on October 15, 1915, and shall be held by said operator for itself and the said locators and their successors as their interests may appear.

SEC. 2. The lease shall be dated May 1, 1946, shall be in the form provided by section 17 of the act of February 25, 1920, as amended by the act of August 8, 1946 (60 Stat. 951), and 43 C. F. R., 1946 Supplement, 192.54, and shall provide for the payment of royalty at the rates regularly prescribed for competitive leases under section 17 of said act, as amended, in amount or value of oil and gas removal or sold from nonunitized horizons or zones or removed or sold from or allocated to the lease under the provisions of the Elk Basin Unit agreement, approved by the Secretary of the Interior on May 29, 1946.

SEC. 3. The lease shall not be issued unless and until, within 6 months from the effective date of this act—

(1) an application for the lease is filed by the operator to whom the lease is to be issued;

(2) the applicant pays to the United States as royalty an amount at the rates provided in the lease to be issued on all oil and gas produced and saved prior to May 1, 1946, from the land to be leased;

(3) the applicant, together with all persons or their successors in interest having a contract or lease with the applicant under which they claim or hold an interest in lots 1 and 2 and the south half of the northeast quarter of section 23, township 58 north, range 100 west, sixth principal meridian, shall relinquish and quitclaim to the United States all their interests and claims of whatever character in the land described, and shall agree that the interests to be held by them or inuring to their benefit under the lease authorized by this act shall be held by them in full satisfaction for every interest or claim which they may have or assert with respect to the land described;

(4) the lease to be issued under this act shall be fully committed to the Elk Basin Unit agreement, approved on May 29, 1946, such commitment to be effective as of May 1, 1946; and

(5) the applicant agrees and binds itself to reimburse the unit operator, without interest, for the share of investment costs and operating expenses incurred from and after May 1, 1946, and allocated under the unit agreement to the land to be leased.

AGRICULTURAL PROGRAM IN THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

The bill (S. 2809) to provide for an agricultural program in the Virgin Islands was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, this bill, S. 2809, is designed to provide, on a restricted scale, an agricultural program for the Virgin Islands. A survey conducted last year by representatives of the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture revealed the urgent need for an adequate program in agriculture research and extension to aid in stabilizing the economy of the islands.

At present, the Government of the Virgin Islands operates on a deficit basis, receiving an appropriation of approximately $700,000 each year from Congress. One of the foremost industries is agriculture, and there are more than 55,000 acres of farm land in the three islands. This bill will provide assistance to the islands and their farmers, and looks toward the day when, as a result of increased agricultural production, the importation of food will be eliminated and deficit spending for the islands' economy can be substantially reduced or terminated.

I should like to give the Senators a brief résumé, Mr. President, of agricultural assistance in the Virgin Islands. An experimental station was established by the Danish Government in 1910, and transferred to the United States Department of Agriculture in 1919. In July 1932, this station was taken over by the Department of the Interior, which now administers it. One of the primary purposes of this bill is to transfer this station back to the Department of Agriculture, along with such part of its functions, property, personnel, records, and unexpended balance of appropriations as may be agreed between the Secretaries of Agriculture and Interior. The bill further permits the Secretary of Agriculture to maintain in the islands an agricultural research and extension service program. I might say that as presently administered by Interior, only a small educational and extension service is provided. The subcommittee considering this bill—and I was chairman of that subcommittee—has received letters from both Interior and Agriculture wholeheartedly approving the measure. Apparently both Departments are agreed that the functions of this agricultural station can be most efficiently carried out under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture. No opposition has been voiced to this bill from any source.

The cost of administration of the program outlined in S. 2809 is authorized in the measure and I quote from the bill: "as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act." Actual expenditures will be appropriated in addition to, and not in substitution for, sums otherwise available to the Department of Agriculture. Under the present administration of the Department of the Interior, approximately $50,000 annually has been expended. The Agriculture Department contemplates a cost of $100,000 per year in the immediate future, with a reduction as the program for agricultural independence becomes increasingly effective.

I repeat, this bill has had no opposition. I trust and hope that the Senate will approve it.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to establish and maintain in the Virgin Islands of the United States an agricultural research and extension service program. In carrying out the program authorized by this act the Secretary shall utilize the agencies, facilities, and employees of the Department of Agriculture, and may cooperate with the government of the Virgin Islands, and other public and private organizations and individuals in the Virgin Islands and elsewhere.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to transfer to the United States Department of Agriculture such part of the functions, property, personnel, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations of the agricultural experiment stations in the Virgin Islands as may be agreed upon between the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 3. There is authorized to be appropriated such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act. The moneys appropriated in pursuance of this act shall also be available for the purchase and rental of land and the construction or acquisition of buildings, for the equipment and maintenance of such buildings, purchase and rental of passenger-carrying automobiles, employment of persons in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and for printing and disseminating the results of research, and such other expenditures as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act. Sums appropriated in pursuance of this act shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, sums appropriated or otherwise made available to the Department of Agriculture, and may be allocated to such agencies of the Department as are concerned with the administration of the program of the Virgin Islands.

TECHNICAL SERVICES FOR PRIVATE FOREST LANDOWNERS

The bill (H. R. 7155) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with the States to enable them to provide technical services to private forest landowners, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, in behalf of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

Mr. ELLENDER subsequently said: Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania will be back later today, and the bill just called was passed over because of his objection. I wonder if the Senator from Arizona would agree to permit this bill to go to the foot of the calendar until the Senator from Pennsylvania returns. I know that if I can talk to the Senator from Pennsylvania I can get him to change his mind.

Mr. McFARLAND. I have no objection to the bill going to the foot of the calendar, but unless the Senator from Pennsylvania withdraws his objection, I shall have to object to it at that time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the foot of the calendar.

TRANSFER OF DRY-LAND AND IRRIGATION STATIONS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5679) to authorize the transfer of certain agricultural dry land and irrigation field stations to the States in which such stations are located, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment, on page 2, line 6, after "New Mexico", to strike out "Lawton, Okla."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MUTUAL-AID PLAN FOR FIRE PROTECTION—DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AND ADJACENT COMMUNITIES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4788) to provide for a mutual-aid plan for fire protection by and for the District of Columbia and certain adjacent communities in Maryland and Virginia, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, with amendments, on page 1, line 9, after the words "Alexandria, Va.,", to insert "with the city of Falls Church, Va,"; on page 2, line 20, after the words "Alexandria, Va.,", to insert "and the city of Falls Church, Va.,"; and on page 3, line 1, after the word "Act", to insert "service performed by any officer or member of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia at any other city, area, municipality, or other location where they shall have been directed to respond for the purpose of saving lives, extinguishing fires, or preserving property on orders of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or of the Chief Engineer of said Fire Department or his acting designate."

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3584) to amend the act of June 9, 1906 (34 Stat. 227), entitled "An act granting land to the city of Albuquerque for public purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is any Senator prepared to explain the bill?

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go to the foot of the calendar, so we may have an explanation when we reach it again.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I join in that request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be passed to the foot of the calendar.

KAREN R. McANDREWS

The bill (H. R. 6994) for the relief of Karen R. McAndrews was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHERRY subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill (H. R. 6994) for the relief of Karen R. McAndrews, was passed, be reconsidered so I may ask for an explanation of the bill. The amount involved is very large, and I believe a bill calling for so large an amount should be explained to the Senate. I do not say I am not in favor of passing the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska that the Senate reconsider the vote by which House bill 6994 was passed? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, this is the case of a young woman who was very seriously and permanently injured as the result of the explosion of a hand grenade in the hands of a soldier in the United States Army.

Senators who have looked at the report will have seen the pictures of the pitifully crippled left hand and arm of this girl. She sustained other severe and disfiguring injuries.

This girl was employed as a hostess by the Special Service Branch of the Department of the Army. She was stationed in Munich, Germany. She and other young women similarly employed were entertaining a group of servicemen. Testimony before the committee by Army authorities was that this was in line of their assignment. One of the soldiers backed this claimant into a corner, and pulled the pin of a hand grenade with his teeth, while he held her to prevent her escape. The grenade went off, injuring the girl, and causing injuries to the soldier from which he subsequently died.

The Department of the Army, after an investigation of the case, found that the soldier met his death in line of duty, and he was buried with full military honors and his next of kin received all the benefits usual in the case of the death of a soldier in line of duty, including the payment of a death gratuity and national service life insurance.

The committee originally postponed this bill indefinitely on the theory that the soldier had not been on active duty at the time the girl was injured. Subsequently the bill was reconsidered, and testimony was heard before a subcommittee of six Senators. The claimant herself appeared, as did officials of the Department of the Army.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, so far as the junior Senator from Nebraska is concerned, in view of the explanation already given by the Senator from Nevada, I have no objection to the passage of the bill. If the Senator desires to have the remainder of his explanation printed in the RECORD, I have no objection.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the explanation may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Department urged payment of the claim. The subcommittee reported the bill, unanimously, to the full committee; and the full committee thereafter, by unanimous vote, reported the bill favorably to the Senate.

This is a case in which there is, strictly speaking, no legal claim on the Government of the United States; but it was the feeling of the committee that this young woman who had gone overseas in the service of her country, and had been so severely and permanently injured and disfigured, deserved at the hands of her Government nothing less than this bill provides.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 6994) for the relief of Karen R. McAndrews was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3147) to establish a temporary National Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, by request, I ask that the bill be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

MR. AND MRS. RAY S. BERRUM

The bill (S. 1501) for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Ray S. Berrum was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mr. and Mrs. Ray S. Berrum, of Chippewa Falls, Wis., the sum of $5,000, in full satisfaction of their claims against the United States for compensation for the death of their daughter, Dorothy Marie Berrum, who was killed by a United States marine in the District of Columbia, on or about October 5, 1944: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or recevied by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. WILEY subsequently said: Mr. President, when Senate bill 1501, for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Ray S. Berrum, was considered and passed, I was unavoidably detained on important official business. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD following the passage of the bill a memorandum prepared for me relating to the bill.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM FOR SENATOR WILEY

SUBJECT: BERRUM CLAIM, S. 1501—NEW EVIDENCE

Subsequent to the committee's action of reporting favorably on the above subject bill, new evidence reached the committee staff indicating that the Marine Corps was on notice that McFarland, who murdered the Berrum girl, was a sexual pervert.

You will recall that the committee report on the bill recommends payment on two grounds, namely, viz:

1. That the Government was responsible for the safety of the girl since it had encouraged her to come to Washington; and

2. That the Government was on constructive if not at least actual notice that McFarland was a dangerous, habitual criminal, and that therefore there was negligence on the part of the Government or the Marine Corps to permit him to remain at large.

The new evidence now before the committee staff does away with any doubt about the type of notice, for now it appears that the Government had actual notice that McFarland was a dangerous person and should at all times have been incarcerated.

It appears that on August 25, 1944, at 3:15 a. m., Private Earl McFarland was arrested by Officer W. J. McGrath, of the Third Precinct, for a homosexual offense. Upon his arrest Private McFarland was booked at the third precinct in the District of Columbia and turned over to the Navy Shore Patrol officers. Officer McGrath states that on that early morning hour a cab driver, coming around the Mayflower, informed him that there was a naked man bleeding around the corner. The officer apprehended the man near 1837 M Street NW., and was informed that a person, who turned out to be McFarland, in an apartment near there had slashed him with a knife and that he had fled from the apartment for fear that said person was going to kill him. Officer McGrath entered the designated apartment to find McFarland drunk and undressed. The injured man, a member of the Navy, was taken to Emergency Hospital, and after treatment was turned over to the Shore Patrol.

It was obvious that as a result of this arrest by the local police and their action in turning him over to the proper officers of the Navy and Marines, the Government was on actual notice that McFarland was not only a homosexual but was also a homicidal maniac. Yet he was permitted to remain at large and the very knife with which he slashed the officer was the same knife used to cut the throat of Mrs. Fitzwater, whom McFarland raped and murdered shortly thereafter, and just a short while before the Berrum murder.

Nothing about this case was mentioned in the departmental report, which would seem to indicate that the Department, in recommending against the bill, was far less than candid.

The sources of the above information are the police records from Washington, the files of the Washington Times-Herald, and direct evidence from Officer McGrath, who still is on the local police force.

CONSTRUCTION OF MODERN NAVAL VESSELS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7764) to authorize the construction of modern naval vessels, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Armed Services, with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "authorized", to strike out "and directed"; in line 10, after the word "authorized", to strike out "and directed"; on page 2, at the beginning of line 7, to insert "Construction authorized by this section shall be chargeable against tonnages authorized by existing law"; and in line 15, after the word "appropriated", to insert "not to exceed."

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MIDSHIPMAN WILLIS HOWARD DUKELOW

The bill (S. 3579) for the relief of Midshipman Willis Howard Dukelow, United States Navy, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to appoint Willis Howard Dukelow, midshipman, United States Navy, an ensign in the United States Navy and the Secretary of the Navy is thereafter authorized to effect his retirement or separation from the active list of the United States Navy in accordance with the provisions of title IV of the Career Compensation Act of 1949. Upon such retirement or separation the said Willis Howard Dukelow shall be entitled to receive disability retirement pay or disability severance pay as authorized by the Career Compensation Act of 1949: Provided, That pay as a midshipman shall in this case be deemed to be basic pay for the purposes of section 402 of the Career Compensation Act of 1949.

CONVEYANCE OF PERCY JONES GENERAL HOSPITAL TO W. K. KELLOGG FOUNDATION

The bill (H. R. 8604) to provide for the conveyance of the Percy Jones General Hospital Gull Lake Annex, Gull Lake, Mich., to the W. K. Kellogg Foundation, Battle Creek, Mich., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that measure, please?

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, the purpose of this bill is to permit the General Services Administrator to convey to the W. K. Kellogg Foundation, Battle Creek, Mich., an installation which is known as the Gull Lake Annex to the Percy Jones General Hospital.

The Percy Jones General Hospital is located at Battle Creek, Mich. In 1944 the W. K. Kellogg Foundation donated to the Government without any reservation whatsoever, the residential property originally occupied by Mr. Kellogg. The property is located at Gull Lake and consists of approximately 72 acres of land improved by a residence and related structures. The estimated cost of the property to Mr. Kellogg is $750,000.

The Government used the property as a convalescent facility in connection with the Percy Jones Hospital. The Government improved the property at a total cost of $15,000. The improvements consist of a mess hall and sewerage system.

The property is no longer required for hospital purposes and the Department of the Army is sympathetic to the idea of returning the property to its prior owner, the W. K. Kellogg Foundation. This foundation is a tax-exempt, non-profit educational and charitable organization applying its efforts to scientific and educational purposes. It should be noted this property was donated to the Government with no restrictions whatsoever in 1944 and with no cost to the Government.

The bill contains a proviso that the property shall not be returned to the W. K. Kellogg Foundation until it has been determined that it is surplus to the requirements of all Government departments. The Army which is the only Government agency to ever have used the property has already declared it excess to its needs and it is not anticipated that any other Government Agency can use it. However, the bill specifically provides that the Government shall retain the property until it has been determined whether there is in fact any agency which desires it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I simply wish to say to the Senate that the Armed Services Committee considered this bill very carefully. They talked to officials in the Defense Establishment about the matter and received their favorable recommendation. The bill was reported unanimously, and the committee feels it is a very worthy measure.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I appreciate the remarks of the very distinguished Senator from Texas. The Government feels that it has gotten out of the property many times more than the $15,000 expended on it. It consists merely of a mess hall and some sewage facilities. It is proposed to return the property to the foundation, which is a scientific, educational, and charitable organization, by which the property was donated to the United States Government. I hope there will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 8604) to provide for the conveyance of the Percy Jones General Hospital Gull Lake Annex, Gull Lake, Mich., to the W. K. Kellogg Foundation, Battle Creek, Mich., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF LAND ON WINNEBAGO INDIAN RESERVATION, NEBR.

The bill (H. R. 6270) to authorize the sale of certain allotted inherited land on the Winnebago Indian Reservation, Nebr., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISSUE OF DUPLICATE OF WILL GERARD'S SCRIPT CERTIFICATE NO. 2 TO LUCY P. CROWELL

The bill (H. R. 8287) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue duplicate of William Gerard's script certificate No. 2, subdivision 13, to Lucy P. Crowell was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INHERITANCE RESTRICTION RELATING TO OSAGE INDIANS OF OKLAHOMA

The bill (S. 2423) to amend section 7 of the act of February 27, 1925 (43 Stat. 1008), relating to the Osage Indians of Oklahoma, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, is the amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the amendment; yes.

Mr. WHERRY. I wonder if the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] can give us a short explanation of the bill? Mr. President, I have consulted with several Senators, and I withdraw the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 2423) to amend section 7 of the act of February 27, 1925 (43 Stat. 1008), relating to the Osage Indians of Oklahoma, which had been reported from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 7 of the act of February 27, 1925 (43 Stat. 1008, 1011), which imposes an inheritance restriction with relation to lands and funds of the Osage Indians, is amended by inserting after the comma following the word "Provided" the following additional restriction: "That (except in cases where a person claiming as such heir is a party to judicial proceedings pending on the date of the enactment of this proviso in which the claimant has filed a formal pleading alleging Indian blood) no claim of heirship shall be recognized unless the claimant shall establish that he is a citizen of the United States and is enrolled on a membership, census, or other roll prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, or has a lineal Indian ancestor so enrolled: Provided further."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN PROPERTY IN BOISE BARRACKS, BOISE, IDAHO—BILL PLACED AT FOOT OF CALENDAR

The bill (S. 3256) directing the transfer to the Department of the Interior by the General Services Administration of certain property in Boise Barracks, Boise, Idaho, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an identical House bill on the calendar, which the Secretary will state by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7667) directing the transfer to the Department of the Interior by the General Services Administration of certain property in Boise Barracks, Boise, Idaho.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 7667) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 3256 is indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MORSE subsequently said: Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MORSE. Has the Senator from Oregon a right to ask for an explanation of a bill on the calendar which has already been passed? It is Calendar 1869, Senate bill 3256. He thinks that probably he would have no objection. The bill happened to be passed before the Senator from Oregon reached the floor. I should merely like to make certain whether it involves a gift of property to any local division of government or to any private institution. My preliminary inquiry is whether I am in order, if I should ask for such an explanation now; or must I ask for reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator desires to reopen the consideration of the bill, he will have to request reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. MORSE. I should like to ask a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the House bill was passed. It is Calendar No. 2096, the bill H. R. 7667, directing the transfer to the Department of the Interior by the General Services Administration of certain property in Boise Barracks, Boise, Idaho. The Senate bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill, H. R. 7667, was passed be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate for further consideration. The Senator from Arkansas reported the bill.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I have no objection to its being reconsidered and placed at the foot of the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be placed at the foot of the calendar.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 5526) to authorize the President to provide for the performance of certain functions of the President by other officers of the Government, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wonder if we may have an explanation of the bill? It seems to be a very important bill.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I have just come into the Chamber from a committee meeting. I ask that the bill be passed over, and that it may be placed at the foot of the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be passed over and placed at the foot of the calendar.

FIVE-DAY WEEK FOR METROPOLITAN POLICE FORCE AND OTHERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7695) to provide a 5-day week for officers and members of the Metropolitan Police force, the United States Park Police force, and the White House Police force, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, on page 2, after line 20, to strike out:

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect on July 1, 1950.

On page 2, after line 21, to insert:

SEC. 2. The first sentence of section 203 (a) of title 3, United States Code, is amended by striking out the words "one hundred and ten" and by inserting the words "one hundred and thirty-three" in lieu thereof.

On page 3, after line 3, to insert:

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect when funds have been appropriated and made available for the additional personnel necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

COMPACT ESTABLISHING BOUNDARY BETWEEN MISSOURI AND KANSAS

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 147) giving the consent of Congress to an agreement between the State of Missouri and the State of Kansas establishing a boundary between said States was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the consent of the Congress is hereby given to such agreement and to the establishment of such boundary, and said acts of the States of Missouri and Kansas are hereby approved.

The preamble was agreed to.

MRS. CLAYRE LOUISE FORSYTH

The bill (S. 1866) for the relief of Mrs. Clayre Louise Forsyth was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 401 (e) of the Nationality Act of 1940, as amended (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 801 (e)) (relating to loss of nationality through voting or participating in an election or plebiscite to determine the sovereignty over foreign territory), shall not apply in the case of the participation of Mrs. Clayre Louise Forsyth, who was born in Augusta, Ga., in the plebiscites held in Labrador in June and July of 1948.

JURISDICTION TO ACT ON CLAIM OF A. K. CHAHROUDI

The bill (S. 2457) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of A. K. Chahroudi, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any limitation upon the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims with respect to claims against the United States by subjects of foreign governments which do not accord to citizens of the United States the right to prosecute claims against their governments, jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon such court to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of A. K. Chahroudi, a subject of Iran, now a permanent resident of the United States, growing out of an alleged breach by the United States of war construction contract No. W-512-eng-7, dated November 22, 1942, under which the said A. K. Chahroudi constructed certain cantonment buildings for the United States at Ahwaz, Iran.

SEC. 2. Suit upon such claim may be instituted at any time within 6 months after the date of enactment of this act. Proceedings for the determination of such claim, and appeals from, and payment of, any judgment thereon shall be in the same manner as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under section 1491 of title 28 of the United States Code.

IVO MARSAK

The bill (S. 2625) for the relief of Ivo Marsak was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws, Ivo Marsak shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of his last entry into the United States, upon payment of the required visa fee and head tax. Upon the enactment of this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the appropriate quota for the first year that such quota is available.

R. W. HARRIS, AUTHORIZED CERTIFYING OFFICER, BUREAU OF FEDERAL SUPPLY

The bill (S. 3610) for the relief of R. W. Harris, authorized certifying officer, Bureau of Federal Supply, Treasury Department, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I think an explanation is desirable in connection with this measure.

When the claimant, R. W. Harris, certified the vouchers referred to in the bill, he was an authorized certifyir[illegible], in the [illegible]deral Supply, Treasury [illegible]partment. By Public Law 152, Eighty-first Congress, the Bureau of Federal Supply, Treasury Department, pursuant to the Hoover Commission recommendations, was transferred to the General Services Administration. By changing the wording of the bill from the Secretary of the Treasury to Administrator of General Services, it will be easier administratively to effectuate the purposes of the bill when it becomes private law, for the simple reason that all the facts concerned are now in the files of the General Services Administration, rather than in the Treasury Department. Thus, the bill, as amended, would involve only one agency, rather than two, namely, Treasury and General Services Administration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, to this bill I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, in lines 10 and 11, it is proposed to strike "Secretary of the Treasury" and insert in lieu thereof "Administrator of General Services."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of R. W. Harris, authorized certifying officer, Bureau of Federal Supply, Treasury Department, for the amount of $149.40, for which credit has been suspended, and disallowances raised, by the General Accounting Office, on account of payments made in accordance with two vouchers certified by the said certifying officer: Provided, That the Administrator of General Services or his authorized representative shall certify that in his opinion there is no evidence of fraud or collusion on the part of said certifying officer in connection with such payments.

JOHN B. UNDERWOOD, JR.

The bill (S. 3614) for the relief of John B. Underwood, Jr., TMC, United States Navy, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That John B. Underwood, Jr., TMC, United States Navy, is hereby relieved of all liability to pay to the United States the sum of $576.25, said amount representing overpayments to him of money allowance for quarters for a dependent wife for the period July 28, 1942, to October 31, 1943.

AMENDMENT OF WAR CLAIMS ACT OF 1948

The bill (S. 3644) to amend the War Claims Act of 1948, as amended, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the purpose of this bill is to give the War Claims Commission necessary authority to subpena witnesses and documents and to administer oaths in connection with hearings which it is required under the law to hold.

There has been no objection to the bill, and the Department of Justice has recommended that the proposed legislation be enacted, since it is deemed essential to the efficient and expeditious conduct of the work of the Commission.

One question has been raised, by the Minority Calendar Committee. This question is whether the word "investigation" should be retained in the bill. Senators will note that the bill now uses the words, in lines 9 and 10 on page 1, "for the purpose of any hearing, examination, or investigation under this act." The question raised by the Minority Calendar Committee was whether this language is sufficiently broad to include investigations initiated by the War Claims Commission outside the specific duties with which the Commission is charged under the present law. While the answer to this question is that the term could not be so broadly construed, the matter has been taken up with the War Claims Commission; and there appears to be no objection whatsoever to eliminating the word "investigation." Therefore, Mr. President, I offer an amendment to accomplish this purpose, and ask its adoption.

In the opinion of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the present language of the bill could not be construed to grant to the War Claims Commission any authority to undertake any investigation not directly connected with the duties already imposed, by statute, upon the Commission. However, my amendment will remove any possible doubt on this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, in lines 9 and 10, it is proposed to strike out "hearing, examination, or investigation", and insert in lieu thereof "hearing or examination."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the War Claims Act of 1948 (Public Law 896, 80th Cong., approved July 3, 1948), as amended, be further amended by redesignating subsection "(d)" thereof as subsection "(g)", and by adding to section 2 three new subsections "(d)", "(e)", and "(f)" to read as follows:

"(d) For the purpose of any hearing or examination under this act the Commission and those employees designated by the Commission shall have the power to issue subpenas for, and compel the attendance of, witnesses to appear and testify or to appear and produce documents, or both, at any designated place where such hearing, examination, or investigation is being held. The production of a person's documents at any place other than his place of business shall not be required, however, in any case in which, prior to the return date specified in the subpena with respect thereto, such person either has furnished the issuer of the subpena with a copy of such documents (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or has entered into a stipulation with the issuer of the subpena as to the information contained in such documents.

"(e) The Commission may, in case of a failure to comply with any such subpena, employ the aid of any district court, for the district in which such person is found, resides or transacts business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence. Such court may, in case of a refusal to obey the subpena issued to such person, issue an order requiring that person to appear there to produce records, if so ordered, or to give evidence concerning the matter in question. Any failure to obey such order of the court shall be punishable by such court as a contempt thereof. Witnesses subpenaed under subsection 2 (d) or (e) shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are allowed and paid witnesses in United States district courts.

"(f) The Commission may authorize and empower any of its employees to administer to, or take from, any person an oath, affirmation, or affidavit when such instrument is required in the performance of the functions or activities of the Commission."

JURISDICTION TO ACT ON CLAIM OF ALVIN SMITH

The bill (H. R. 1022) conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the District of Delaware to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Alvin Smith, of New Castle, Del., arising out of the damage sustained by him as a result of the construction and maintenance of the New Castle United States Army Air Base, New Castle, Del., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL J. D. MARSHALL

The bill (H. R. 2535) for the relief of Samuel J. D. Marshall was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PARISH BROS.

The bill (H. R. 4041) for the relief of Parish Bros. was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish the Senator in charge of the bill would explain it and also would discuss the amount involved.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, this is a private claim bill in the amount of $13,322 for the relief of a partnership in California, for losses incurred in connection with a Reclamation Bureau contract. The amount does not include any profits, actual or anticipated. The losses were caused by the fact that the work was suspended on order of the Reclamation Bureau because funds ran out. The contractor had indicated willingness to continue full-scale operations until supplemental funds became available; but this could not be arranged because the Government did not even have enough money to buy cement for the company to work with.

The Bureau of Reclamation has audited the claim and approved the amount that is provided in the bill. The Department of Justice wants the claim sent to the Court of Claims for adjudication; but since other similar claims of other contractors who suffered losses in connection with the exhaustion of funds for reclamation projects have been paid by special acts of Congress, the committee recommended this bill be enacted.

This is not the first claim of this nature which has been considered by the Congress. The similar claims of other contractors, who likewise suffered losses in connection with the exhaustion of funds for reclamation projects, have been paid, both by special acts of Congress and by provisions written into the Interior Department appropriations bill in a previous session. Accordingly, it is only justice that this claimant should be treated in the same manner as other similar claimants have been treated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 4041) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWIN F. SHOCKLEY

The bill (H. R. 4141) for the relief of Edwin F. Shockley was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. RUTH B. MOORE AND OTHERS

The bill (H. R. 4364) for the relief of Mrs. Ruth B. Moore; John Robert Lusk III; John R. Lusk, Sr.; Mrs. Minnie P. Pruitt; and Mrs. Billie John Bickle, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FOREIGN AGENTS REGISTRATION ACT OF 1938

The bill (H. R. 4386) to amend section 2 (a) and section 7 of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, as amended, to make failure of registration a continuing offense, and to continue the obligation of officers, directors, and persons acting as such, to comply with the act despite dissolution of a foreign agent, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr President, the purpose of this bill is to close some loopholes in the Foreign Agents Registration Act.

Under the present law, subversive organizations can and do resist registration under the act by statements in one of three categories: First, that the organization has disaffiliated from its foreign principals; second, that the organization has ceased the activity which required its registration; or, third, that the organization has dissolved.

This bill would make failure of registration a continuing offense, and would continue the obligation of officers, directors, and persons acting as such, to comply with the Registration Act despite the dissolution of a foreign agent.

This bill not only eliminates the excuses to which I have referred but also closes another loophole, by making certain that a person charged with violation of the act cannot plead the statute of limitations. At the present time, it may be contended that the statute begins to run at the time when the agent was first required to register. Under such an interpretation, if he could escape prosecution for the period of the statute, he would thereafter be exempted from registering even though he continued his subversive activities. Under the bill now before the Senate the statute would begin to run only from the last day on which the unregistered agent acted as such.

So far as the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary is aware, there has been no objection to this bill, which has already passed the House; and it appears that there could be no expectation of any objection except perhaps from some agent of a foreign principal who might not wish to be regulated by the proposed law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 4386) to amend section 2 (a) and section 7 of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, as amended, to make failure of registration a continuing offense, and to continue the obligation of officers, directors, and persons acting as such, to comply with the act despite dissolution of a foreign agent, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL M. KORNEGAY

The bill (H. R. 5849) for the relief of Samuel M. Kornegay was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANTONIO ARTOLOZAGA EUSCOLA

The bill (H. R. 6482) for the relief of Antonio Artolozaga Euscola was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Reserving the right to object, I think this bill should be carefully explained.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, this bill provides for the granting of permanent residence for a Spanish national with the appropriate quota deduction and the payment of the visa fee and head tax. The bill was introduced in the House by my colleague, Representative BOSONE.

This individual is employed in Utah as a sheepherder by one of the large sheep outfits in my State.

The problem of securing satisfactory sheepherders has been a difficult one. Sheepherders lead a lonely and rigorous life. They must stay in the hills with the sheep for months at a time without ever coming in contact with other humans. When the sheep owners find a sheepherder who is reliable and who will stay with the herd as is required, such an employee is invaluable.

The beneficiary of this bill has been with this same outfit for 5 years and has been doing a most satisfactory job. If this bill is not passed, he will be subject to deportation. This would result in an economic loss to his employer and to the sheep industry as a whole.

There is another bill now pending in the Judiciary Committee, S. 1192, which provides for similar relief to a number of sheepherders. It is my understanding that this bill is being held up in the Justice Department for what seems to me to be an unreasonable length of time.

In this period of emergency, the country cannot afford to be without competent sheepherders who can maintain our domestic herds and flocks to a satisfactory level so that we will not be dependent on outside sources for our wool and the meat provided from these animals.

I urge the support of this measure and the support of all Senators in securing the immediate report and passage of the afore-mentioned bill, S. 1192.

I may say further, Mr. President, that during World War II extreme difficulty was encountered in my State and in all the Intermountain States in securing sufficient help to keep the sheep industry going. Many times it meant that men far beyond the age when they should have been out in the mountains alone had to perform this kind of work, and young boys who should not have been entrusted with tasks of this kind, had to go along with their fathers and others in order to maintain and preserve the family sheep herds.

These men are necessary to our economy, and since we are in this present emergency, with a possible shortage of labor, more acute than it has been in the past, we certainly should get men for this work.

This is the case of a Basque sheepherder. He has been employed as a sheep herder in Utah since 1945, and his employer has stated that his services are satisfactory and necessary.

Most Senators are familiar with the situation in sheep-raising States, where the services of trained and experienced sheep herders are in great demand. This man is such a sheep herder, and the purpose of this bill is to save him from being deported so that he can continue to contribute by his services to the success of the sheep-raising industry in Utah.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 6482) for the relief of Antonio Artolozaga was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED TRANSFORMER CO.—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 6489) for the relief of United Transformer Co. (formerly United Transformer Corp.) was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may we have an explanation of this measure, especially with reference to whether it provides for the income tax or other taxes to be paid upon this award, in the event the bill is passed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, this bill would pay the claim of the United Transformer Co. of New York for compensation for war materials shipped to another company at the direction and request of the Signal Corps, after the Signal Corps had failed to notify the Transformer Co. of the stoppage of advance payments to the second company to whom the shipments were made.

The facts are that the company to whom the transformers were shipped had a bad credit rating and the United Transformer Co. originally declined to make shipments except on a strictly c. o. d. basis. However, because of the war emergency, the claimant company consented to make shipments, at the request of the Signal Corps, after having been assured by the Signal Corps that this was necessary as a part of the war effort.

The company to whom the shipments were made went into bankruptcy owing the Transformer Co. more than $136,000.

The item of $54,458 for which claim is made represents the value of certain transformers which were returned to the claimant by the second company, and for which the accounts of the second company were credited. Thereafter the Government entered into an agreement with the second company to pay for these transformers, and, although notified that the matter should be handled directly with the claimant here, actually made payment to the second company only a short time before the second company went into bankruptcy.

The Signal Corps knew that this claim for these returned transformers was payable to the Transformer Co., but insisted that the matter be handled through the second company. It was the view of the committee that by this means the Signal Corps adopted the second company as its agent and should be liable for the second company's failure to pay the Transformer Co. the amount of the claim.

TAXABILITY

The question has been raised whether the amount which this bill would pay would be deemed to represent taxable income to the claimant. It was the view of both the House and Senate committees that the sum paid would be taxable. The advice of the Bureau of Internal Revenue has been sought on this point, and we have been assured that the sum which the bill would pay will be held by the Treasury to be taxable income. A request has been made that this interpretation be transmitted in writing, and we have been assured also that this will be done, although the written interpretation has not yet been received.

For that reason, as chairman of the committee, I request that the bill go over until we do receive in writing such advice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will go over.

EDWIN F. ROUNDS

The bill (H. R. 6644) for the relief of Edwin F. Rounds was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. YOUNG JA KIM

The bill (H. R. 7072) for the relief of Mrs. Young Ja Kim was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLUMBUS FINLEY

The bill (H. R. 7392) for the relief of Columbus Finley was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADMISSION OF ALIEN SPOUSES AND MINOR CHILDREN OF CITIZEN MEMBERS OF UNITED STATES ARMED FORCES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1858) to permit the admission of alien spouses and minor children of citizen members of the United States Armed Forces, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment on page 2, line 1, after "(8 U. S. C. 204 (a))", to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That in the cases of such alien spouses of United States citizens serving in, or having an honorable discharge certificate from the Armed Forces of the United States during World War II, the marriage shall have occurred before 90 days after enactment of this act", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 13 (c) of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended (8 U. S. C. 213 (c)), alien spouses or unmarried minor children of United States citizens serving in, or having an honorable discharge certificate from the Armed Forces of the United States during World War II shall, if otherwise admissible under the immigration laws, be eligible to enter the United States with nonquota immigration visas issued under the provisions of section 4 (a) of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended (8 U. S. C. 204 (a)): Provided, That in the cases of such alien spouses of United States citizens serving in, or having an honorable discharge certificate from the Armed Forces of the United States during World War II, the marriage shall have occurred before 90 days after enactment of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RUDOLPH FARCHER

The bill (S. 2204) for the relief of Rudolph Farcher was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ERMALINDA MARY PIZZUTO

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2617) for the relief of Ermalinda Mary Pizzuto which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, at the top of page 2, to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. In the administration of the immigration laws, the said Ermalinda Mary Pizzuto, shall be considered as having been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of her last entry into the United States, upon payment of the required head tax and visa fee.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Attorney General is authorized and directed to discontinue any deportation proceedings and to cancel any outstanding order and warrant of deportation, warrant of arrest, and bond, which may have been issued in the case of Ermalinda Mary Pizzuto. From and after the date of enactment of this act, the said Ermalinda Mary Pizzuto, shall not again be subject to deportation by reason of the same facts upon which such deportation proceedings were commenced, or any such warrants and order have issued.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN J. SEBENICK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3059) for the relief of John J. Sebenick which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, after the numerals "1947", to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John J. Sebenick, of 4722 Cleveland Avenue, Columbus, Ohio, a sum equal to his pay and allowances for 34 additional days of terminal leave as a lieutenant (junior grade) in the United States Naval Reserve, which the Board for the Correction of Naval Records found he was entitled to, in a decision dated May 23, 1947: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CREATION OF A GREENVILLE DIVISION IN NORTHERN DISTRICT OF MISSISSIPPI

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARRY C. GOAKES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3007) for the relief of Harry C. Goakes, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$3,194.61" and insert "$208.11."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MRS. DAVID MUNSON OSBORNE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6505) to legalize the entry of Mrs. David Munson Osborne (nee Janet Mary Tole), a native of New Zealand, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment on page 1, line 7, after the name "New York", to insert "upon payment of the required head tax and visa fee."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

HYMAN D. LANGER, HIS WIFE AND DAUGHTER

The bill (S. 2897) for the relief of Hyman D. Langer, his wife and daughter, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, this is the case of two aliens, man and wife, natives of Poland and citizens of Canada. The man is an organizer and business agent for the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union. It has been certified that his presence in the United States is essential from the standpoint of the garment industry, and in the interests of good labor relations in that industry. He and his wife are both of good character.

The bill is sponsored by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE]. As originally introduced, the bill also covered the minor daughter of this couple; but the daughter's name has been stricken from the bill as amended by the committee, since she was born in Canada and is therefore a nonquota immigrant, needing no special legislation.

The effect of enactment of the bill would be to let this man and wife remain in the United States as permanent residents.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2897) for the relief of Hyman D. Langer, his wife and daughter, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws Hyman D. Langer and his wife, Alta Jourard Langer, shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted for permanent residence as of the date of their last entries into the United States upon payment of the required head taxes and visa fees. Upon the enactment of this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct two numbers from the appropriate quota for the first year that such quota is available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Hyman D. Langer and Alta Jourard Langer."

SGT. JAMES C. HOLLON AND BESSIE L. HOLLON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3017) for the relief of Sgt. James C. Hollon and Bessie L. Hollon, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments on page 1, line 6, after the word "of", to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$6,500", and in line 9, after the word "of", to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$6,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, (1) to Sgt. James C. Hollon and his wife, Bessie L. Hollon, the sum of $6,500, in full satisfaction of their claim against the United States for compensation for the death of their infant son, and (2) to Bessie L. Hollon the sum of $6,000, in full satisfaction of her claim against the United States for compensation for personal injuries received by her, both such death and such injuries having resulted from the collision of a train and a jeep owned by and on an official mission for the Department of the Air Force, in which the said Bessie L. Hollon and her infant son were passengers, such collision having occurred near the Nagoya Air Force Base in Japan on January 23, 1949, due to the negligence of the driver of such jeep: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JURISDICTION TO ACT UPON THE CLAIM OF O. S. REES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3097) conferring jurisdiction on the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of O. S. Rees, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments on page 1, line 8, after the words "and the", to strike out "taking" and insert "acquisition", and in line 9, after the word "he", to insert "claims to have", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of O. S. Rees, of Jackson, Miss., against the United States for compensation for loss and damage sustained by him as a result of the destruction of his pipe line and the acquisition by the United States of land in which he claims to have held an easement for such pipeline, in connection with the construction of Foster General Hospital.

SEC. 2. Notwithstanding any statute of limitations or lapse of time, suit upon such claim may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the date of enactment of this act. In any such suit brought pursuant to this act proceedings shall be had and the liability, if any, of the United States shall be determined in accordance with the provisions of law applicable in the case of tort claims against the United States.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISOLDE BEXNER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3325) for the relief of Isolde Bexner which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment on page 1, line 6, after the name "Isolde", to strike out "Bexner" and insert "Bezner, a native and citizen of Germany, the fiancée of Lt. Jack L. White, a veteran of World War II, and a citizen of the United States, insofar as concerns any conviction or admission of the commission of a crime by her of which the Department of Justice or the Department of State has knowledge on the date of enactment hereof, and that Isolde Bezner may be eligible for a visa as a nonimmigrant temporary visitor for a period of 3 months: Provided, That the administrative authorities find that the said Isolde Bezner is coming to the United States with a bona fide intention of being married to Lt. Jack L. White, and that she is found otherwise admissible under the immigration laws. In the event the marriage between the above-named parties does not occur within 3 months after the entry of said Isolde Bezner, she shall be required to depart from the United States and upon failure to do so shall be deported in accordance with the provisions of sections 19 and 20 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (U. S. C., title 8, secs. 155 and 156). In the event the marriage between the above-named parties shall occur within 3 months after the entry of said Isolde Bezner, the Attorney General is authorized and directed to record the lawful admission for permanent residence of said Isolde Bezner, as of the date of her entry into the United States, upon the payment by her of the required visa fees and head tax."

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the immigration laws the eleventh category of section 3 of the Immigration Act of 1917, as amended (8 U. S. C. 136 (a)), shall not hereafter be held to apply to Isolde Bezner, a native and citizen of Germany, the fiancée of Lt. Jack L. White, a veteran of World World II, and a citizen of the United States, insofar as concerns any conviction or admission of the commission of a crime by her of which the Department of Justice or the Department of State has knowledge on the date of enactment hereof, and that Isolde Bezner may be eligible for a visa as a nonimmigrant temporary visitor for a period of 3 months: Provided, That the administrative authorities find that the said Isolde Bezner is coming to the United States with a bona fide intention of being married to Lt. Jack L. White, and that she is found otherwise admissible under the immigration laws. In the event the marriage between the above-named parties does not occur within 3 months after the entry of said Isolde Bezner, she shall be required to depart from the United States and upon failure to do so shall be deported in accordance with the provisions of sections 19 and 20 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (U. S. C., title 8, secs. 155 and 156). In the event the marriage between the above-named parties shall occur within 3 months after the entry of said Isolde Bezner, the Attorney General is authorized and directed to record the lawful admission for permanent resident of said Isolde Bezner, as of the date of her entry into the United States, upon the payment by her of the required visa fees and head tax.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Isolde Bezner."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 2233) for the relief of Ewa Plantation Co., a Hawaiian corporation, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

DR. AGOSTINO DELISI

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5566) for the relief of Dr. Agostino DeLisi, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments on page 1, line 5, after the word "on", to strike out "June 26, 1948" and insert "June 27, 1948", and in line 8, after the word "residence", to insert "upon payment of the required visa fee and head tax."

The bill was read the third time and passed.

DISPOSAL OF DEAD HUMAN BODIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 3658) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a code for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, regulating the disposal of dead human bodies in the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a similar House bill on the calendar, although the two bills are not identical. Without objection, the House bill will be considered.

The Secretary will state the House bill by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7881) to amend sections 675 and 676 of the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, regulating the disposal of dead human bodies in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, I move that the House bill be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and substituting therefor the language of the Senate bill (S. 3658).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and insert:

That sections 675, 675 (a), and 676 of the act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. 1296), as amended, are hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"SECS. 675 and 676. It shall be unlawful to remove, transport, inter, disinter, or otherwise dispose of the dead body, or any part thereof, of any human being, except upon a permit, duly issued by the Health Officer of the District of Columbia, or such other person or persons as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall designate, upon such terms and conditions as the Commissioners may specify. Any violation hereof shall be subject to the penalties contained in section 684 of this subchapter."

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect 60 days after enactment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 3658 is indefinitely postponed.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendment, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. LEAHY, Mr. FREAR, and Mrs. SMITH of Maine conferees on the part of the Senate.

DIRECTOR AND ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC HEALTH, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 3678) to change the designations of Health Officer and Assistant Health Officer of the District of Columbia, respectively, to Director of Public Health and Assistant Director of Public Health, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is on the calendar an identical House bill which the Secretary will state.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, the House has passed a similar bill, House bill 8709.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the House bill by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 8709) to change the designations of Health Officer and Assistant Health Officer of the District of Columbia, respectively, to Director of Public Health, and Assistant Director of Public Health.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 8709) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 3678 is indefinitely postponed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TEACHERS' LEAVE ACT OF 1949

The bill (S. 2930) to amend and clarify the District of Columbia Teachers' Leave Act of 1949, and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Reserving the right to object, may we have an explanation of this bill? We are particularly anxious to know what costs are involved.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is to eliminate certain inequities which have developed in the District of Columbia Teachers' Leave Act of 1949. I should like to answer the question of the Senator from New Jersey by saying that it is estimated that it will not cost anything. It simply liberalizes the situation in certain instances.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I thank the Senator from South Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2930), which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That the District of Columbia Teachers' Leave Act of 1949 (Public Law 353, ch. 686, 81st Cong., 1st sess.) is amended—

1. By adding at the end of section 1 thereof: "Three days of such leave may be used in any school year by a teacher or attendance officer, in his or her discretion, for the transaction of personal affairs, upon giving timely notice of intended absence."

2. By striking from section 1 thereof the language "and the total cumulation shall not exceed 10 days for temporary teachers and attendance officers", and inserting in lieu thereof "and temporary teachers and attendance officers".

3. Sections 1 and 2 are amended by striking out "60" and inserting in lieu thereof "75".

4. Section 6 is amended to add at the end thereof the following: ": Provided, That such rate of compensation shall not exceed two-thirds of one-one hundred and eightieth of the basic pay of teachers in group A, class 1 to 8. Under such rules and regulations as the Board of Education may prescribe, teachers and attendance officers, whether they have exhausted their accumulated sick leave or not, may be granted not to exceed 5 days of leave in any school year with part pay to consist of the difference between their regular pay and the pay of a substitute. Such leave may be extended to the close of the then current school year, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Board, where the teacher or attendance officer has exhausted all accrued leave and is unable, by reason of illness, to perform his or her duties."

SEC. 2. That the District of Columbia Public School Teachers' Retirement Act of January 15, 1920 (41 Stat. 388, ch. 39), as amended, is amended—

1. By deleting from section 1 of the amendment of August 7, 1946 (60 Stat. 875, ch. 779, sec. 1), the following: "No deduction shall be made from less than an entire month's salary."

2. By adding at the end of section 1 of said amendment the following: "Deductions shall be made for every month in which the salary of a teacher exceeds the amount of such deduction. Any teacher may, at his option and under such regulations and at such times as may be prescribed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, deposit with the Collector of Taxes, District of Columbia, the amount which would otherwise be deductible during any period of leave without pay, to be credited as herein provided.

"Any teacher or attendance officer granted leave without pay for any purpose shall, at the termination of such leave, be reinstated to his former position, or, if such position is no longer in existence, to an equivalent position."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, may I ask the distinguished Senator from South Carolina if the amendment changes the statement made by him?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It will not cost any additional money. It merely liberalizes the matter in regard to leave.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend and clarify the District of Columbia Teachers' Leave Act of 1949, and the District of Columbia Public School Teachers' Retirement Act of 1920, and for other purposes."

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3350) to amend the minimum wage law by extending the application of minimum wage orders to men, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 4237) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate the practice of optometry in the District of Columbia," was announced as next in order.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, I request that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

REGULATION OF BOXING CONTESTS AND EXHIBITIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7662) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate boxing contests and exhibitions in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved December 20, 1944, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That the act entitled "An act to regulate boxing contests and exhibitions in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved December 20, 1944 (58 Stat. 823), is amended by changing the second sentence of section 1 to read as follows: "No person shall be eligible for appointment to membership on the Commission unless such person at the time of appointment is, and for at least 3 years prior thereto has been, a resident of the District of Columbia: Provided, That one member may, at the time of appointment, be a resident of the metropolitan area of the city of Washington, comprised within the areas of Maryland and Virginia adjacent to the District of Columbia."

SEC. 2. Said act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 18. Notwithstanding the limitation of any other law or regulation to the contrary, any person heretofore or hereafter appointed as a member of the Commission may receive the compensation authorized by this act to be paid to such member, as well as any retired pay, retirement compensation, or annuity to which such member may be entitled on account of previous service rendered to the United States or District of Columbia governments."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHERRY. May we have an explanation of the amendment? When everything after the enacting clause is stricken out and new matter inserted, I should like to know what is in the amendment.

Mr. HUNT. I am unfamiliar with this bill except that I have a brief explanation before me which I shall be very glad to give to the Senator. The bill has two purposes. The first purpose is to allow a person serving on the boxing commission to draw an annual salary of $2,400, which commissioners receive, in addition to any retirement pay or annuity which such person now receives from the Federal or District governments. The second purpose is to provide that one member of the commission may reside within the metropolitan area of Washington, rather than to require all three members to be for at least 3 years residents of the District, as presently required by law.

Mr. WHERRY. May I ask a question of the Senator? If it is the desire of the Commissioners to appoint as commissioner a retired person who may be living outside the District but in the vicinity of the District, such a person would be barred from that appointment?

Mr. HUNT. I am sorry. I will have to ask that the question be repeated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, it is very difficult to hear. If I understand correctly, the second amendment would provide that an official retired from service and living outside the District but within the metropolitan area, would not be eligible to appointment?

Mr. HUNT. I do not think the Senator is correct in his understanding.

Mr. WHERRY. The first amendment provided that a person who is retired is eligible to appointment to the office. I could not hear the Senator when he made his explanation.

Mr. HUNT. The first part of the bill, I will say to the Senator, is to allow a person serving on the boxing commission in the District of Columbia to draw the annual salary of $2,400, which commissioners receive, in addition to any retirement pay or annuity which he may receive from the Federal Government or the District of Columbia government.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand. In other words, one who is retired, if he receives the appointment, can draw the additional pay.

Mr. HUNT. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. What is the second part?

Mr. HUNT. The second purpose is to permit one member of the commission to reside within the metropolitan area of Washington, instead of requiring all three members to be and to have been District residents, as required in the present law.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator. I have no objection to the amendment. I think the substantive law is all right. I suppose the law is being changed to meet new conditions so that a person who has been retired can serve on the Commission.

Mr. HUNT. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. HUNT subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we revert to order No. 1910, H. R. 7662, in order that I may ask for a conference, and for the appointment of conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair). Is there objection to returning to the consideration of H. R. 7662, which has already been passed, for the purpose of permitting the Senator to request a conference and suggest the appointment of conferees? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendment to the bill (H. R. 7662), ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Chair appointed Mr. LEAHY, Mr. FREAR, and Mrs. SMITH of Maine conferees on the part of the Senate.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2923) to authorize the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to acquire or construct, with its own funds, a building within the District of Columbia suitable for the Corporation, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I object.

Mr. LANGER. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

INCORPORATION OF THE FUTURE FARMERS OF AMERICA

SEC. 14. (a) The financial transactions of the corporation for each fiscal year ending June 30 shall be audited by an independent certified public accountant in accordance with the principles and procedures applicable to commercial corporate transactions and under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Comptroller General of the United States. The audit shall be conducted at the place or places where the accounts of the corporation are normally kept. All books, accounts, financial records, reports, files, and all other papers, things, or property belonging to or in use by the corporation and necessary to facilitate the audit shall be made available to the person or persons conducting the audit; and full facilities for verifying transactions with the balances or securities held by depositories, fiscal agents, and custodians shall be afforded to such person or persons.

(b) A complete statement of each annual audit, verified by the certified public accountant by whom the audit is made, shall be filed annually with the Comptroller General, in accordance with such regulations and upon such form as he shall prescribe.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 14. (a) The financial transactions shall be audited annually by an independent certified public accountant in accordance with the principles and procedures applicable to commercial corporate transactions. The audit shall be conducted at the place or places where the accounts of the corporation are normally kept. All books, accounts, financial records, reports, files, and all other papers, things, or property belonging to or in use by the corporation and necessary to facilitate the audit shall be made available to the person or persons conducting the audit; and full facilities for verifying transactions with the balances or securities held by depositors, fiscal agents, and custodians shall be afforded to such person or persons.

(b) A report of such audit shall be made by the corporation to the Congress not later than January 15 of each year. The report shall set forth the scope of the audit and shall include a verification by the person or persons conducting the audit of statements of (1) assets and liabilities, (2) capital and surplus or deficit, (3) surplus or deficit analysis, (4) income and expense, and (5) sources and application of funds.

On page 13, line 4, after the word "corporation", to strike out "to" and insert "administer or"; in line 13, after the word "education", to strike out "and local school districts"; and in the same line, after the word "the", to strike out "administration" and insert "promotion", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following persons: William T. Spanton, Washington, D. C.; Dudley M. Clements, College Park, Md.; Herbert B. Swanson, Washington, D. C.; R. Edward Naugher, Arlington, Va.; Elmer J. Johnson, Arlington, Va.; Rodolph D. Anderson, Columbia, S. C.; Earl H. Little, Concord, N. H.; Bert L. Brown, Olympia, Wash.; and Ralph A. Howard, Columbus, Ohio, are hereby created a body corporate by the name of Future Farmers of America (hereinafter referred to as the "corporation") and by such name shall be known and have perpetual succession and the powers and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. The persons named in the first section of this act are authorized to meet to complete the organization of the corporation by the selection of officers, the adoption of regulations and bylaws, and the doing of such other acts as may be necessary for such purpose.

SEC. 3. The objects and purposes of the corporation shall be—

(1) to create, foster, and assist subsidiary chapters composed of students and former students of vocational agriculture in public schools qualifying for Federal reimbursement under the Smith-Hughes Vocational Education Act or the Vocational Education Act of 1946 (Public Law 347, 64th Cong., and Public Law 56, 79th Cong.), and associations of such chapters in the several States and Territories of the United States;

(2) to develop character, train for useful citizenship, and foster patriotism, and thereby to develop competent, aggressive rural and agricultural leadership;

(3) to create and nurture a love of country life by encouraging members to improve the farm home and its surroundings, to develop organized rural recreational activities, and to create more interest in the intelligent choice of farming occupations;

(4) to encourage the practice of thrift;

(5) to procure for and distribute to State associations, local chapters, and members all official Future Farmers of America supplies and equipment;

(6) to publish an official magazine and other publications for the members of the corporation;

(7) to strengthen the confidence of farm boys and young men in themselves and their work, to encourage members in the development of individual farming programs, and to promote their permanent establishment in farming by (a) encouraging improvement in scholarship; (b) providing prizes and awards to deserving students who have achieved distinction in vocational agriculture, including farm mechanics activities on a local, State, or national basis; and (c) assisting financially, through loans or grants, deserving students in all-day vocational agriculture classes and young farmers under 30 years of age who were former students in all-day vocational agriculture classes in becoming satisfactorily established in a farming occupation; and

(8) to cooperate with others, including State boards for vocational education, in accomplishing the above purposes; and to engage in such other activities, consistent with the foregoing purposes, determined by the governing body to be for the best interests of the corporation.

SEC. 4. The corporation shall have power—

(1) to sue and be sued, complain, and defend in any court of competent jurisdiction;

(2) to adopt, use, and alter a corporate seal;

(3) to choose such officers, managers, agents, and employees as the business of the corporation may require;

(4) to adopt and alter bylaws and regulations, not inconsistent with the laws of the United States or any State in which such corporation is to operate, for the management of its property and the regulation of its affairs, including the establishment and maintenance of local chapters and State associations of chapters;

(5) to contract and be contracted with;

(6) To take and hold by lease, gift, purchase, grant, devise, or bequest any property, real or personal, necessary for attaining the objects and accomplishing the purposes of the corporation, subject to applicable provisions of law of any State (A) governing the amount or kind of real and personal property which may be held by, or (B) otherwise limiting or controlling the ownership of real and personal property by, a corporation operating in such State;

(7) to transfer and convey real or personal property;

(8) to borrow money for the purposes of the corporation, issue bonds therefor, and secure the same by mortgage, subject to all applicable provisions of Federal or State law;

(9) to use the corporate funds to give prizes, awards, loans, and grants to deserving students and young farmers for the purposes set forth in section 3;

(10) to publish a magazine and other publications;

(11) to procure for and distribute to State associations, local chapters, and members all official Future Farmers of America supplies and equipment;

(12) to adopt emblems and badges; and

(13) to do any and all acts and things necessary and proper to carry out the objects and purposes of the corporation.

SEC. 5. The headquarters and principal offices of the corporation shall be located in the District of Columbia, but the activities of the corporation shall not be confined to that place but may be conducted throughout the various States, Territories, and possessions of the United States. The corporation shall maintain at all times in the District of Columbia a designated agent authorized to accept service of process for the corporation, such designation to be filed in the office of the clerk of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. Notice to or service upon such agent, or mailed to the business address of such agent, shall be deemed sufficient notice or service upon the corporation.

SEC. 6. Eligibility for membership in the corporation and the rights and privileges of members shall, except as provided in this act, be determined according to the bylaws of the corporation. In the conduct of official business of any local chapter each member shall have one vote. In the conduct of the official business of any State association each qualified delegate of a local chapter shall have one vote.

SEC. 7. (a) The national officers of the corporation shall be a student president, four student vice presidents (one from each of four regions of the United States established in the bylaws for purposes of administration of the corporation), a student secretary, an executive secretary, a treasurer, and a national advisor.

(b) The national students officers of the corporation shall comprise a board of student officers. It shall be the duty of such board to advise and make recommendations to the board of directors with respect to the conduct of the activities and business of the corporation.

(c) The national officers of the corporation shall be elected annually by a majority vote of the delegates assembled in the annual national convention from among qualified members of the corporation, except that the national advisor shall be the Chief of the Agricultural Education Service, Office of Education, Federal Security Agency, the executive secretary shall be a member of that Service, and the treasurer shall be an employee or member of a State agency that directs or supervises a State program of agricultural education under the provisions of the Smith-Hughes Vocational Education Act or the Vocational Education Act of 1946 (Public Law 347, 64th Cong., and Public Law 586, 79th Cong.).

(d) In the conduct of the business of the annual national convention each qualified delegate shall have one vote.

SEC. 8. (a) The governing body of the corporation, which shall exercise the powers herein granted to the corporation, shall be a board of directors composed of: (1) the Chief of the Agricultural Education Service, Office of Education, Federal Security Agency, who shall act as chairman; (2) four staff members in the Agricultural Education Service, Office of Education, Federal Security Agency; and (3) four State supervisors of agricultural education.

(b) The terms of office of members of the board and the method of selection of such members, other than ex officio members, shall be prescribed by the bylaws of the corporation.

(c) The board shall meet at least once each year at such time and place as may be prescribed by the bylaws. The annual report of the board shall be presented at such meeting. Special meetings of the board may be called at any time by the chairman.

(d) The board may designate the chairman and two members of his staff as a governing committee which, when the board is not in session, shall have and exercise the powers of the board subject to its direction and have the power to authorize the seal of the corporation to be affixed to all papers which may require it.

(e) The board of directors which shall serve until the first board is selected as provided in this act shall be composed of the nine persons named in the first section of this act.

SEC. 9. (a) No part of the income or assets of the corporation shall inure to any member, officer, or director, or be distributable to any such person except upon dissolution and final liquidation of the corporation as provided in section 15 of this act.

(b) The corporation shall not make loans to its officers, directors, or employees. Any director who votes for or assents to the making of a loan to an officer, director, or employee of the corporation, and any officer who participates in the making of such a loan shall be jointly and severally liable to the corporation for the amount of such loan until the repayment thereof.

(c) This section shall not preclude prizes, awards, grants, or loans to student officers and members meeting the criteria established by the board of directors for selecting recipients of such benefits.

SEC. 10. The corporation, and its members, officers, and directors, as such, shall not contribute to or otherwise support or assist any political party or candidate for elective public office.

SEC. 11. The corporation shall be liable for the acts of its officers and agents when acting within the scope of their authority.

SEC. 12. The corporation shall have no power to issue any shares or stock, or to declare or pay any dividends, its objects and purposes being solely educational.

SEC. 13. The corporation shall keep correct and complete books and records of account and shall also keep minutes of the proceedings of its members, the board of directors, and committees having any authority under the board of directors; and it shall also keep at its principal office a record of the names and addresses of its members entitled to vote. All books and records of the corporation may be inspected by any member or his agent or attorney at any reasonable time.

SEC. 14. (a) The financial transactions shall be audited annually by an independent certified public accountant in accordance with the principles and procedures applicable to commercial corporate transactions. The audit shall be conducted at the place or places where the accounts of the corporation are normally kept. All books, accounts, financial records, reports, files, and all other papers, things, or property belonging to or in use by the corporation and necessary to facilitate the audit shall be made available to the person or persons conducting the audit; and full facilities for verifying transactions with the balances or securities held by depositors, fiscal agents, and custodians shall be afforded to such person or persons.

(b) A report of such audit shall be made by the corporation to the Congress not later than January 15 of each year. The report shall set forth the scope of the audit and shall include a verification by the person or persons conducting the audit of statements of (1) assets and liabilities, (2) capital and surplus or deficit, (3) surplus or deficit analysis, (4) income and expense, and (5) sources and application of funds.

SEC. 15. Upon final dissolution or liquidation of the corporation and after the discharge or satisfaction of all outstanding obligations and liabilities, the remaining assets of the corporation shall be used by the board of directors for the benefit of students of vocational agriculture, or be transferred to some recognized educational foundation.

SEC. 16. The corporation, and its duly authorized chapters and associations of chapters, shall have the sole and exclusive right to use the name of Future Farmers of America and the initials FFA as representing an agricultural membership organization and such seals, emblems, and badges as the corporation may lawfully adopt.

SEC. 17. As a condition precedent to exercise of any power or privilege granted to the corporation under this act, the corporation shall file in the Office of the Secretary of State, or similar officer, in each State and in each Territory or possession of the United States in which subordinate associations or chapters are organized the name, and post office address of an authorized agent in such State, Territory, or possession upon whom legal process or demands against the corporation may be served.

SEC. 18. The United States Commissioner of Education, with the approval of the Federal Security Administrator, is authorized to make available personnel, services, and facilities of the Office of Education requested by the board of directors of the corporation administer or assist in the administration of the business and activities of the corporation. The personnel of the Office of Education shall not receive any compensation from the corporation for their services, except that travel and other legitimate expenses as defined by the Commissioner of Education and approved by the board of directors of the corporation may be paid. The Commissioner, with the approval of the Administrator, is also authorized to cooperate with the State boards for vocational education to assist in the promotion of the activities of the corporation.

SEC. 19. The corporation may acquire the assets of the Future Farmers of America, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Virginia, and of the Future Farmers of America Foundation, Inc., a corporation organized under the laws of the District of Columbia, upon discharging or satisfactorily providing for the payment and discharge of all of the liabilities of such corporations.

SEC. 20. The provisions of this act shall take effect on the filing, in the office of the clerk of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia of affidavits signed by the incorporators named in the first section of this act to the effect that the Virginia corporation known as the Future Farmers of America has been dissolved in accordance with law, but only if such affidavits are filed within 1 year from the date of enactment of this act.

SEC. 21. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

YOUNG AMERICAN MEDAL FOR BRAVERY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 157) authorizing the Attorney General of the United States to recognize and to award to outstanding courageous young Americans a medal for heroism known as the Young American Medal for Bravery, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with amendments on page 1, line 3, after the word "the", to strike out "Attorney General" and insert "Department of Justice;" on line 4, to strike out "he" and insert "it"; on line 6, after "thereof" to strike out "and awarding the same" and insert "so that an award shall be made"; on page 2 on line 4, to strike out "Attorney General" and insert "Department of Justice"; in line 7, to strike out "Attorney General" and insert "said Department of Justice"; on line 16, to strike out "Attorney General" and insert "President of the United States"; on page 3, line 1, to insert "Provided, That there shall not be awarded in any one calendar year in excess of four such medals, to wit, two for bravery and two for character and service, as herein authorized"; in line 5, to strike out "Attorney General" and insert "Department of Justice"; in line 8, to strike out "he" and insert "the President"; in line 10, to strike out "Attorney General Department of Justice"; and in line 11, to strike out "his" and insert "its."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I offer an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey offers an amendment which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, line 13, after the word "authorized" it is propose to insert the words "in a sum not to exceed $5,000 per annum."

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nevada whether or not he has offered for the RECORD, or intends to offer for the RECORD, a copy of a letter dated July 12, 1950, from the Honorable Peyton Ford, Deputy Attorney General, to the Honorable FRANK L. CHELF, bearing on the cost of this project?

Mr. McCARRAN. I have not offered it.

Mr. DONNELL. Would the Senator have any objection to my offering it?

Mr. McCARRAN. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JULY 12, 1950.

Hon. FRANK L. CHELF,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: This will refer to your informal request for the views of the Department of Justice regarding the cost of a program such as that contemplated by H. R. 157, a bill to provide for a Young American Medal for Bravery, and a Young American Medal for Service.

Appropriate recognition of outstanding evidence of courage, bravery, character, and service on the part of young Americans will serve to reduce the incidence of juvenile delinquency and to foster the spiritual, moral, physical, and mental improvement of young people, for which reasons the purposes of the bill are most commendable.

The cost of the program contemplated by the bill as reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee would appear to be nominal when compared with its basic value. As previously indicated to that committee in this Department's report of February 3 of this year, the major items of cost would be round-trip transportation to Washington (assuming that the awards would be made in Washington) for the four award winners and their guardians, and their maintenance during their visit in this city. In view of the fact that there will be but four award winners, the transportation cost for the party of eight, should all of the award winners come from the west coast (which is unlikely) and be accompanied by guardians, would be approximately $2,500. Adding to this a maximum maintenance cost of $200 per day for the party while in Washington, and assuming they remain a full week, the total cost for these two biggest items of expense is calculated not to exceed $3,900.

Of course, it is also contemplated that the selection of the award winners from among those nominated will entail some cost. However, this cost can be minimized by arranging for eliminations within the States and the forwarding of the names of perhaps two nominees from each State to compete for final selection.

Yours sincerely,

PEYTON FORD,
Deputy Attorney General.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act authorizing the Department of Justice of the United States to recognize and to award to outstanding courageous young Americans a medal for heroism known as the Young American Medal for Bravery, and for other purposes."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 3419) to amend the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946 was announced as next in order.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

SPICER ICE & COAL CO.

The bill (S. 619) for the relief of the Spicer Ice & Coal Co. was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Mr. HENDRICKSON subsequently said: Mr. President, what was the action on calendar No. 1920, Senate bill 619?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair). The bill was passed.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I did not hear it called. I should like to ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the Senate reconsider the vote whereby Senate bill 619 was passed. Is there objection?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I shall certainly not make any objection to the reconsideration of the vote, but shortly after the bill was reached I called the attention of the Chair to the bill and asked what had become of it. I was advised that it had passed while I was in conversation with someone. May we take it up now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the reconsideration of the vote whereby the bill was passed? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered. Is there objection to returning to that number on the calendar? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state the bill by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 619) for the relief of the Spicer Ice & Coal Co.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, may we have a thorough explanation of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey asks for an explanation.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, this is the case of a coal company in Connecticut which had a contract to supply coal to the United States Coast Guard Academy. The contract provided for a stipulated price, which was to be adjusted up or down on each unit if the OPA maximum price ceiling was changed. The contract also provided for adjustment up or down if freight costs increased or decreased.

While it was obviously the intention of the contract to save this company from any loss on the coal it supplied to the Coast Guard Academy, in the event freight costs went up, and the contract took care of the contingency of any change in OPA price ceilings, the contract was silent on what would happen in the event the OPA Act expired. The OPA Act did expire, and freight rates were increased, causing a loss to this company.

The Justice Department and the Treasury Department have reported adversely on this bill, which was thereupon postponed indefinitely by the Judiciary Committee. Subsequently, at the request of interested Senators, the bill was ordered reconsidered and was assigned to a subcommittee. In passing, let me say the request for reconsideration did not come from the sponsor of the bill, since the bill was sponsored by former Senator Baldwin, of Connecticut, but the committee is informed that former Senator Baldwin is still interested in the proposed legislation and would like to see the bill passed.

The bill was considered by a subcommittee composed of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WITHERS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL]. This subcommittee reports the bill favorably to the full committee, and the full committee accepted the subcommittee's report.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Nevada tell us how the committee arrived at the amount of damages in this case?

Mr. McCARRAN. It was the amount of the loss actually sustained.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Spicer Ice & Coal Co., Groton, Conn., the sum of $3,354.56, in full satisfaction of the claim of such company against the United States for an amount of additional compensation under contracts numbered T44 cg–10 and T44 cg–11 equal to the difference between the contract prices at which coal was delivered by such company under such contracts to the Coast Guard Academy, New London, Conn., and the prices which such firm would have bid on such contracts if it had anticipated the termination of legislation under which it received from the Office of Price Administration, during a portion of the time in which deliveries were made under such contracts, a compensatory adjustment to assist such company in defraying the payment of freight charges upon coal so delivered: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 8782) to continue a system of nurseries and nursery schools for the day care of school-age and under school-age children in the District of Columbia through June 30, 1951, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A similar Senate bill has been enacted into law. House bill 8782 will be postponed indefinitely.

PAYMENT AND COLLECTION OF WAGES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3308) to provide for the payment and collection of wages in the District of Columbia, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

DEFINITIONS

SECTION 1. Whenever used in this act, (a) "employer" includes every individual, partnership, firm, association, corporation, the legal representative of a deceased individual, or the receiver, trustee, or successor of an individual, firm, partnership, association, or corporation, employing any person in the District of Columbia: Provided, That the word "employer" shall not include the Government of the United States, the government of the District of Columbia, or any agency of either of said governments, or any employer subject to the Railway Labor Act.

(b) "Employee" shall include any person suffered or permitted to work by an employer, other than corporate officers or executives.

(c) "Wages" means monetary compensation after lawful deductions, owned by an employer for labor or services rendered, whether the amount is determined on a time, task, piece, commission, or other basis of calculation.

(d) "Board" means the Minimum Wage and Industrial Safety Board of the District of Columbia.

(e) "Working day" means any day exclusive of Saturdays, Sundays, or legal holidays.

SEMIMONTHLY PAYDAY

SEC. 2. Every employer shall pay all wages earned to his employees at least twice during each calendar month, on regular paydays designated in advance by the employer: Provided, however, That an interval of not more than five working days may elapse between the end of the pay period covered and the regular payday designated by the employer, except where a different period is specified in a collective agreement between an employer and a bona fide labor organization. Wages shall be paid on designated paydays in lawful money of the United States, or checks on banks payable upon demand by the bank upon which drawn.

POSTING AND NOTIFICATION

SEC. 3. (a) Every employer employing more than eight employees shall notify each of his employees in writing at the time of hiring of the rate of pay, of the day, hour, and place of payment, and of any changes in arrangements prior to the time of such change; or such notice may be given by posting a notice on his premises in a place accessible to his employees.

EMPLOYEES WHO ARE SEPARATED FROM THE PAYROLL BEFORE A REGULAR PAYDAY

SEC. 4. Unless otherwise specified in a collective agreement between an employer and a bona fide union representing his employees—

(a) Whenever an employer discharges an employee, the employer shall pay the employee's wages earned not later than the working day following such discharge.

(b) Whenever an employee (not having a written contract of employment for a period in excess of 30 days) quits or resigns, the employer shall pay the employee's wages due within three working days thereafter, unless such employee shall have given previous notice of at least three working days of intention to quit, in which event the employer shall pay such wages earned at the time of quitting.

(c) When work of an employee is suspended as a result of a labor dispute, the employer shall pay to such employee not later than the next regular payday, designated under section 2 of this act, wages earned at the time of suspension.

(d) If an employer fails to pay an employee wages earned as required under subsections (a), (b), and (c) of this section, such employer shall pay, or be additionally liable to, the employee, as liquidated damages, 10 percent of the unpaid wages for each working day during which such failure shall continue after the day upon which payment is hereunder required; or an amount equal to the unpaid wages, whichever is smaller: Provided, however, That for the purpose of such liquidated damages such failure shall not be deemed to continue after the date of the filing of a petition in bankruptcy with respect to the employer if he thereafter shall have been adjudicated bankrupt upon such petition.

UNCONDITIONAL PAYMENT OF WAGES CONCEDED TO BE DUE

SEC. 5. In case of a bona fide dispute concerning the amount of wages due, the employer shall give written notice to the employee of the amount of wages which he concedes to be due, and shall pay such amount, without condition, within the time required by sections 2 and 4 of this act: Provided, however, That acceptance by the employee of any payment made hereunder shall not constitute a release as to the balance of his claim. Payment in accordance with this section shall constitute payment for the purposes of complying with sections 2 and 4 of this act, only if there exists a bona fide dispute concerning the amount of wages due.

PROVISIONS OF LAW MAY NOT BE WAIVED BY AGREEMENT

SEC. 6. Except as herein provided, no provision of this act shall in any way be contravened or set aside by private agreement.

ENFORCEMENT, RECORDS, AND SUEPENAS

SEC. 7. (a) The Board shall enforce and administer the provisions of this act and the Board or an authorized representative of the Board, acting under its direction, may hold hearings and otherwise investigate any violations of this act and institute actions for penalties provided hereunder.

(b) The Board or its authorized representatives shall have power to administer oaths and examine witnesses under oath, issue subpenas, compel the attendance of witnesses, and the production of papers, books, accounts, records, payrolls, documents, and testimony, and to take depositions and affidavits in any proceedings before it.

(c) In case of failure of any person to comply with any subpena lawfully issued, or on the refusal of any witness to testify to any matter regarding which he may be lawfully interrogated, it shall be the duty of the municipal court of the District of Columbia, or the judge thereof, on application by the Board, to compel obedience by attachment proceedings for contempt, as in the case of disobedience of the requirements of a subpena issued from such court or a refusal to testify therein.

PENALTIES

SEC. 8. Any employer who, having the ability to pay, willfully violates any provisions of section 2 or section 4 of this act or who fails to comply with any other provisions of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, for each separate offense, or by imprisonment of not less than 3 days, or more than 30 days.

EMPLOYEES' REMEDIES

SEC. 9. (a) Action by an employee to recover unpaid wages and liquidated damages may be maintained in any court of competent jurisdiction by any one or more employees for and in behalf of himself or themselves and other employees similarly situated, or such employee or employees may designate an agent or representative to maintain such action for and on behalf of all employees similarly situated. Any employee, or his representative, shall have the power to settle and adjust his claim for unpaid wages. Whenever the Board determines that wages have not been paid, as herein provided and that such unpaid wages constitute an enforceable claim, the Board may, upon the request of the employee, take an assignment in trust for the assigning employee of such wages, not to exceed $200 in the case of one employee, and of any claim for liquidated damages, without being bound by any of the technical rules respecting the validity of any such assignments, may bring any appropriate legal action necessary to collect such claim and may join in one proceeding or action such claims against the same employer as the Board deems appropriate. Upon any such assignment the Board shall have power to settle and adjust any such claim or claims on such terms as it may deem just.

(b) The court in any action brought under this section shall, in addition to any judgment awarded to the plaintiff or plaintiffs, allow costs of the action, including costs or fees of any nature, and reasonable attorney's fees, to be paid by the defendant. Such attorney's fees in the case of actions brought under this subsection by the Board shall be remitted by the Board to the Collector of Taxes of the District of Columbia. The Board shall not be required to pay the filing fee or other costs or fees of any nature or to file bond or other security of any nature in connection with any action or proceeding under this act.

SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

SEC. 10. If any provisions of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3257) to amend the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act to provide for unemployment compensation in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BOARD OF REGISTRATION FOR PROFESSIONAL ENGINEERS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 3555) defining and regulating the practice of the profession of engineering and creating a Board of Registration for Professional Engineers in the District of Columbia was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.,

SECTION 1. Short title: This act shall be known and may be cited as the "Professional Engineers' Registration Act."

SEC. 2. Definitions: As used in this act—

(a) The term "practice of engineering" shall mean the performance of any professional service or creative work requiring engineering education, training and experience, and the application of special knowledge of the mathematical, physical, and engineering sciences to such professional services or creative work as consultation, investigation, evaluation, planning, design, and supervision of construction for the purpose of assuring compliance with specifications and design, in connection with the utilization of the forces, energies, and materials of nature in the development, production, and functioning of engineering processes, apparatus, machines, equipment, facilities, structures, works, or utilities, or any combinations or aggregations thereof employed in or devoted to public or private enterprises or uses. The term "practice of engineering" comprehends the practice of those branches of engineering, the pursuit of any of which affects the safety of life, health or property, or the public welfare. Said practice includes the doing of such architectural work as is incidental to the practice of engineering.

(b) The term "professional engineer" shall mean a person who, by reason of his special knowledge of the mathematical and physical sciences and the principles and methods of engineering analysis and design, customarily acquired by a prolonged course of specialized intellectual instruction and study and practical experience, is qualified to engage in the practice of engineering as attested by his certificate of registration as a professional engineer.

(c) The term "engineer-in-training" shall mean a candidate for registration as a professional engineer who has been granted a certificate as an engineer-in-training after successfully passing the first stage of the prescribed examination in fundamental engineering subjects, and who, upon completion of the requisite years of training and experience in engineering under the supervision of a professional engineer or similarly qualified engineer and satisfactory to the Board, shall be eligible for the second stage of the prescribed examination for registration as a professional engineer.

(d) The term "responsible charge" shall mean such degree of competence and accountability gained by education, training, and experience in engineering of a grade and character sufficient to qualify an individual to engage personally and independently in and be entrusted with the work involved in the practice of engineering.

(e) The term "institution" shall mean a school, college, university, department of a university, or other educational institution granting baccalaureate degrees in engineering, reputable, and in good standing in accordance with the rules prescribed by the Board.

(f) The term "Board" shall mean the District of Columbia Board of Registration for Professional Engineers.

(g) The term "Commissioners" shall mean the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. Practice of engineering declared to be subject to regulation: In order to safeguard life, health, and property and promote the public welfare, the practice of engineering in the District of Columbia is hereby declared to be subject to regulation in the public interest. It is further declared to be a matter of public interest and concern that the profession of engineering merit and receive the confidence of the public and that only qualified persons be permitted to engage in the practice of engineering. All provisions of this act relating to the practice of engineering shall be construed in accordance with this declaration of policy.

SEC. 4. Practice of engineering without registration prohibited: Any person engaged in or offering to engage in the practice of engineering in the District of Columbia shall submit evidence that he is qualified to practice and shall be registered as hereinafter provided; and it shall be unlawful for any person to engage or offer to engage in the practice of engineering in the District of Columbia, or by verbal claim, sign, advertisement, letterhead, card or in any other way, represent himself to be a professional engineer, or through the use of the title including the word "engineer" or words of like import, or any other title, imply that he is a professional engineer, unless such person is registered under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. Board of Registration; appointment of members; qualifications; terms; removal or members: There is hereby created the District of Columbia Board of Registration for Professional Engineers, whose duty it shall be to administer the provisions of this act. The Board shall consist of five members who shall be appointed by the Commissioners. Each appointment to the first Board shall be from a list of three eligibles submitted by the representative organizations of the engineering profession in the District of Columbia. A person to be eligible for appointment to the Board shall be a citizen of the United States, shall have been engaged in the practice of engineering for 12 or more years, of which at least 5 years shall have been in responsible charge of important engineering work, and at the time of appointment shall have been actively engaged in the practice of engineering in the District of Columbia for a period of at least 5 years next preceding this appointment. The Board shall at all times include one representative for each of the chemical, civil, electrical, and mechanical branches of engineering. The members of the first Board shall be appointed within 3 months after the effective date of this act to serve for the following terms: One member for 1 year, one member for 2 years, one member for 3 years, one member for 4 years, and one member for 5 years from the date of their appointment, or until their successors are duly appointed and qualified. Each member of the Board shall receive a certificate of his appointment from the Commissioners, and before beginning his term of office shall file with the Secretary of the Board of Commissioners his written oath for the faithful discharge of his official duty. Each member of the Board first appointed hereunder shall be registered as a professional engineer under this act. On the expiration of the term of any member of the Board, the Commissioners shall appoint for a term of 5 years a professional engineer to take the place of the member whose term on said Board is about to expire. Each member shall hold office until the expiration of the term for which such member is appointed or until a successor shall have been duly appointed and shall have qualified. The Commissioners may remove any member of the Board for incompetancy, misconduct, neglect of duty, or for any sufficient cause. An appointment to fill an unexpired term on the Board shall be made within 3 months after the vacancy occurs, and shall be for the period of such unexpired term.

SEC. 6. Compensation of members of board: Each member of the Board shall be entitled to receive such reasonable compensation for his services as may be determined by the Commissioners not to exceed $25 per day for each day he may be actually engaged upon business pertaining to his official duties as such Board member.

SEC. 7. Board meetings and organizations: The Board shall hold a meeting within 10 days after its members are first appointed and thereafter shall hold at least two regular meetings each year. The Board shall elect annually from its members at least the following officers: A chairman and a secretary-treasurer. A quorum of the Board shall consist of not less than three members, and no action shall be taken without three members in accord.

SEC. 8. General powers of Board: The Board shall have power:

(a) Approval of institutions: To investigate and to approve those institutions that provide and maintain satisfactory standards for the education of students desiring to engage in the practice of engineering.

(b) Registration of professional engineers: To register as a professional engineer any person of good character and repute who is a citizen of the United States, at least 25 years of age, and who speaks and writes the English language, if such person—

(1) holds a license or certificate of registration to engage in the practice of engineering issued to him by proper authority of a State or Territory of the United States in which the requirements and qualifications for obtaining such license or certificate of registration are reasonably equivalent in the opinion of the Board to the standards set forth in this act. A person may be registered under this subdivision without examination; or

(2) holds a certificate of qualification issued by the National Bureau of Engineering Registration of the National Council of State Boards of Engineering Examiners: Provided, however, That the requirements and qualifications of said body for obtaining such certificate are reasonably equivalent, in the opinion of the Board, to the standards set forth in this act. A person may be registered under the provisions of this subdivision without examination; or

(3) has had 4 or more years' experience in engineering work of a grade or character satisfactory to the Board, and indicating that he is qualified to assume responsible charge of the work involved in the practice of engineering and either holds a certificate as an engineer-in-training issued to him by the Board or by proper authority of a State or Territory in which the requirements and qualifications of said bodies for obtaining such certificate are reasonably equivalent, in the opinion of the Board, to the standards set forth in this act, or is a graduate in engineering from an institution having a course in engineering of 4 or more years, and who, in either event, successfully passes a written, or written and oral, examination prescribed by the Board of engineering subjects. In the case of the examination of an engineering-in-training, his examination shall be directed and limited to those matters which will test the applicant's ability to apply the principles of engineering to the actual practice of engineering. In the case of an applicant who is not an engineer-in-training, the examination shall be for the purpose of testing the applicant's knowledge of fundamental engineering subjects, including mathematics and the physical sciences, and those matters which will test the applicant's ability to apply the principles of engineering to the actual practice of engineering; or

(4) has completed an approved secondary-school course of study or equivalent and has had 12 or more years of combined education and experience in engineering of a grade and character satisfactory to the Board and indicating that he is qualified to assume responsible charge of the work involved in the practice of engineering, and who successfully passes a written, or written and oral, examination prescribed by the Board for the purpose of testing the applicant's knowledge of fundamental engineering subjects, including mathematics and the physical sciences, and those matters which will test the applicant's ability to apply the principles of engineering to the actual practice of engineering; or

(5) submits evidence that he is an engineer of established and recognized standing in the engineering profession and that he has been lawfully engaged in the practice of engineering for 12 or more years, of which at least 5 years shall have been in responsible charge of important engineering work of a grade and character satisfactory to the Board. A person may be registered under this subdivision without examination; or

(6) submits evidence that he was a resident of the District of Columbia, or that he was engaged in the practice of engineering in the District of Columbia, prior to the date this act was approved and for 1 year immediately preceding the date of his application, and submits evidence of experience in engineering, of a grade and character satisfactory to the Board, indicating that he is qualified to assume responsible charge of the work involved in the practice of engineering. Registration shall not be granted under the provisions of this subdivision unless the application therefor is filed with the Board within 1 year after the date of enactment of this act. A person may be registered under this subdivision without examination.

The requirement of this subsection of residence or practice of engineering in the District of Columbia for 1 year immediately preceding the date of application shall not be applied to applicants who were on active duty in the armed forces of the United States during such year, and who entered on such duty after October 16, 1940, but any such applicant for license under this subsection must have been a resident or engaged in the practice of engineering in the District of Columbia for at least 1 year prior to the effective date of this act.

(c) Certification of engineers-in-training: To provide for and to regulate the certification and to certify as an engineer-in-training any person of good character and repute who is a citizen of the United States, at least 21 years of age or has graduated from an insitution, and who speaks and writes the English language, if such person—

(1) is a graduate in engineering from an institution having a course in engineering of 4 or more years and who successfully passes a written, or written and oral, examination prescribed by the Board for the purpose of testing the applicant's knowledge of fundamental engineering subjects, including mathematics and the physical sciences. A person may be certified as an engineer-in-training under this subdivision without a written, or written and oral, examination: Provided, however, That the application therefor is filed with the Board within 1 year after enactment of this act; or

(2) has completed an approved secondary-school course of study or equivalent, and has had eight or more years of combined education, training, and experience in engineering, of a grade and character satisfactory to the Board, and who successfully passes a written, or written and oral, examination prescribed by the Board for the purpose of testing the applicant's knowledge of fundamental engineering subjects, including mathematics and the physical sciences.

(d) Registration of noncitizen professional engineers: To register as a professional engineer any person who is not a citizen of the United States, who is of good character and repute, at least 25 years of age, and speaks and writes the English language, if such person submits evidence, of a grade and character satisfactory to the Board, that he is an engineer of established and recognized standing in the profession of engineering in his own country, and who submits certification as to character and qualifications from at least two professional engineers of the District of Columbia. Such registration shall entitle the holder to engage in the practice of engineering only for the duration of and in connection with a specific project for which it was granted, and shall be subject to annual renewal and to suspension or revocation as registration granted as otherwise provided in this act. Engineers to whom such temporary registration has been granted shall be separately listed in the roster.

(e) Application form: To require all candidates for registration as professional engineers to file with the secretary-treasurer of the Board a written application on a prescribed form and accompanied by the required fee. Such application shall contain statements made under oath, showing the applicant's education, detailed summary of his experience in engineering work, and the general field or fields of engineering in which he has his principal activity, and shall contain not less than five references, of whom three or more shall be engineers having personal knowledge of his engineering training and experience.

(f) Investigation of applications; determination of qualification and competency of applicants: To investigate the allegations contained in any application for registration as a professional engineer in order to determine the truth of such allegations, and to determine the competency of any person applying for a registration to assume responsible charge of the work involved in the practice of engineering, such competency to be determined by the grade and character of the engineering work actually performed. Any person having the necessary qualifications prescribed in this act to entitle him to registration or certification shall be eligible therefor, although he may not be practicing his profession at the time of making his application. Evaluation of experience in engineering shall be based upon the applicant's knowledge of the fundamental engineering subjects, which shall be broad in scope and of a nature to develop and mature the applicant's engineering knowledge and judgment. In considering the qualifications of an applicant who has graduated in engineering from an approved institution; each year, but not exceeding 2 years, of successful postgraduate study in engineering, and each scholastic year, in excess of 4, of an approved 5- or 6-year engineering curriculum, and each year of teaching engineering subjects, in an approved institution may be considered as equivalent to 1 year of experience in engineering. In considering the qualifications of an applicant who is an undergraduate in engineering, or who has graduated in a curriculum other than engineering, from an approved institution; each equivalent year of approved engineering education, as determined by evaluation by the Board of the educational records submitted, may be considered as equivalent to 2 years of combined education and experience in engineering. Experience in engineering gained under the supervision of a professional engineer or similarly qualified engineer, and experience in engineering gained subsequent to the attaining of an equivalent of the minimum requirements for certification as an engineer-in-training, of a grade and character satisfactory to the Board, shall be given full credit. In any case when the evidence presented in the application does not appear to the Board conclusive nor warranting the issuance of a certificate of registration or a certificate as engineer-in-training without examination, the applicant may be required to present further evidence for the consideration of the Board, and may also be required to pass an oral or written examination, or both, as the Board may determine. Whenever the Board determines otherwise than by examination that an applicant has not produced sufficient evidence to show that he is competent to assume responsible charge of the work involved in the practice of engineering, and shall refuse to examine or to register such applicant, it shall set forth in writing its findings and the reasons for its conclusions, and furnish a copy thereof to the applicant.

(g) Examinations: To prescribe the scope, manner, time, and place for the examination of applicants for registration as professional engineers, to provide for the conduct of and to conduct such examinations, and to make written reports of such examinations. The prescribed examinations shall be written, or written and oral, and designed to permit an applicant for registration as a professional engineer to take the examination in two stages. The first stage of the examination shall be designed to test the applicant's knowledge of fundamental engineering subjects, including mathematics, physical and applied sciences, properties of materials, and the principles of engineering design. Satisfactory passing of this portion of the examination shall constitute a credit for the life of the applicant or until he is registered as a professional engineer. The second stage of the examination shall be designed to test the applicant's ability to apply the principles of engineering to the actual practice of engineering in the field of engineering in which he has indicated his principal activity. An applicant failing to pass an examination may apply for reexamination at the expiration of 6 months and will be reexamined upon payment of the prescribed fee.

(h) Certificate of registration; form and execution; expiration; duplicate certificate; biennial renewal of registration; renewal fee; penalty for delayed renewal: To issue a certificate of registration and a pocket registration card to each professional engineer granted registration under the provisions of this act. The certificate of registration shall authorize the registrant to practice as a professional engineer, show the full name of the registrant, have a serial number, and be signed by the members of the Board under the seal of the Board. The pocket registration card issued with the certificate shall show the full name and registration number of the registrant, state that the person named therein has been granted registration to practice as a professional engineer for the period ending on the 31st day of October in the second year of the then current biennial registration renewal period, and be signed by the Chairman and secretary-treasurer of the Board; to provide for and regulate the renewal of registration of professional engineers registered under this act. On or before the 1st day of August 1952, and biennially thereafter, the secretary-treasurer of the Board shall mail to every professional engineer registered under this act a blank application for biennial renewal of registration, addressing such application to the last known post-office address. Upon receipt of such application blank, a registrant shall execute and return the application for his biennial registration renewal card to the Board together with the biennial registration renewal fee of $2. Upon receipt of such application and renewal fee the Board shall issue a pocket registration renewal card which shall show the full name and registration number of the registrant, be signed by the chairman and secretary-treasurer of the Board, and state that the person named therein has been granted registration to practice as a professional engineer for the period beginning November 1 in the year of issue and expiring on the 31st day of October in the second year following. Application shall be made biennially on or before the 1st day of November and if not so made an additional fee of $1 for each 30 days delay beyond the 1st day of November, and up to the 1st day of March following shall be added to the current biennial registration renewal fee to be paid upon renewal; to issue a duplicate certificate of registration to replace a certificate lost, destroyed, or mutilated, subject to the rules of the Board, and upon payment of the prescribed fee. The issuance of a certificate of registration by the Board shall be presumptive evidence in all courts and places that the person named therein is entitled to all the rights and privileges of a registered professional engineer while said certificate remains unsuspended, unrevoked, or unexpired.

(i) Certificate of registration to a noncitizen; form and execution; expiration; renewal of registration; renewal fee: To issue a special certificate of registration and pocket registration card to every noncitizen professional engineer granted registration under the provisions of this act. The special certificate of registration shall authorize the registrant to practice as a professional engineer in connection with a specific project, show the full name of the registrant, have a registration number, and be signed by the members of the Board under the seal of the Board. The special pocket registration card issued with such certificate shall show the full name and registration number of the registrant, state that the person named therein has been granted temporary registration to practice as a professional engineer, state the specific project in connection with which the special registration is granted, the period for which it is granted, not to exceed 1 year from the date of issue, and be signed by the Chairman and secretary-treasurer of the Board. Temporary registration may be renewed at the discretion of the Board for periods not in excess of 1 year upon application therefor and payment of the annual renewal fee.

(j) Certificate as engineer-in-training: To prescribe and to issue a certificate, attested by its seal and signed by the members of the Board, to any applicant who in the opinion of the Board has satisfactorily met all the requirements of this act for certification as an engineer-in-training.

(k) Roster of registrants: To keep a roster of all professional engineers registered under this act, showing the registrant's name, place of business or employment, registration number, and the general field or fields of engineering in which registrant qualified to practice, and a roster of engineers-in-training certified under this act. These rosters, together with other information deemed to be of interest to the engineering profession, shall be published in booklet form by the Board on the 1st day of March of each even year, beginning with 1952, or as soon thereafter as practicable. The Board shall also, upon the 1st day of March of each odd year, beginning with 1953, or as soon thereafter as practicable, publish a supplemental roster of all registered professional engineers and certified engineers-in-training. Such published rosters shall contain at the beginning thereof the words: "Each professional engineer receiving this roster is requested to report to the Board the names and addresses of any persons known to be engaged in the practice of engineering in the District of Columbia whose names do not appear in this roster. The names of persons giving such information shall not be divulged." Copies of these rosters shall be mailed or otherwise sent to each registered professional engineer and engineer-in-training and be furnished to other persons upon request.

(l) Official seal; minutes and records: To adopt and have an official seal, and to keep minutes and records of all its transactions and proceedings, and a complete record of the credentials of each applicant and registrant. A transcript of an entry in such minutes and records, certified by the secretary-treasurer under the seal of the Board, shall be prima facie evidence of the original entry in such minutes and records.

(m) Member of National Council of State Boards of Engineering Examiners; dues: To become a member of the National Council of State Boards of Engineering Examiners and to pay such dues as said council shall establish, and to send a delegate to the annual meeting of said council and to defray his reasonable and necessary expenses.

(n) Administrative rules and regulations; employees: To adopt, amend, rescind, promulgate, and enforce such administrative rules and regulations not inconsistent with this act, as are deemed necessary and proper by the Board to carry into effect the powers conferred by this act. To employ such clerical or other assistants as are necessary for the proper performance of its duties. The regular annual employees of the Board shall, for the purpose of laws relating to compensation, classification, retirement, and leave, be employees of the District of Columbia. The Board may at its discretion fix and change from time to time, without reference to the Classification Act of 1949, the compensation of employees of the Board employed on a temporary or part-time basis.

(o) Enforcement of laws; investigations; attendance of witnesses; production of books and papers; subpena procedure; witness fees: To enforce the provisions of this act, to investigate for unauthorized and unlawful practice, to employ such persons as it may deem necessary to assist in the investigations and prosecutions incident to enforcement, to require the attendance of witnesses and the production of books and papers, and to require such witnesses to testify as to any and all matters within its jurisdiction. The Chairman and secretary-treasurer of the Board shall have power to issue subpenas, and each shall have authority to administer oaths. Upon the failure of any person to attend as a witness, when duly subpenaed, or to produce documents when duly directed by said Board, the Board shall have power to refer the said matted to any justice of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, who may order the attendance of such witness, or the production of such documents, or require the said witness to testify, as the case may be, and upon the failure of the witness to attend, to testify, or to produce such documents, as the case may be, such witness may be punished for contempt of court as for failure to obey a subpena issued or to testify in a case pending before said court. Witnesses who have been subpenaed by the Board, and who testify if called upon, shall be paid the same fees that are paid witnesses in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

(p) Refusal, suspension, and revocation of certificates: To refuse to issue a certificate to any person, or to suspend or revoke the certificate of registration of any professional engineer or the certification of any engineer-in-training issued hereunder if such person—

(1) has been convicted of a felony;

(2) has been found guilty of deceit, misrepresentation, violation of contract, fraud, or gross incompetency, in his practice;

(3) has been found guilty of fraud or deceit in obtaining his registration or certification;

(4) has aided or abetted any person in the violation of any provision of this act;

(5) has violated any provision of this act;

(6) has been declared insane by a court of competent jurisdiction and has not thereafter been lawfully declared sane.

(q) Reissuance of revoked certificates: To reconsider the application of any person whose application has been refused or to reissue a certificate of registration to any professional engineer or a certification to any engineer-in-training whose certificate has been revoked for reasons the Board deems sufficient, upon payment of the prescribed fee for such reissuance.

SEC. 9. Complaints; hearings; proceedings; appeals: (a) The Board may upon its own motion, and shall upon the sworn complaint in writing of any person setting forth charges which would constitute grounds for refusal, suspension, or revocation of a certificate, as set forth in section 8 (p) of this act, investigate the acts of any person holding or claiming to hold a certificate. All charges, unless dismissed by the Board as unfounded or trivial, shall be heard by the Board within 3 months after the date on which they shall have been filed.

(b) The Board shall, at least 30 days prior to the date set for the hearing, notify the accused, in writing, of any charges made, and shall afford him an opportunity to be heard in person or by counsel in reference thereto. Such notice may be served by its delivery personally to the accused licensee by the United States marshal in the manner prescribed for service of original process in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, or by mailing it by registered mail with return receipt demanded, to the place of business last theretofore specified by the accused in his last notification to the Board. At the time and place fixed in the notice, the Board shall proceed to hearing of the charges and both the accused and the complainant shall be accorded ample opportunity to present in person or by counsel, such testimony, evidence, and argument as may be pertinent to the charges or to any defense thereto. The Board may continue such hearing from time to time and shall give notice in writing to all parties in interest of the date and hour to which the hearing has been continued, and the place at which it is to be held.

(c) The Board shall preserve a complete record of all proceedings at the hearing of any case wherein a certificate is refused, revoked, or suspended. The notice of hearing, complaint, and all other documents in the nature of pleadings and written motions filed in the proceedings, the transcript of testimony, and the orders of the Board shall be the record of such proceedings. The Board shall furnish a transcript of such record at cost to any person interested in such hearing.

(d) If, after completion of the hearing, the Board shall be of the opinion that the accused is guilty of the charges, or any of them, the Board shall issue an order refusing, suspending, or revoking the certificate. Such order shall be served upon the accused person either personally or by mailing it by registered mail to the address specified by the accused person in his last notification to the Board.

(e) Any person aggrieved by the action of the Board in refusing, suspending, or revoking a registration or certification or by any other action of the Board, which is alleged to be improper, unreasonable, or unlawful may appeal from such action of the Board to the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

(f) Appeals from suspension or revocation of registration and certification must be taken within 30 days after such refusal, suspension, or revocation. In the case of appeals from other actions of the Board, the appeal may be taken at any time by the person aggrieved by such action. No such action shall act as supersedeas unless specially allowed by the court.

(g) Proceedings shall be conducted according to the Rules of Civil Procedure for the United States District Courts and the appeal shall be heard by the judge or judges of the court without a jury. The court shall affirm the decision of the Board, unless it shall find the same is in violation of the constitutional rights of the appellant, or is not in accordance with law, or was made upon unlawful procedure, or that any finding of fact made by the Board and necessary to support its adjudication is not supported by substantial evidence. If the adjudication of the Board is not affirmed the court may set aside or modify it in whole or in part, or may remand the proceeding to the Board for further disposition in accordance with the order of the court.

(h) Either party may appeal from the decision of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia circuit. Any appeal on behalf of the Board may be filed without bond. The decree of the United States Court of Appeals shall be final and conclusive.

SEC. 10. Exemptions: Nothing in this act shall be construed to affect or prevent the following:

(a) The practice of engineering by any person who, within 1 year after the enactment of this act, has filed with the Board an application for registration under this act. This exemption shall continue only for such time as the Board may require for consideration of said application.

(b) The practice of engineering for not exceeding 30 days in the aggregate in one calendar year by a nonresident not having a place of business in the District of Columbia, if such person is licensed or registered to engage in the practice of engineering in a State or Territory in which the requirements and qualifications for obtaining a license or registration are reasonably equivalent to those specified in this act.

(c) The practice of engineering for more than 30 days by a nonresident not having a place of business in the District of Columbia, or by a person who has recently become a resident of or has recently entered the practice of engineering in the District of Columbia, and who has filed with the Board an application for registration, if such person is registered or licensed to engage in the practice of engineering in a State or Territory in which the requirements and qualifications for obtaining a license or registration are reasonably equivalent to those specified in this act. Such practice shall be permitted only for such time as the Board requires for the consideration of the application.

(d) The performance of engineering work by any person who acts under the supervision of a professional engineer, or by an employee of a person lawfully engaged in the practice of engineering, and who, in either event, does not assume responsible charge of design or supervision.

(e) The practice of engineering as a consultant, officer, or employee of the Government of the United States or the government of the District of Columbia while engaged solely in such practice for said Governments.

(f) The practice of any other legally recognized profession.

(g) The practice of engineering exclusively as an officer or employee of a public-utility corporation (act of Mar. 4, 1914, 37 Stat. 974, ch. 150, sec. 8, par. 1) by rendering to such corporation such service in connecting with its facilities and property which are subject to supervision with respect to safety and security thereof by the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia and so long as such person is thus actually and exclusively employed and no longer: Provided, however, That each such public-utility corporation shall employ at least one registered professional engineer who shall be in responsible charge of such engineering work.

(h) The practice of architecture by a person authorized to use the title of architect or registered architect under the provisions of the Architect's Registration Act, approved December 13, 1924, and as amended, and his doing such engineering work as is incidental to his architectural work.

(i) The construction or alteration of a building that does not cover over 1,000 square feet of ground area and does not have a height of over 20 feet to the uppermost ceiling, or two habitable floors above a basement.

(j) The execution of construction work as a contractor, or the superintendence of such construction work as a foreman or superintendent, or the work performed as a salesman of engineering equipment or apparatus.

(k) The operation or maintenance of boilers, machinery, or equipment when the operators are duly licensed under the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate steam engineers in the District of Columbia," approved February 28, 1887, as amended.

(l) The usual supervision of construction or installation of equipment within a plant under his immediate supervision by a person ordinarily designated as supervising engineer or chief engineer of power.

SEC. 11. Seal of registrants: (a) Each person registered under this act may obtain a seal of a design authorized by the Board which shall bear the registrant's name and registration number, the legend "Registered Professional Engineer," and such other words or figures as the Board may deem necessary. Such seal, or a facsimile imprint of same, shall be stamped on all plans, specifications, and reports by the registrant responsible for the accuracy and adequacy of such plans, specifications, and reports, when filed with public authorities.

(b) It shall be unlawful for a registered engineer to affix or permit his seal to be affixed to any plans, specifications, or drawings for which he does not assume full responsibility for the adequacy and accuracy thereof.

(c) It shall be unlawful for any person to use such seal during the period the registration of the holder thereof is expired, suspended, or revoked, or to use a seal of any design not approved by the Board.

SEC. 12. Display of certificate of registration: Whoever engages in the practice of engineering shall keep displayed in a conspicuous place in his established place of business the certificate of registration granted him under this act, and evidence of current renewal.

SEC. 13. Fees; payment of expenses; audit: Each application for registration as a professional engineer shall be accompanied by the appropriate prescribed application fee and the registration fee. A person desiring certification as an engineer-in-training shall pay the prescribed application fee for such certification with his application and shall pay the additional application fee and the registration fee upon filing his application for registration as a professional engineer.

Should the Board deny the issuance of a certificate of registration to any applicant, the registration fee deposited with the application shall be refunded.

The amount of the fees prescribed in this act is that fixed by the following schedule:

(a) The application fee for professional engineer with first- and second-stage examination is $20.

(b) The application fee for professional engineer without examination is $10.

(c) The application fee for engineer-in-training with examination is $7.50.

(d) The application fee for engineer-in-training without examination is $5.

(e) The application fee for professional engineer with second-stage examination is $12.50.

(f) The fee for reexamination shall be determined by the Board not to exceed $10.

(g) The registration fee for professional engineer is $5.

(h) The biennial registration renewal fee for professional engineer is $2.

(i) The fee for reissuance of a revoked certificate of engineer-in-training is $7.50.

(j) The fee for reissuance of a revoked registration certificate is $20.

(k) The fee for issuance of a duplicate certificate of registration is $5.

(l) The penalty for delinquence is $1 for each month after the date upon which the biennial renewal fee became due: Provided, however, That the total shall not exceed $4.

The secretary-treasurer of the Board shall receive and account for all money derived from the provisions of this act and shall keep such money in a separate fund to be known as "Professional engineers' fund," such fund to be disbursed only by the secretary-treasurer, upon itemized vouchers approved by the Chairman and attested by the secretary-treasurer of the Board. The secretary-treasurer shall furnish bond for the faithful discharge of his duties, in such form and amount as the Commissioners shall require. The premium on such bond shall be regarded as a proper and necessary expense of the Board. The secretary-treasurer of the Board shall receive such salary as the Commissioners shall determine, in addition to the compensation provided for in section 6. The Board may make expenditures from this fund for any purpose which, in the opinion of the Board, is reasonably necessary for the proper performance of its duties under this act: Provided, however, That such expenditures shall in no event exceed the total of receipts. It shall be the duty of the Auditor of the District of Columbia to audit annually the accounts of the Board and make a report thereof to the Commissioners. For the purpose of performance of such duty the Auditor shall have free access to the books of account, records, and papers of the Board.

SEC. 14. Penalties: Whoever shall engage or offer to engage in the practice of engineering without being registered, or exempted, as provided in this act, or by verbal claim, sign, letterhead, card, or in any other way represent himself to be a professional engineer or through the use of any title including the word "engineer" or words of like import, or any other title, imply that he is a professional engineer without being registered as provided in this act, or shall present or attempt to use as his own the registration certificate of another, or shall give any false or forged evidence of any kind to the Board, or to any member thereof, in order to obtain registration as a professional engineer, or shall use any suspended or revoked registration, or shall otherwise violate the laws relating to the practice of engineering shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

SEC. 15. Prosecutions: (a) All violations of laws relating to the practice of engineering in the District of Columbia shall be prosecuted in the municipal court for the District of Columbia by the corporation counsel. The corporation counsel shall render such other legal services as may from time to time be required by the Board.

(b) The Superintendent of the Metropolitan Police Department shall detail such members of his force as may be necessary to assist the Board in the investigations and prosecutions incident to the enforcement of this act.

(c) The corporation counsel is hereby authorized to apply for relief by injunction to restrain a person from the commission of any act which is prohibited by this act. In such proceedings it shall not be necessary for the corporation counsel to allege or prove either that an adequate remedy at law does not exist, or that substantial and irreparable damage would result, from the continued violation thereof.

SEC. 16. Annual report: The Board shall submit an annual report to the Commissioners on the first Monday in August, containing a statement of moneys received and disbursed and a summary of its official acts during the next preceding fiscal year, and recommendations for such further legislation relating to the practice of engineering as may be necessary in the public interest.

SEC. 17. Saving clause: If any section or sections, clause or clauses, of this act, or any regulations promulgated thereunder, be declared unconstitutional or invalid, that shall not invalidate any other sections or clauses of this act, or any other regulations promulgated thereunder.

SEC. 18. Repeal of conflicting legislation: All laws or parts of laws and regulations promulgated thereunder in conflict with the provisions of this act shall be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 19. This act shall take effect upon the expiration of the ninetieth day after the date of its enactment.

COMPILING AND PUBLISHING CERTAIN ORGANIZATIONAL ADJUSTMENTS BEGUN BY REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. 20

The bill (S. 3728) to implement Reorganization Plan No. 20 of 1950 by amending title 1 of the United States Code, as regards publication of the United States Statutes at Large, to provide for the publication of treaties and other international agreements between the United States of America and other countries in a separate compilation, to be known as United States Treaties and Other International Agreements, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 112 of title 1, United States Code, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"STATUTES AT LARGE; CONTENTS; ADMISSIBILITY IN EVIDENCE

"§ 112. The Administrator of General Services shall cause to be compiled, edited, indexed, and published, the United States Statutes at Large, which shall contain all the laws and concurrent resolutions enacted during each regular session of Congress; all proclamations by the President in the numbered series issued since the date of the adjournment of the regular session of Congress next preceding; and also any amendments to the Constitution of the United States proposed or ratified pursuant to article V thereof since that date, together with the certificate of the Administrator of General Services issued in compliance with the provision contained in section 205 of the Revised Statutes. In the event of an extra session of Congress, the Administrator of General Services shall cause all the laws and concurrent resolutions enacted during said extra session to be consolidated with, and published as part of, the contents of the volume for the next regular session. The United States Statutes at Large shall be legal evidence of laws, concurrent resolutions, treaties, international agreements other than treaties, proclamations by the President, and proposed or ratified amendments to the Constitution of the United States therein contained, in all the courts of the United States, the several States, and the Territories and insular possessions of the United States."

SEC. 2. Title 1, United States Code, is further amended by adding, immediately following section 112 of such title, a new section, to be designated as section 112a, as follows:

"UNITED STATES TREATIES AND OTHER INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS; CONTENTS; ADMISSIBILITY IN EVIDENCE

"§ 112a. The Secretary of State shall cause to be compiled, edited, indexed, and published, beginning as of January 1, 1950, a compilation entitled 'United States Treaties and Other International Agreements', which shall contain all treaties to which the United States is a party that have been proclaimed during each calendar year, and all international agreements other than treaties to which the United States is a party that have been signed, proclaimed, or with reference to which any other final formality has been executed, during each calendar year. The said United States Treaties and Other International Agreements shall be legal evidence of the treaties, international agreements other than treaties, and proclamations by the President of such treaties and agreements, therein contained, in all the courts of the United States, the several States, and the Territories and insular possessions of the United States."

SEC. 3. The analysis of chapter 2 of title 1, United States Code, is amended by inserting, immediately after item 112, the following:

"§ 112a. United States Treaties and Other International Agreements; contents; admissibility in evidence."

SEC. 4. Section 73 of the Printing Act of January 12, 1895, as amended, is hereby amended by adding, immediately following that part thereof (44 U. S. C. 196a) relating to the printing, binding, and distribution of the Statutes at Large, a new paragraph, as follows:

"The Public Printer shall print and, after the end of each calendar year, bind and deliver to the Superintendent of Documents a number of copies of the United States Treaties and Other International Agreements not exceeding the number of copies of the Statutes at Large required for distribution in the manner provided by law."

PROTECTION OF FUR SEALS IN PRIBILOF ISLANDS

The bill (S. 3123) to amend section 5 of the act of February 26, 1944, entitled "An act to give effect to the Provisional Fur Seal Agreement of 1942 between the United States of America and Canada; to protect the fur seals of the Pribilof Islands; and for other purposes", was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators who wish to object to a bill will please rise and address the Chair.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is to work out a better system of accounting with respect to the seals on the Pribilof Islands. The Treasury Department, the State Department, and the General Accounting Office have no objection to the proposed legislation, and it does have the approval of the Bureau of the Budget.

At the present time the accounting is made under two distinct and separate systems. This bill is to bring the accounting into one system.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, does this affect the administration of the Department of the Interior?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It affects a branch of the Department of the Interior, the Fish and Wildlife Service, which is sponsoring the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I noted that the Senator mentioned other Departments, but not the Interior Department. I was going to ask what the position of the Interior Department was with respect to the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Interior Department is very much in favor of it. The bill is sponsored by the officials of the Fish and Wildlife Service.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado whether or not he deems it of importance to place in the RECORD at this point a statement by Donald J. Chaney, chief counsel of the Fish and Wildlife Service, which was made, I understand, before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce along about June 26.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I should be very glad to have that in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY DONALD J. CHANEY, CHIEF COUNSEL, FISH AND WILDLIFE SERVICE

The fur-seal herd at the Pribilof Islands was practically extinct when the United States Government assumed direct control in 1910. It was estimated that only 130,000 fur seals remained, as compared with about 3,000,000 when the Pribilof Islands were acquired in the Alaska purchase in 1867.

Pelagic sealing, or the killing of seals at sea, without regard to age or sex, was blamed for this tragic decline. Since the vessels of several nations participated in pelagic sealing operations beyond the 3-mile limit, the situation could not be corrected except by mutual agreement of the countries concerned. Finally, when it was no longer commercially profitable to kill seals at sea, a treaty was concluded between the United States, Great Britain, Russia, and Japan which prohibited pelagic sealing. This was in 1911 and the treaty endured until 1941 when it was abrogated by Japan.

The fur-seal treaty of 1911, and enabling legislation, provided the means for management and restoration of the Pribilof herd. By carefully controlling the number, sex, and age of the animals taken for their fur, there has been remarkable progress in restoration which now may be virtually complete. Between 1910 and 1918 very few seals were killed and these primarily for food for the native inhabitants. From 1918 to 1940 the number of surplus animals available for killing increased gradually and since that time has been fairly uniform at between 60,000 and 70,000 each year. Altogether about 1,500,000 seals were killed for their fur during the past 32 years and the United States Government has profited enormously from the sale of their pelts.

Following the abrogation by Japan of the fur-seal convention of 1911, a provisional fur-seal agreement was effected by an exchange of notes between the Governments of the United States and the Dominion of Canada in 1942. By a further exchange of notes in 1947, this provisional fur-seal agreement was continued in effect until a permanent convention can be arranged for the protection of the Alaska fur-seal herd. The provisional agreement with Canada was implemented by the Fur-Seal Act of February 26, 1944, which continues much the same pattern of protection for fur seals as that accorded by previous legislation. This act also continues in effect the responsibility of the Government for the welfare of the native inhabitants of the Pribilof Islands.

Funds for the two principal activities on the Pribilof Islands, i. e., sealing and administration of the islands, are derived from two sources. Annual congressional appropriations are provided for the general administration of the islands and for the maintenance and welfare of the resident natives. The current appropriation for this purpose totals $481,300, and the pending budget for 1951 is $563,406. Proceeds from the sale of Alaska fur-seal skins provide a second source of funds for Pribilof Islands operations. The use of such funds, however, is limited by law to the payment of expenses directly attributable to the taking, processing, and selling of sealskins. These latter funds now are used in compensating the resident natives for the taking of sealskins and related activities, for equipment, supplies, and facilities essential in curing and handling the skins, and for employment of seasonal nonresident personnel. The attached table shows expenditures of appropriated funds and expenditures from receipts, as well as net receipts turned in to the Treasury. Also shown in this table are the excess of receipts over all expenditures, or, in the case of several lean years during the depression period, the excess of expenditures over receipts. In more recent years there has been a large balance after all expenditures.

The buildings, facilities, and equipment on the Pribilof Islands for the management of the fur-seal herd and the care of the natives have an inventory value of about $1,500,000. The replacement value, of course, far exceeds that figure. However, all of the buildings and facilities on the islands are in a rundown condition. Deterioration was especially bad during the 2-year period from 1942 to 1944 when the resident natives and personnel of the Service were evacuated for military reasons. Occupation of the buildings and use of equipment by the military forces also contributed to a large extent to the deterioration of facilities. Since the return of the resident natives and Service personnel to the islands in 1944, little progress has been made in rehabilitating the plant facilities and equipment, and deterioration is being accelerated now by lack of normal maintenance.

Many construction and maintenance materials were impossible to buy at any price until very recently. Now that they are available, the rising costs of essential food and clothing for the natives have made it necessary to use funds in the annual appropriations in ever greater amounts for these purposes instead of for necessary maintenance work. Additional funds were appropriated in fiscal years 1946, 1948, and 1950 to meet rising costs but the effectiveness of these increases was minimized by the time lag between submission of budget estimates and appropriation of funds due to the long sustained rise in the prices of all supplies and materials. Accentuating the effect of these factors have been the increasing scope of fur-sealing operations and the growth of the resident native population. In the 5-year period ending in 1940, the average annual take of sealskin was 6,000, whereas for the 5-year period ending in 1949 the average annual take was 70,000. From 1940 to 1949 the resident native population increased from 458 to 526.

Currently, there is a need for rehabilitation and expansion of facilities in nearly every phase of operations on the Pribilof Islands. Living accommodations for both resident natives and Service employees are totally inadequate. A number of the small four-room native dwellings are occupied by as many as 12 natives, with 5 or 6 adults sharing one bedroom. The water and sewage disposal systems are no longer adequate for these growing villages. Nearly all of the existing buildings are sorely in need of repair and all require paint to protect them and, incidentally, improve their appearance.

With funds appropriated for the purpose since 1947, some new buildings and improvements have been provided. More are needed, and 5 native homes are provided for in the 1951 appropriation before the Senate Appropriations Committee now. A long range program of rehabilitation and expansion at the Pribilofs has been prepared. This contemplates, in addition to living quarters, construction of a hospital, warehouses, cold storage space, dairy barn, greenhouses, laundry, carpenter shops, docks, stores, and recreational facilities.

The rehabilitation and expansion program can best be executed on a continuing basis because the resident natives are capable of performing the unskilled labor during slack seasons when not engaged on sealing activities. Although some skilled laborers must be provided on the Islands in supervisory positions, the total labor cost of the rehabilitation and expansion program can be kept to a minimum by carefully scheduling the construction work to be undertaken each year. The total cost of the rehabilitation program is about one million dollars, or less than the net receipts from Pribilof operations for one year.

The purpose of S. 3123 is to provide comprehensive legislative authority for the appropriation of funds for the effective administration of the Pribilof Islands and their resources. The act of February 26, 1944 outlines in some detail functions relating to the provisions of the fur-seal herd, the maintenance and care of the natives, the international obligations of the United States in the management of the fur-seal herd, and the utilization and disposition of the skins of fur seals. However, all of these provisions emphasize primarily the utilization and sale of the skins of fur seals alone and give little, if any, consideration or authorization for the development and utilization of other by-products of the sealing operations or to the development and utilization of other fur resources existing on the Islands.

The amendment also would authorize the use of the proceeds from the sale of fur-seal skins, and of other products of the wildlife resources of the islands, to finance all of the activities contemplated by the act and thus would permit the resources themselves to pay the costs of their management, as well as those costs involved in the maintenance and care of the native inhabitants of the Pribilof Islands and the carrying out of related functions. Under existing law the proceeds from the sales of fur-seal skins may be utilized for the payment of all expenses incurred in connection with the taking of the skins and their processing and sale, but not for any other purpose. Likewise the proceeds of sales cannot be used for the development and utilization of other by-products of sealing operations, such as seal oil and meal, or the development of the potentiality valuable blue fox resource.

The United States clearly has, and the 1944 act clearly recognizes, an obligation to properly maintain and care for the native inhabitants of the Pribilof Islands, whose ancestors were established on the Islands by the Russian Government primarily to provide the manpower essential to successful sealing operations. Any opportunity for the native inhabitants of this isolated area to become completely self-supporting, of course, is extremely difficult to perfect, and for this reason annual appropriations must provide for sustenance, comfort, education, and medical care at least to the extent such necessities of life cannot be "earned" in sealing and other limited activities. At the same time it has been demonstrated that the taking, processing, and sale of skins of the fur seals is not the only activity on the islands that can produce both employment for the natives and increasing returns to the United States. In recent years the establishment of a byproducts plant for the production of both seal oil and seal meals, for which there is great demand, has proved to be a highly successful operation. That operation of necessity is governed directly by the annual take of seals for their skins, and in turn adds to the total revenue accruing from the proper management and utilization of the fur-seal herd. It seems logical then that such operation should be financed adequately and if possible enlarged in the same manner as those directly concerned with the taking, processing, and selling of the fur-seal skins.

Although not directly related to fur-seal operations, effective development and utilization of the only other commercially valuable wildlife resource to be found on the islands, the blue fox presents problems of management comparable to those employed so successfully with respect to the fur-seal herd. This, coupled with the necessity of providing every possible opportunity for employment, indicates the desirability of treating this resource in a similar manner.

Thus this bill provides an economical and businesslike way of handling all Service activities relating to the Pribilof Islands, including, management of the fur-seal herd, fox herd, operation of the byproducts plant, and care of the natives. In many ways it is similar to existing legislation which authorizes the use for specific purposes of duck stamp funds and receipts from excise taxes on firearms and ammunition. The activities supported by these funds have benefited materially from such authorization and I am confident that our Pribilof operations would be likewise benefited.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I have in my hand also a table showing expenditures and net receipts from the Pribilof Islands fur-seal and fox industries, Fish and Wildlife Service, for the fiscal years 1918 to 1949. Does the Senator think it would be of importance to insert that table?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. If the Senator will insert it at this point, I shall be deeply indebted to him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[2] Preliminary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of the act of February 26, 1944 (58 Stat. 100), is amended by deleting the last clause reading "and the proceeds of such sale shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "and the proceeds of such sales and of the sales of other products of the wildlife resources of the Pribilof Islands shall be deposited into the Treasury. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually an amount, not exceeding the total proceeds of such sales covered into the Treasury during the preceding fiscal year, for the purposes of this act and for the development of the fur seal and other wildlife resources of the Pribilof Islands and the proper utilization of their products."

INCLUSION OF SOUTH PARKERSBURG, W. VA., IN PARKERSBURG FOR CENSUS PURPOSES

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 461) to provide that South Parkersburg, W. Va., shall for the purposes of the seventeenth decennial census be treated as a part of Parkersburg, W. Va., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAURENCE A. STEINHARDT, LATE AMBASSADOR TO CANADA

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 276) expressing praise of the services of the late Ambassador to Canada, Hon. Laurence A. Steinhardt, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the services to his country of the late Ambassador to Canada, Hon. Laurence A. Steinhardt, were of a high and devoted order and that he died in the line of duty; be it further

Resolved, That the Senate hereby expresses its high praise of his sacrifice and recognizes that his skill and courage in the administration of his difficult responsibilities reflected great credit to himself and to the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate transmit a copy of these resolutions to the family of the late Ambassador.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, on May 17, I submitted the pending resolution to honor Ambassador Laurence A. Steinhardt, whose tragic death on March 29, 1950, was a source of deep sorrow to his many friends and a great loss to his country.

Ambassador Steinhardt, through his many years of experience as representative of the American Government in Sweden, then in Peru, in Moscow, in Turkey, and finally in Canada, became one of the most widely experienced diplomats in our Foreign Service. He was called upon time and time again to handle situations which demanded not only the good judgment and the capacity for hard work which he constantly displayed, but an ability to maneuver wisely at taut and critical moments.

Few men have been called upon so frequently to deal with crises of such major importance to this country. At the time he was our Ambassador in Russia, Molotov and Von Ribbentrop were negotiating secretly to divide the spoils of a European war. While he was representing us in Turkey, pressures were being exerted on that country by both the Allies and the Axis to obtain the allegiance and support of that country. Ambassador Steinhardt was still in Turkey when Soviet manuevers in that area led to the enunciation of the Truman doctrine. He was then appointed our Ambassador to Czechoslovakia and held that post when the Communists staged, in that former haven of democracy, their infamous coup of 1948.

After holding posts under constant pressure and tension for many years, Ambassador Steinhardt was appointed, in August 1948, to represent our country in Canada. While helping to cement the friendship which has existed for many years between Canada and the United States, he was at last given the opportunity to work in an atmosphere of good will. Unfortunately, however, Ambassador Steinhardt had less than 2 years in which to serve at this pleasant task. The plane which was to carry him back to his post on March 29, carried him instead to his death.

No military hero to whom honors are awarded for supreme sacrifice in the line of duty could give more than Ambassador Steinhardt gave. We can never adequately recompense him, but we can formally acknowledge our gratitude by passing this resolution in praise of his skill, courage and sacrifice.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, relative to the resolution which was offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN], I would not want the occasion to pass without rising on this side of the aisle and endorsing the statement which has been made by the Senator from New York. It happened to have been my privilege to be in Czechoslovakia in 1947, and to stay with Ambassador Steinhardt and his family at the American Embassy there. I know that he had a long and distinguished career in the service of his country, and his death in an airplane accident while Ambassador to Canada is a loss which this country could little afford to sustain. I join as a Member on this side of the aisle in paying this tribute to the late United States Ambassador Laurence A. Steinhardt.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I wish to add a word to what has been said by the distinguished Senators from New York and California, because I, too, had the privilege in 1947 of staying with the Ambassador in Czechoslovakia, and of being very familiar with the wonderful job he did for his country in the different assignments he had. I am glad to be identified with this resolution which is so well deserved and so properly proposed to the memory of a man who has done so much for his country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By acclamation the resolution is adopted.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 2887) to amend the Architects' Registration Act for the District of Columbia in order to safeguard life, health, and property, and to promote the public welfare, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I object, and ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 49) to enable the people of Hawaii to form a constitution and State government and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States was announced as next in order.

Mr. ELLENDER. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 331) to provide for the admission of Alaska into the Union was announced as next in order.

Mr. ELLENDER. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

INCREASE OF UNITED STATES SHARE OF COST OF LAND ACQUISITION FOR AIRPORTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1281) to amend the Federal Airport Act so as to make the United States share of costs for land acquisition the same as for other project costs.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 10 of the Federal Airport Act is amended by striking out all of subsection (d) thereof.

Mr. TAFT. May we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, the present ratio between the Federal Government and local governments in the purchase of airports is now as follows: The Federal Government is expected not to contribute more than 25 percent of the cost of the land. It does participate to a greater extent in the cost of improvements on the land. The bill would permit the Federal Government to participate to the extent of 50 percent, ordinarily, and in public land States slightly more, and in Alaska and the Virgin Island the Government could contribute 75 percent.

In the airport program the site is extremely important. It is thought that if the CAA is given an opportunity to contribute more money to the purchase of the site they can save money on the improvement of the site. The CA is very anxious that the bill be passed, as are the local agencies and local governments. It does not provide for more money. All the money that is to be spent under the bill is already authorized and will be appropriated from time to time on recommendation of the Appropriations Committees. It does not increase the appropriations. It merely permits a greater percentage of Federal money in the purchase of lands to be used for airports.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement concerning the bill.

There being no objection, Mr. McCARRAN's statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR McCARRAN

At the present time under the Federal Airport Act the United States pays 50 percent of the costs of an airport project except the costs of land acquisition, and with respect to the costs of land acquisition the Federal share is 25 percent.

This bill would treat the costs of necessary land acquisition the same as other costs, in computing the Federal share.

The bill has been recommended by the American Municipal Association and the National Association of State Aviation Officials, and has been approved by the Department of Commerce, by letter under date of June 9, 1949.

Enactment of this legislation would eliminate three difficulties which the CAA has experienced in administering the Federal airport program, and which are attributable to the present limitation on the Federal share of land costs. These are, as the report of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee points out: First, the difficulty of obtaining satisfactory sponsorship of all necessary projects, because some sponsors are unable to pay three-fourths of the cost of acquiring land; second, the fact that sponsors will often pick a second best or third best site, because it is cheaper, in preference to a site which might be more suited aeronautically for the development of the airport, and might actually be much less expensive to develop; and, thirdly, the apparent fact that the existing limitation discourages the acquisition by project sponsors of enough land.

There is still another factor, which has not been mentioned in the committee report. This is the desire of the Civil Aeronautics Administration to provide greater safety by making certain that no tall structures will be erected in the near vicinity of airports. The means for doing this exists by the provision of the law which permits the acquisition of easements in air space, where needed for air safety; but the acquisition of such easements is technically a land cost, and airport sponsors are naturally reluctant to assent to the acquisition of any such easements when they, the sponsors, will have to pay 75 percent of the cost.

At the present time, in the case of public-lands States, the maximum Federal share of an airport development is fixed by application of a formula, depending upon the percentage of publicly owned land in the State. The percentage thus arrived at fluctuates from 51.39 percent to 62.5 percent. If the bill S. 1281 should pass in its present form, the Federal share of land costs could also be increased in accordance with this formula. An amendment has been prepared which would have the effect of eliminating the application of this formula to land costs. If this amendment should be adopted, the Federal share with regard to costs of land acquisition would be 50 percent in all States, regardless of whether or not the State in question is a public-land State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 1281) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACQUISITION OF LAND ADJACENT TO BLAIR HOUSE IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7219) to authorize acquisition by the Administrator of General Services of certain land and the improvements thereon in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?
